"Lead us not into temptation." When the Lord came to this part of the prayer, His mind must have referred to that time when He, Himself, was led into the wilderness to be tempted by the devil, and knowing how prone to evil is man, and being "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," embodied this petition in the prayer. We have not only the privilege of praying not to be led into temptation, but we are assured that "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation."

"Deliver us from evil," preserve us from trouble, grief or sorrow, "for Thine is the Kingdom," and the prince of darkness shall not overcome us. How sweet were the words of Jesus when He said "Fear not, little flock, for it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." The power is God's "For He worketh in you to will and to do of His good pleasure." The glory is God's. "For by grace are ye saved through faith, not of works, lest any man should boast." Thus are we taught to pray by the Lord Jesus, and as plain as the instruction seems, "We know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groaning which cannot be uttered." Romans viii, 26.

The Christian is helped in all his efforts to live a Christ-like life. The word of God is his guide, full of promises and consolation, but the best of all is the way of prayer. Only think of the great cloud of prayer, always ascending from God's children like the smoke from some great altar. "And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all the saints * * * and the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." Rev. viii, 23.

"Praise the Lord, O my Soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name."

SKEPTICISM.

It is better to believe everything a man says than to believe nothing. The crucial test comes and the true things accepted on faith will greatly aid you in life's battles in time. Believe everything rather than reject everything.

Johnson's Chill and Fever Tonic is the greatest Fever medicine and Life Saver in the whole world. If you believe this and accept it as a truth, you will be the immense gainer thereby, and if you doubt it and wholly reject it you may be the loser to the extent of your very life.

We will send 2 bottles to any reader of this paper on these terms:—If the two bottles cure two cases of Fever, send us $1. If they do not do all we claim, send us nothing. We take the risk. THE JOHNSON'S CHILL AND FEVER TONIC CO., SAVANNAH, GA.

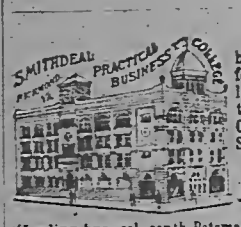
EUGENE HALBERT DAVIS, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs A. C. Davis, was born at Wilderville, Texas, March 11, 1885, and departed this life at his father's home at Terry, Miss., June 7, 1906. Eugene was a good boy. All who knew him loved him. Consumption fastened its deadly grip on him several months ago, and all that could be done for his relief was done. Though he knew the nature of the disease, yet he was always confident of getting well. This writer visited him frequently during his illness and more than once we discussed the question of personal salvation. In the presence of other witnesses he assured me that there was no cloud between him and God, and that he had the consciousness that he was saved, and in company with him we felt it, too, that Christ was with him.

Too many good things would be hard to say about him. Those who knew him, know that these things are true. Our sympathies are extended to the heart-broken family.



J. E. GRAY.

Little NANCY BYRD SIMMONS was born Dec. 4, 1896; and departed this life April 23, 1906. Birdie, as she was familiarly called, was a sweet child. While she had not attached herself to the church, we have every reason to believe that she was a little Christian, and is now beholding the face of her Father in heaven. She leaves a devoted father and mother, two brothers, two sisters and many friends to mourn their loss, but her eternal gain. Four other little sisters preceded little Birdie to the sweet by-and-by. So we say to papa and mamma, brothers and sisters, do not weep, the blessed Savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Think what a beautiful boquet the Savior has plucked from his flower garden, which will be kept beautiful and bright and returned to you at the celestial gate of the city of God. Live right, dear ones; ever walk in the foot-steps of Jesus, that may be accounted worthy to enter through the gate into the Holy City, where God will wipe all tears from our eyes, and sad partings come no more.

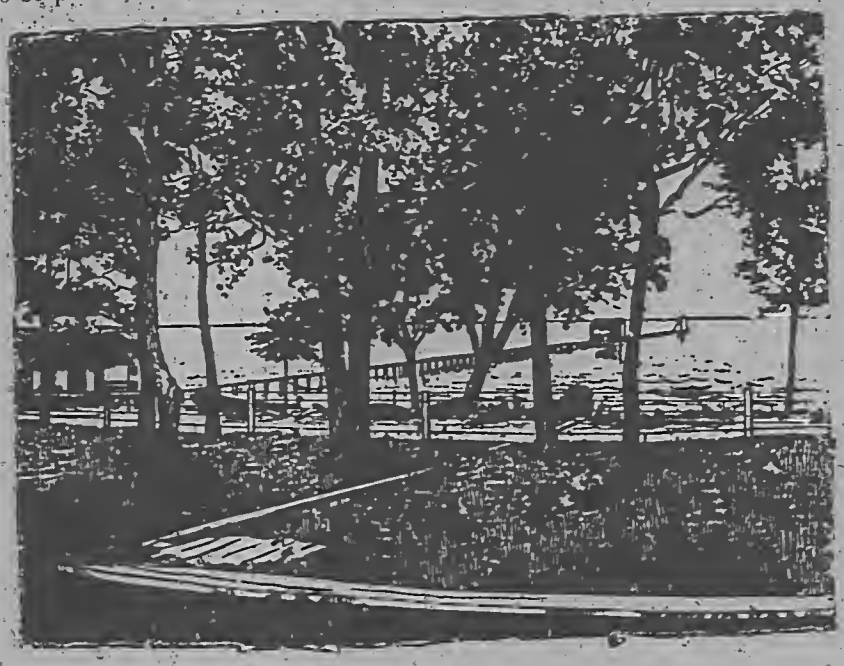
35th Annual Camp Meeting,

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND, JULY 11-19.



The management announce the Thirty-fifth Annual Camp Meeting, Seashore Camp Grounds, commencing Wednesday, July 11, and continuing until about July 20. The cottages and grounds have been put in thorough order, and other improvements made, looking to the comfort and convenience of those who attend this meeting.

The religious services are under the direction of the Presiding Elders of the New Orleans, Seashore and Mobile District Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and these brethren will be assisted by the best preaching talent that can be obtained. It is hoped that one or two of the Bishops will be present; in all probability Bishop Candler.

Preaching under the Tabernacle Grove, Grove and Cottage Prayer Meetings, and other religious services, will be held during each day and evening, to which all persons on the grounds are not only cordially invited, but are expected to attend.

Seashore Epworth League Assembly, July 25 to Aug. 5.

The Seashore Annual Epworth League Assembly will be held on the Seashore Camp Grounds, commencing Wednesday, July 25, and continuing until Aug. 5. Great good has been accomplished by these meetings from year to year, and it is expected that the meeting of this year will yield larger results than yet attained. All Leaguers, young people and others interested, are earnestly and cordially invited to be present, and share in the glorious results.

RAILROAD RATES.

The Louisville and Nashville, and connections within a radius of about 400 miles, will sell round-trip tickets to Seashore Camp Ground (Biloxi) at greatly reduced rates. For detailed information apply to your railroad agent.

LOCATION.

The Seashore Camp Ground is located on the Mississippi Sound, seventy-nine miles from New Orleans and sixty-two miles from Mobile, on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and is one of the most beautiful places on the Gulf Coast. It enjoys a railroad service that is unexcelled for comfort and convenience. A magnificent artesian well furnishes cool and life-giving water from a depth of many hundred feet, and by a perfect system of water works the cottages and hotel are furnished with this water direct from the well. The hotel has a frontage of one hundred and sixty feet on the beach. A multitude of magnificent shade trees temper the noon-day sun, and at night numerous electric lights dispel the darkness and illuminate the roads and pathways that intersect the Grounds. A new pier twelve hundred and forty feet in length, with a Summer house on the end, extends out into the Gulf, and offers positively the most delightful advantages in the South for a promenade. The bathing is unexcelled by any other point on the gulf. All parties residing on the grounds have the privilege of the bath-houses. Good board can be secured at the restaurant, which is in charge of a competent chef; and in private houses at reasonable rates. The comforts and conveniences of all visitors will be carefully looked after.

All Methodist preachers will be admitted into the Grounds, and provided with board and lodging free of charge during Camp Meeting.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before the rush of opening of Camp Meeting should address communications to R. G. Price, Keeper Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., or any of the undersigned officers.

NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

WHOLE NO. 5304. "PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD." VOL. 53—No. 29

A PLEA FOR A MORE POLEMICAL PRESS AND PULPIT.

At the outset, I disclaim being in favor of the renewal, among evangelical Christians, of the controversies of past generations regarding their differences in doctrines and ecclesiastical policies. But, leaving these matters at rest, as we find them, there are, as I am convinced, urgent calls in other directions for vigorous polemical utterances. Either we must take the position that the doctrines of Christianity are matters of indifference, or else we must expound and defend them as best we may. With those who believe that the promise "to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines, contrary to God's word" is more honored in the breach than the observance, my plea can have but little weight.

But, says one, such discussions are profitless and vain. This I do not believe. With competent and conscientious preachers, writers and editors to carry on this work, why should it prove to be profitless? Is there not too much timidity among us? Discussion, free discussion, full discussion is the very life of thought and progress. Are many of our sermons dull? If so, it is largely because we do not set ourselves earnestly and fearlessly to expound and maintain what we believe to be the truth. I contend that those who frown down discussions in pulpit and press assume an immense responsibility. I am convinced that evangelical Christianity has some hard battles to fight during this and some succeeding decades. A very determined conflict is on us, and without our seeking. Just now there is a vigorous advocacy, there is an alert propagation of views that we regard as false.

Consider this fact. Some days ago I came across eight or ten new theological books on our library shelves here at Millsaps College. On inspection, I found that the authors were Unitarians, and that the object of the books was to defend and propagate that creed. The librarian's label showed that they had all been presented by one man, who, perhaps as the agent of his church, is doubtless sending these books where it is hoped by them, young men will be brought to accept the views therein advocated. Now, if the Unitarians are thus active and aggressive, will it do for us to be indifferent?

Consider another fact. Many of the popular periodicals of the day take large interest in what they call liberal religious thought. If the contentions of some of these periodicals are made good by them the evangelical churches will have to surrender many of the doctrines hitherto considered to be of prime importance. If anyone is disposed to say that there are no live issues in the religious thought of the day, let him read The Outlook, The Independent, The Literary Digest and other popular periodicals that might be named. Such periodicals already have a large hearing and are doubtless, from year to year, extending their influence, for they are meritorious and stimulating publications. Will our denominational editors and writers continue to listen, but say nothing? For my part, I esteem highly the editor and paper that do not neglect these matters, and so I will always feel very grateful to Dr. Buckley and the New York Christian Advocate for most valuable service in this regard. But I would be very sorry to think that, because of the absence of an adequate literature of this sort at home, we will always have to depend upon other sections for our supply. I think that the chief reason why the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has not a creditable literature covering these important matters is because such discussions have been frowned down, especially by our editors and other men of commanding influence in the church. Moreover, I believe that one reason for their taking this position is because they underrate the intelligence and mental force of those who compose the rank and file of our church.

If the above contentions are just, is it not time we were having a change of front in this whole matter?

THE METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

In May, 1904, "The Missionary Training School" was inaugurated by the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Two mid-winter terms have been conducted with an enrollment in both of one hundred and thirty-seven students. During the past year over fifty thousand missionary booklets were circulated. The General Conference at Birmingham endorsed the enterprise by authorizing the permanent establishment of the School under the auspices of the Board of Missions. In pursuance of this action the School has been reorganized as a connectional institution. The new name which has been adopted is "The Methodist Training School for Christian Workers."

The scope of the School as now organized is: first, to conduct annually a nine month's session for the purpose of training Christian workers of both sexes; second, to hold a Preacher's Institute each year for the benefit of pastors and missionary workers who are actively engaged in Christian service; and, third, to develop a Bureau of Missions for the purpose of collecting and disseminating information on social, religious and missionary subjects; especially by developing a permanent Educational Missionary Exhibit, where ministers and other students may come from time to time for study and investigation.

The next session of the School will open September 19, 1906, and close June 19, 1907. The nine months' session is divided into three terms, which are approximately three months each, so that a student may take one, two or three terms a year and get credit for the work done. The School will aim to give thorough and practical training to missionaries and other Christian workers for definite spheres of service in the church. The constant object of the teachers will be to develop skill in the performance of Christian service, rather than to store the mind with book knowledge.

The doors of the School will be open to all missionaries, preachers, and other Christian workers of both sexes. Special advantages will be offered young women who desire training for city, home and foreign missions.

Further information can be secured by writing the Superintendent, Jas. E. McCulloch, 422 Sixth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

THE CALIFORNIA SUFFERERS.

We are requested by Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Secretary of the Board of Missions, to "write a brief editorial urging immediate collections by the pastors for the benefit of the California earthquake sufferers." Dr. Lambuth says: "Our brethren in California are in great need, and the Church at large should require no further urging, but come quickly and liberally to their relief."

In answer to his call of the Mission Board for $25,000, endorsed by the College of Bishops, only about half the amount has been received. We hope our pastors who have not already responded to the cali will at once take up collections, and forward the money to Dr. Lambuth at Nashville. Many of our members in California are houseless and homeless, and churchless. It is more than some of them can do to put a shelter over their heads. The Church at large is bound by every consideration to help them rebuild their houses of worship. Liberal-hearted men and women, who have means, need not wait for their pastor to take a collection. They can send a check right away. No matter how small the amount, let it go forward at once. "The King's business requires haste."

Glances at the World.

President Roosevelt has again signified his determination not to become a candidate for the Presidency. We dare say he is sincere, but the time is long between this and the day for the nomination, and though there are several aspirants in Mr. Roosevelt's party, and one particularly who sees things about like the President does, it is certain that not one of them is as popular as he, and the probability is that his party will nominate him in spite of his expressed determination. The Democrats are surely turning to Mr. Bryan as their leader. Prominent men, heretofore violently opposed to him, are now favoring his nomination. Several State conventions have already endorsed him. He is, without any doubt, the most popular man in the party. And what is better, he is an honest, upright, Christian statesman. But Mr. Bryan says it is too soon to take the matter of being a candidate "under consideration."

The long-drawn-out controversy in regard to the type of canal to be dug across the Isthmus of Panama is at last settled—permanently we suppose. At least, Congress has voted on the question, both houses, in accordance with the wishes of the President, voting for the lock system. Mr. Roosevelt's expressed preference, doubtless, had something to do in determining the type—especially in the Senate, that body, as was well known, having formerly been in favor of a sea-level way. And it appears after all that the strength of the argument was on Mr. Roosevelt's side. It was argued that though the sea-level canal would in every way be preferable, it would require a much longer time to construct and cost many more millions of money. Mr. Roosevelt had another argument on his side, viz. that a literal sea-level could not be constructed, the difference between the elevation of the two oceans being such as to require locks and dams, no matter what the type of canal. So the lock system was adopted, and it remains now for those in charge of the business to go to work and "make the dirt fly." Nothing but quick movements and positive results will satisfy the people who are interested in this great waterway.

The strong influence of the moral forces of the country are still felt. Public officers heed it when properly exerted, except in cases where officers hope to reap reward of some kind by pandering to the vicious classes. One of several instances we may mention. In New York brutal prize-fights were in progress contrary to the law of the State. The police authorities failed to stop the shows, whereupon there was made an appeal to the Governor direct by the Methodist ministers of New York and Brooklyn, and the Law Enforcement Society. The Governor heard the appeal and immediately issued an order to the sheriffs of New York and Kings Counties to "stop the fights," and they were stopped without the necessity of making any arrests. This demonstrates the majesty of the law. It will always be thus when men of courage, who respect law and their oath of office, undertake to do their duty. There is no reason why any man anywhere who is charged with the enforcement of the law should fail. In the majority of cases when there is failure, the officers of the law are to blame. The Methodist Preachers' Meeting passed a resolution heartily thanking the Governor for enforcing the law against the prize-fighters.

What is called the "packing house scandals" are well known to the whole country. The disclosures aroused President Roosevelt, and he at once determined on a course of action. He made the facts known in a special message to Congress and asked for legislation. In compliance with the request we have the "meat inspection bill" which is to go into effect some time in August. The bill not only call for the inspection of cattle, hogs, sheep and goats, before slaughtering to determine whether or not they are diseased, but also after they are killed and dressed. The main complaint was against the sausage and canned goods departments of the packing houses. It was charged that these meats were put up in an unclean way, and from unfit parts—the packers resorting to preservatives to make their products palatable. The testimony before Congress clearly justified the charge of General Miles, made years ago, to the effect that the army was being supplied with "embalmed beef." If the present law is put into the hands of competent inspectors, and faithfully enforced, the public in future may be reasonably assured that clean and wholesome meat is being furnished. Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, is now preparing to carry the law into effect.

The great northwest, on which the country principally depends for bread, is rejoicing in a record-breaking crop of wheat, with the prospect before it of a crop of corn quite the equal of any ever produced. This good news makes the whole land glad. Governor Hoch, of Kansas, has issued an appeal for "eight thousand men to help reap the wheat crop to save it from damage." The Weekly Inter-Ocean, of Chicago, by way of illustrating the vastness of the yield in Kansas, has a cartoon representing farm houses in the midst of a growth of wheat so high and dense as to hide all the houses save the gables and the roofs with Governor Hoch on top of the dwelling house looking out in perfect amazement, and a lusty old farmer on top of another building with his hat thrown to the wind and his arms raised shouting at the top of his voice. A goose also has taken refuge on a house top, and like the Governor, looks down in wonder on the golden grain. The rising sun in the distance smiles on the scene. The crop on hand, called the winter wheat production, will reach the immense quantity of 420,000,000 bushels. This is 90,000,000 bushels above last year's crop. Kansas leads with 72,000,000 bushels, almost double the state yielding the next highest amount. Some states have doubled the yield of last year, some about the same amount. Only one state has fallen behind. Surely the people have cause for gratitude.

The Government is vigorously waging war on corporations, trusts, monopolies, etc., that have combined in restraint of trade, and are otherwise engaged in violating the laws of the land. State executives are also successfully prosecuting offenders. Arkansas has tried and convicted one trust and mulcted it in the sum of $15,000, and costs. The Attorney General of Missouri had before him as a witness one of the magnates of the Standard Oil Company, who proved to be the most stubborn and defiant witness ever before a court. But the decision of the Supreme Judges of the State, to whom the Attorney General appealed, "tamed" the witness, and he answered questions meekly enough. The court triumphed. The General Government, in trying railroad authorities for granting rebates, has succeeded, and has also secured the conviction of packers, several of whom were fined heavily—one or two as high as $20,000, and two were both fined and sentenced to prison. Never in the history of our country has there been such a shaking up of corporations, and exposures of wrong doing. It is all in the interest of the people. With the enforcement of the railroad rate regulation bill, and the meat inspection bill, and the correction of evils growing out of corporation monopoly and greed, we may expect the people to breathe easier, and have a better chance in the race for life.

RULEVILLE, MISS.

This writer is grateful to Rev. John Ritchey, the pastor, for the privilege of a visit to this very nice town, and association with this good people in a revival meetings. A ride of three hours on a "yaller dog" in the middle of a hot June day, with the accommodations of a caboose, and no dining privileges, gave a peculiar intensity to one's feelings. In such condition, I entered that hospitable home of Charlie Wilson, and received such a cordial welcome, with substantial and elegant entertainment, that I fell in love with the people at sight.

I like the business way those Delta people do things. They come out to church like they meant what they were doing. Those who did not attend were frank enough to say they had something else they felt bound to do.

I was impressed with the industry, applications and manliness of the many young men whom I met. They are the choice boys from the hills who mean to do something in life. The young ladies showed such traits of womanliness, that we thanked God for the priceless virtues of Christian women. Most of these have had training in school at Grenada College, Blue Mountain, or L. F. and C., and are doing honor to these institutions, by displaying and applying the beauty and power of consecrated lives.

The meeting was a good one, several joined the Church, and many others renewed their covenant with God and started out for a life of service.

Brother Ritchey is in high favor with his people, and attracts large audiences to hear him preach. We want to go back to Ruleville.

ASHEVILLE CONFERENCE.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

It would be impossible in the brief space of a few columns to give any adequate conception of the great work of the Missionary Conference held at Kenilworth Inn, Asheville, N. C., June 29 to July 8.

The place of meeting was an inspiration within itself. Kenilworth Inn was erected at a cost of $400,000. It is located on a beautiful plateau of 60 acres, 2500 feet above the level of the sea, overlooking the French Broad and Swannanoa rivers. To the south of it at only a short distance may be seen the estate of Mr. George Vanderbilt, with its thousands of acres laid out in farms and drives and forests.

The Young People's Missionary Movement is a unique organization, and is one of the powerful factors in bringing about the evangelization of the world in this generation. It is an interdenominational movement. Into this Conference young leaders from all the denominations and from all the states in our Southland are brought together for study and consecration of life. "The Conference is intended as an annual council meeting, a clearing-house of facts and ideas, a school of methods and a dynamo of inspiration for both foreign and home mission workers, where each labors for all, and all serve each."

The attendance of the Conference was about 250, the Presbyterians numbering about 115 and the Methodists about 100. From Louisiana there were three Episcopalians, two Presbyterians and nine Methodists. Mississippi also had several present.

The Conference lasted ten days, and each day was a busy one. The programme of each day ran something like this: First came "family prayers," the whole body meeting together for a few minutes of worship. Following this came the study class. The whole student body was divided into two classes, each individual going into the class of his choice to study either Home or Foreign missions. Rev. W. H. Means, of Winchester, Mass., had charge of the Home Mission Study, taking as his subject "Immigration." Those studying Foreign Missions were divided into four classes, subject: "The Christian Conquest of India," by Bishop Thoburn. All classes were taught by expert teachers. The second hour of the morning was given to institute work in the Young People's Societies and in the Sunday-school. The interchange of experience gave light on many a dark place and was helpful indeed. The third hour was devoted to platform addresses, generally from returned missionaries, always from men of large vision and large service. The afternoon was given to pleasure and recreation. There were two classes for Bible study that met every night for one hour, conducted by Drs. Phillips and Lilly. The Methodists among the leaders of the Conference were Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions; Dr. John E. Goucher, President of the Woman's College of Baltimore; Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Dr. F. S. Parker, Assistant Editor of the Epworth Era; Dr. Young J. Allen, of China; Dr. S. H. Wainright, of Japan, and Rev. J. L. Kennedy, of Brazil.

The last hour of the day was given to stirring appeals from the platform. Bishop Hendrix's sermon Sunday morning was profound, yet simple—was learned, was spiritual, was preached with great power. His text was: "The Son of Man hath authority on earth to forgive sins."

There were in all over thirty volunteers at the Conference. Several volunteered during the Conference for work in the foreign fields, and there were scores of preachers and leaders who received a new vision of the work at home, its needs and its possibilities, who felt as never before their responsibility for the conversion of the world, their obligation to their brethren beyond the sea.

The days of the old-time "love feast" are not past. "Largeness of vision, boldness of plan, strength of faith and depth of prayer-life" must be the recognized benefits which have accrued to the delegates of the Asheville Summer Conference, and we pray God that the whole Church may be blessed by it.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference was held in the handsome auditorium of the Methodist Church, at Canton, Miss., June 20-22, 1906, the Presiding Elder, Rev. A. F. Watkins, D.D., presiding.

With three exceptions, all the pastors of the District were in attendance upon the Conference, the lay representation making at the same time an unusually good showing.

The tone of the Conference was optimistic, without a discordant note. The pastors' reports from the various fields indicate marked progress in the way of material growth, with no evidence of a slothful "ease in Zion." Meetings for evangelistic ends are being held and planned throughout the bounds of the District. Missionary territory which, owing to the phenomenal material development of our section of the country, is constantly being discovered, was brought to light through the vigilance of pastors here and there, the conditions discussed and plans suggested for supplying such territory with the Gospel.

In one instance the Church and especially the pastor had suffered loss in the burning of the parsonage; but Brother Nicholson, the suffering pastor, true soldier of the cross that he is, was not discouraged, but hopeful and trustful. Brother Nicholson suffered the loss of his library in the fire, and he would, no doubt, be very grateful for any contribution in cash or in a good book, helping him in some measure to restore the loss.

The routine business of the Conference was happily interspersed with places on the program for the W. H. M. and the W. F. M. Societies to give account of their respective work. In the first instance Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Conference Corresponding Secretary, addressed the Conference, telling of what had been accomplished and making an earnest appeal for increased interest in the work the Home Mission Society is doing. Then Miss Minnie Ewing, District Corresponding Secretary, reviewed the work of the Home Mission Society and urged the sympathy and co-operation of pastors in organizing and maintaining auxiliary societies.

Mrs. A. F. Watkins, President of the Conference W. F. M. Society, showed a very gratifying increase of interest and growth of activity in the work of the Society which she represents. In concluding her address, Mrs. Watkins offered statistics to show that in our woman's work we are not yet abreast with some other sections of the church, notably the South Georgia and North Georgia Conferences, in zeal and activity in the fields of the heathen world. However, plans are mature and are being put into execution under the leadership of Mrs. Watkins, which it is confidently expected will bring our Conference by rapid strides to the foremost in this phase of Christian service.

The Conference was fortunate in securing Dr. Young J. Allen, our veteran missionary to China, for an evening and a morning hour. His life, his labors and their fruition are a monumental testimony to the value of Christian missions. It is an inspiration to see and to hear one so thoroughly conversant with the conditions, needs and progress in that great Eastern Empire hitherto without hope and without God in the world.

Rev. O. A. Oats, Manager of our Orphans' Home at Jackson, was present and presented the condition and the needs of the Home, calling attention to certain demands that were urgent, and reminding his hearers of the ever present necessity for food and clothes to make comfortable one hundred and five children.

Rev. Henry F. Carley, Conference League Organizer, favored the Conference with his presence and a stirring appeal in behalf of the young people of the church, with special reference to the Epworth League.

Dr. Murrah delivered one of his characteristically strong sermons on Christian education, making special application thereof to Millsaps College. Dr. Sullivan also addressed the Conference in behalf of the College.

Several visiting brethren favored the Conference with their presence, viz., Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of Brookhaven District; Rev. G. W. Bachman, colporter for the North Mississippi Conference; and Rev. W. A. Terry, of the Washington Street Church, Vicksburg.

Two young men, William Pleasant Sandifer and Wayne Simmons McGilvray, were licensed to preach. Three others were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial into the traveling connection; viz., George Seabery Saunders, Evans Drew Lewis, and Ethel Clayton McGilvray.

Major R. W. Millsaps, Dr. J. T. B. Berry, T. A. Holloman and T. H. Spillman were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with N. A. Mott and C. L. Ray as alternate delegates.

The pulpit was occupied at various times by Rev. John R. Jones, Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, Dr. W. H. LaPrade and Dr. W. B. Murrah.

Collins was selected as the next place of meeting.

The Conference was unanimous in its praise of the hospitality dispensed by the good people of Canton.

IS IT THE BEST?

Editor of the ADVOCATE: In our good paper of June 28 "An Interested Methodist" would have us believe that "Brother Blank," a member of the late General Conference at Birmingham, Ala., was made to feel very much embarrassed for having voted for a resolution looking to the appointing of a commission to effect a restatement of our articles of faith in connection with like commissions from other branches of Methodism.

I am in sympathy with the idea that the fullest liberty ought to be allowed in giving expression to convictions on this important question, more especially since the question was sprung so suddenly, without a hint, by memorial or otherwise, from any part of our Methodism that we needed a restatement of our articles of religion. While it seems the idea originated in the brain of one man and was suddenly made public, it must be allowed that there were some good reasons for the resolution, or else its adoption by a majority of the Conference could never have become a fact. So I think the discussion of the question ought to be conducted in a fair, sober, manly way. From my point of view, I cannot say that "An Interested Methodist" has so treated the subject.

It is to be expected that those who are not in sympathy with us will endeavor to make capital of what was done by placing a construction on the language of the resolution never intended, or that is justified. I think if you will re-read "An Interested Methodist's" article of June 28, you will find that all the fun that he pokes at "Blank" and the majority of the General Conference is rested on a false accusation, one not mentioned in the resolution or advocated by a single member of the Conference. Why not be fair? Why place a cudgel in the hands of our enemies by discussing the question of the revision of our Articles of Faith?—a question not proposed by the General Conference or any one else.

I do not think it best to make it appear that a member of the General Conference would so belittle himself as to pay any attention to such puerile stuff as is represented to have been pitched into the face of Brother "Blank," a member of the General Conference, on his return home.

The reason is, a large portion of our membership will know nothing of the movement except what they see in our papers, and what they see there ought to be fairly stated and honestly discussed. If we can have an improved statement of our articles, all right. I am in no dread of losing in any degree the essence of what we now have. The whole matter has been committed to wise hands, and we can afford to rest easy.

LETTER FROM PEARL RIVER.

Dear Brother Boswell: We had been trying to build a new church at Pearl River, La., for several years, but owing to various causes and hinderances nothing was accomplished until Brother R. H. Green was sent to us two years ago. He took some decisive steps, sold the old church and lot and bought another lot before he left, and we hoped that he would be returned another year to finish the work he had so auspiciously begun and so prayerfully and earnestly desired to harmonize the workers. But "the powers that be" sent him to another field and sent Brother W. L. Hunter to us. Before the year was on the wane Brother Green was called to "come up higher," and his work on earth was done. One of his flock at Bunkie told us that his last sermon was the best, most touching and eloquent that he had preached, and he closed it with an awful appeal to all his members and all who were there to "be ready, for the summons that would surely come to some of them; perhaps before another week had passed away, and if it should come to him he was ready to answer the call." And before another Sabbath had dawned Brother Green "was not, for God took him."

Brother Hunter, with commendable zeal, took hold of the work here and picked up the tangled skeins, wound a ball and set it to rolling, and before the year was out the new church loomed up, was finished, and before he left for Conference it was dedicated and all were hoping that he would be returned so that some outside work on the church lot would be improved and other things done that it seemed he would be able to do better than any other pastor, and we were glad when he came back to us.

He began (after being delayed some time by sickness) to carry on the work. He helped us to organize a "Home Mission Society," and was urging us all to renewed efforts when we were told that some changes were to be made in several adjoining circuits, and among them ours came in for a change, and sorrow filled our hearts that Brother Hunter should be with us no more.

The blessed Psalmist of Israel prayed that he might be shown "some token of good" for the work he had done, and if the man "after God's own heart" should have yearned for "a token of good" it must surely be felt by all those who labor with "an eye single to the glory of God," yet if the token is withheld it is by the will of "Our Father," and for our good; He sees and knows.

"And He will make it plain."

May God bless Brother Hunter in his new work, and also our new pastor.

MRS. L. C. SADLER.

HERE AND THERE.

I have had some experience, rich and otherwise, since the last two months ago.

A man who is hindered in his work in the early part of the year will likely be more or less hindered at times all through the year. Let one get behind with his work, through neglect or otherwise, how hard it is to get and keep things in proper shape, for a time at least. Last year I got an early start—was at my work in two days after Conference closed at Gulfport. My health was good all the year and I was blessed and happy in my work. It has been different with me this year. One thing and another has hindered me more or less in my work. About the time I thought I was well of the "grip" I had a fall which came near resulting seriously. For over two weeks I suffered, at times untold agony. At the suggestion of a friend, I decided to spend two weeks at the "famous Mammoth Springs," eighty-four miles south of Jackson, seventy-six miles north of Gulfport, on the G. and S. I. R. R., six miles north of Hattiesburg. It is a good place for a preacher, whether sick or tired, to spend a few weeks. The water is simply fine. It is good for the stomach, liver and kidneys. I met Brother Clifford there; also Brother and Sister Cammack. It is a very quiet place. No drinking, gambling or dancing allowed there. Dr. G. A. Brumfield, the manager, is a staunch Methodist, a grandson of Hon. Lemuel Lewis, late of Marion county, who served as Probate Judge nearly thirty years in the county. Judge Lewis was a fine man, a good Christian. The same may be said of his grandson, Dr. Brumfield. I returned to my charge on the 28th of June, much improved in health.

I spent most of last week in Hermanville, Miss. Our Vicksburg District Conference met there on Wednesday, the 4th of July. Bishop Ward was with us. We all fell in love with him. He gave us two strong sermons, besides several good talks. He seemed to be in good health and spirits. All the preachers showed up except J. W. Campbell of Edwards. What a treat to be thrown with our ministerial brethren occasionally. Everybody, preachers and people, enjoyed the occasion. It was one of interest and profit. Hermanville is a nice little town about half-way between Jackson and Natchez, and in Claiborne county. There are four white churches there—Methodist, with a membership of 150; Baptist, with a membership of 140; Episcopal, with 40 members; Presbyterian, with 20 members. There are three colored churches with a total membership of 350; one bank, with a capital stock of $25,000.00; public and high school, with four teachers; twelve business houses, one drug store. Our church property is valued at $11,000. Everything around Hermanville indicates prosperity. The Methodist Church is a thing of beauty—a credit to the town. My home while there was real near the church, and with one of the best families in Hermanville, viz., W. L. Short. The pastor, Brother L. H. Foreman, has a delightful charge. His people love him. We did hope to meet our editor there, but did not. God bless the ADVOCATE and editor.

IS MAN IMMORTAL?

Dr. W. C. Black's book, "Is Man Immortal," is now in its third edition, on the market and selling. This is an unusual sale for a work of this class. Books of sermons and lectures generally sell slowly. The book, we notice, is receiving high praise at the hands of our Church editors.

Many members of the Church, high in the business world, and recognized as men of sterling worth, are not known as Christians. Is that the case with any reader of this paragraph?

PLEASANT HILL CIRCUIT.

Dear ADVOCATE: Here we come again. Since our last writing we have been doing as best we could the work of a pastor, but on account of wife's extremely ill health we have not been able to do what we would like to have done in the way of visiting.

We have filled all the appointments but one or two. We have five appointments with about three hundred and fifty members, and we have very good congregations at all these appointments; in fact, the congregations seem to increase.

Our people are revived, it seems. We have had nine accessions, six of them were by profession of faith and baptism. We are expecting a revival throughout the charge. Our presiding elder (Rev. Dr. Davis) was with us the 24th and held our second Quarterly Conference and preached two excellent sermons for us in Robeline at 11 a. m. in the Methodist Church and at 8 p. m. in the Baptist Church. The electric lights at our church having been discarded, the good Baptist people, having oil lamps, kindly let us use their church.

We feel greatly encouraged in the work of our Lord, knowing that He has promised to go with us whithersoever we go in His name.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Pleasant Hill have placed a new galvanized cistern at the parsonage for the convenience of the preacher. There are other improvements being made in the way of putting an iron fence around the Pleasant Hill Church. The cost of the same will be about $76.25.

Wife and I are the recipients of another old-time pounding, the same amounting to about $18.00 in groceries and cash and was gotten up by a man who is not a member of our church. Of course, you know we appreciate it all and thank God and take courage. We have been trying to get up a club for the ADVOCATE, some have promised.

So, praying the blessings of God upon the ADVOCATE family and asking them to pray for us, I remain, yours fraternally,

W. A. HART, P. C.

SEASHORE EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

PURPOSE.

The purpose of this gathering of Epworth Leaguers and Christian workers is to promote the systematic study of God's word, to awaken a more intelligent interest in missions, to train leaders for all the departments of League work and deepen the spiritual life of the young people.

It is a recognized fact of all that intelligent leadership is the need of the hour in every sphere of life. This is eminently true of young people's societies, especially with the Epworth League, with its many departments and fast developing work. This assembly contemplates the development of the delegates into leaders and trained workers.

To accomplish this, classes in Bible study, mission study, personal work, a school of methods, decision meetings, platform meetings, etc., will be a part of the daily programme.

BIBLE CLASSES.

Organized and systematic Bible study is the strength of the Y. M. C. A., and is fast becoming a power in the Epworth League. There will be two Bible classes, one taught by Prof. Cunninggim of Vanderbilt University, and the other will be taught by Dr. F. S. Parker of Nashville, Tenn. Prof. Cunninggim's course will include studies in the New Testament. Dr. Parker's course will be devotional rather than historical. The Leaguers who took the course of Bible studies in 1904 are anxious to take up the work again. Bring your Bibles. The Bible will, no doubt be the foundation of the lectures by Dr. Frank Parker on the "Studies in Personal Work."

MISSION STUDY CLASS.

The missionary department of the League work, which represents the depth of religious conviction, is growing each year. The recent conference of the Young People's Missionary Movement at Asheville, of which the League is a part, was a great success. The same text books will be used, with Dr. Parker as teacher, as were used at Asheville.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Two periods each morning will be given to methods and institute work. Mrs. A. F. Watkins of Jackson, Miss., will lead the institute on the subject of "Social and Literary Work of the League." Several periods during the session will be given to Junior League work. Home Mission work will be led by Miss Daisy Davies of Georgia. No department or feature of Epworth League work will be overlooked.

PLATFORM SPEAKERS.

The following is a list of speakers and divines who have been secured to give addresses, sermons, and lectures on each night in the tabernacle:

EXPENSES.

The railroads have promised the same rates to the Epworth League assembly as to the regular camp meeting. Delegates can secure lodging, two in a room, for $2.00 for the ten days. Board can be as cheap as $5.00 per week. There will be a gate fee of $1.00 for the season and a tuition fee of $1.00 for all who attend the classes. If you wish any special information concerning the Conference, address me at Plaquemine, La.

C. D. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Our friends will be interested to know that Profs. Huddlestun and Sullivan will travel extensively in the interest of Millsaps College during the vacation months. Any helpful information furnished them and courtesies shown them will be greatly appreciated. Attractive improvements are being made on our buildings and about the college grounds, and we hope soon to begin work on our new library. Good reports are coming in from all sections, and the prospects for next session are highly encouraging.

We have just received the gratifying news that our representative at the Whitworth Chautauqua, Mr. S. T. Osborn, had taken the first prize in oratory. Our boys never fail to give a good account of themselves.

The Board of Trustees at their last annual meeting authorized the Executive Committee to appoint an agent to travel throughout the State in the interest of our endowment movement. It may be some time before the appointment is made, however, and I trust that our pastors will help the president of the college in every way possible to bring this matter to the attention of the people. This means more to the future of the college than anything else. We are face to face with a great opportunity and confronted by a grave responsibility.

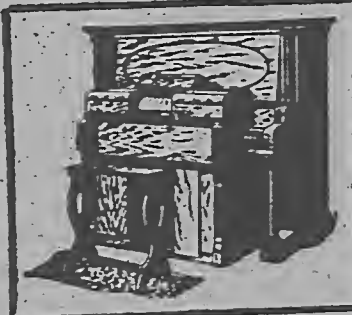
W. B. MURRAH.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions of respect were passed by the Methodist Sunday-school at Franklington, La., June 24, 1906.

Whereas the Great Head of the Church has removed from our midst to his home above our oldest and most worthy member, namely, Robert Babington, Sr., one who proved faithful to every trust, and who, for more than fifty years, was connected with the Sunday-school, and who always felt the deepest interest in its success; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow with sad hearts in submission to the Divine will.



Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family of our brother in their great sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded by the Secretary; that a copy be sent to the wife and each child of our deceased brother; to the New Era, to Washington Leader, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Twelfth Annual Session of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Mississippi Conference, convened at Collins Wednesday evening, May 2, continuing through the following Sunday. The meeting throughout was profitable and inspiring. The President emphasized the importance of holding the Bible study regularly and urged that only faithful, earnest students of God's Word could do faithful, earnest work. Rev. Harmon also stressed the importance of the constant study of the Bible and conducted during the Conference an instructive Bible study on "Consecration," invoking first the blessing of God upon his efforts to feed us spiritually and send us home better women.

Addresses of welcome were made by Rev. Harmon, on behalf of the church, and by Mrs. McIntosh on behalf of the ladies of Collins, which were both cordial and kindly. The response for the W. H. M. S. was made by Mrs. C. R. McQueen, of Meridian, and a few happy remarks by Mrs. Holloman, after which the ladies enjoyed an old-time hand-shaking.

After the devotional exercises on Thursday morning, Mrs. Holloman stated that it was fitting and proper to turn this service into a praise service. Quite a number of ladies arose and spoke of spiritual blessings and increased prosperity.

On Thursday evening the meeting was conducted by Rev. Q. A. Oats, whose work amongst us is so well known. He entertained the congregation with a heart-to-heart talk on the conditions at the Orphanage and the work done in the Home.

One of the most interesting and important discussions of the Conference was that on tithing, with Mrs. B. F. Lewis as leader. Mrs. Lewis was thoroughly familiar with this subject through careful study of God's Word and made it clear to all that this is the true way to give.

Mrs. Holloman also made a splendid talk, saying, among other things, that if we trained the children of the next generation to tithe, we would have placed the Home Mission Society on a foundation of rock which could ever after weather the storms of adversity. It is hoped that after so much light on this important subject of our work more of the members will adopt this method of giving and train the young, to whom it will then come as a matter of course.

Another profitable discussion as to how to secure a good attendance at the meetings and collect dues was heartily entered into by the Conference.

The reports from District Secretaries were very encouraging, showing quite a number of new auxiliaries formed with good attendance and growing membership. If every woman in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, understood thoroughly the work undertaken and accomplished by the Home Mission Societies it would be only a short time till the Home Mission members would be limited only by the members in the Church itself. Let us all try to help this important adjunct before all new members and others, who, from indifference or some other reason, seem not to be familiar with its workings. Without doubt a pastor regards the Home Mission Society as his staunchest ally, and, as one of them emphatically expressed it, "the biggest thing in the Church."

Mrs. Cope, who had organized two new auxiliaries in the Meridian District, said she had a new experience to report, viz.: A pastor and a presiding elder had urged her to organize a Home Mission Society in one of the churches, showing conclusively the attitude of pastor and preacher to this aid in his work. It is also important that each worker should be a subscriber to Our Homes, the official organ of our society, and by careful study keep in touch with work done by others as well as her own church. We can accomplish nothing by taking up the work half-heartedly. A number of ladies pledged themselves to secure subscribers to this excellent little paper.

Mrs. C. W. Cochran was called upon by the president to tell the ladies about the work at Cottondale, and the City Missionary work at Meridian, which she did in a most interesting way. Mrs. Cochran and Mrs. Lewis spoke of the great need of trained workers. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

Mrs. Wyatt read an instructive paper on Rescue Work and Mrs. Campbell's paper on Our Work Among Foreigners was an inspiration.

On Saturday morning the president said we would pause awhile to honor those of our workers who have gone to their reward. After songs and prayer Mrs. E. D. Jones read a beautiful tribute to our dead, which was adopted by a standing vote. After an appropriate selection read by Mrs. Lewis it was moved and seconded that we proceed to decide on the place of next annual meeting. Cordial invitations had been extended to several churches, but as it was impossible to accept but one, that of Court Street, Hattiesburg, was unanimously accepted.

Mrs. Holloman, in a few well chosen words, thanked the good people of Collins for their kind hospitality, and the Conference stood adjourned.

CHILDREN'S DAY SERVICES.

Since our last writing we have not done very much that would be interesting to your readers; but will tell of the Children's Day services at Oak Grove and Nebo churches. At the first named place we followed the programme as outlined in the literature for that day. This programme was well rendered. The Sunday-school scholars showed care in their training. The singing was excellent. It was the best we have had since I have been on the circuit, regardless of place or occasion. The exercises at Nebo were of a high order, showing care and enthusiasm in every part.

Rain spoiled the pleasures of the dinner hour at Oak Grove. We were spared the shower at Nebo and fully enjoyed the plentiful dinner spread before us.

The congregations were very large and as quiet as well as could be found anywhere. It seemed to me the people were more thoughtful of each other's interests than is commonly displayed on such occasions. We take this as a hopeful sign of better feelings and stronger co-operation in all of our work. May it be so!

The collections were good, amounting to $11.71. We hope to have a series of revival services throughout the circuit, and trust that much good will be done. To this end we ask the prayers of the faithful.

Fraternally yours,
W. W. PERRY.

FORGIVENESS.

Now bury with the dead year conflicts dead,
And with fresh days let all begin anew.
Why longer, amid shriveled leaf-drifts tread,
When buds are swelling, flower-sheaths peeping through?
Seen through the vista of the vanished years,
How trival seem the struggle and the crown!
How vain past feuds, when reconciling tears
Course down the channel worn by vanished frown!
How few mean half the bitterness they speak!
Words more than feelings keep us still apart.
And, in the heat of passion and of pique,
The tongue is far more cruel than the heart.
Since love alone makes it worth while to live,
Let all be now forgiven and forgive.

HAPPY LIVING.

Cultivate faith, obedience, service. The secret of holy and happy living is gathered up in these three words. There are a great many things we cannot understand, but these lie within our reach, and if we hold to them they will bring us through the darkest night beneath which the soul of man ever wrestled into the perfect day.

1. Faith—If you cannot see God clearly, look toward the spot from whence His voice comes, as a child instinctively turns in the dark toward the place from which its mother's voice issues; and remember that the mountains which soar the highest in the dark will be the first to catch the glint of the morning beam at dawn. To know the Lord. Faith is the motion of the soul Godward.

2. Obedience—Every time you obey you pull up the blind and let in more light. Every time you obey, you break down the restraining reef and let more of the sea into the bay of your life. Obey the voice of God in the Book, the voice of God in your heart, the voice of God as He speaks through circumstances and His servants—obey.

3. Service—Never let a day go by without making the world a brighter, happier place for others, and, as you do so, the life abundant will gush out. A friend once told me that while he stood in the old Forum of Rome, watching the workmen using the pickax, one of them happened to strike away some rubbish and debris which had lain for centuries, and, as he did so, a fountain of water, well known in classic times as the Virgin's Fountain, but which had been imprisoned for centuries, found glad utterance again: the imprisonment was over, the stone was taken away from the sepulcher, and thy beautiful fount again gushed into the Italian sunshine.

It may be that to-day such an experience is to be yours and that some debris which has accumulated upon your heart, choking your life, by the grace of God and by the act of your own choice shall be put away so that the life which has been checked and restrained may become abundant and you may know the fulfillment of our Lord's words: "It shall become in them a well of water, springing up into eternal life."—The Parish Visitor.

THE ORANGE SECRET.

It was told me by Maritza, a little Greek girl in far-away Turkey, and I am going to tell it here and now to every one, because I never have found an American child who had discovered it.

I was finishing my breakfast one morning, when I heard a little sound at my elbow. It was Maritza, who had slipped off her shoes at the outer door and come so softly through the open hall that I had not heard her. After I had taken the parcel of sewing her mother had sent, I gave Maritza two oranges which were left in a dish on the table. One of them was big and the other quite small.

"One orange is for you," I said, "and the other you may carry to Louka. Which one will you give him?"

Maritza waited a long while before answering. At any time she would have thought it very rude for a little child to answer promptly or in a voice loud enough to be easily heard; but this time she waited even longer than good manners required. She looked at orange over and over and then the other. Then a little more urging from me, she whispered: "This one." It was the big one.

Curious to know of the struggle which had made her so long in deciding, I said: "But why don't you give Louka the small orange? He is a small boy." Maritza dug her little stockinged toes into the carpet and twisted her apron hem before she answered:

"Is not Anna waiting for me at the gate?" she said. "Anna and I will eat my orange together. Mine has twelve pieces and the other only eleven. Anna would not like to take six pieces if I had only five."

"You cannot see through the orange skin, Maritza, to tell how many pieces there are. How is it you know?" I asked.

Then Maritza told me the orange secret, and this it is: If you look at the stem end of an orange you will see the scar where it pulled away from the stem is like a little wheel, spokes going up from the center. If you count the spaces between these spokes you will find that there are just as many of them as there will be sections in the orange when you open it, and so you can tell as Maritza did, how many "pieces" your orange has.

Perhaps you think every orange has the same number, just as every apple has five cells which hold its seeds; but you will find it is not so. Why not? Well, I do not know. But, perhaps away back in the history of the orange, when it is a flower, or perhaps when it is only a bud, something may happen which hurts some of the cells or makes some of them outgrow the rest. Then the number of cells is mixed; and no matter how big and plump and juicy the orange becomes, it has no more sections than it had when it was a little green button, just beginning to be an orange. The next time you eat an orange, try to find out its secret before you open it.—Little Folks.

ED, THE MACHINIST.

He had no particular talent. He was just an ordinary machinist. But Ed Douglas was more highly respected by the two thousand men in the shop than any other chap in the place. His was one of the few names that were familiar to pretty nearly every fellow working in that big plant. Ed was not popular with the men because he set out to make himself popular by always agreeing with his shopmates. Indeed, he frequently went full tilt against their opinions and, principally, against their actions. Often I have seen him approach the fellow who had just ripped out a string of oaths, and rebuke him, although never with a suggestion of Pharisaical supremacy. He was simply trying to show the blasphemer that it would pay him to cut out his foolish, senseless swearing.

He did not belong to any of the fraternal organizations, but I have known him to spend many a night with a sick shopmate. Frequently he left in the home part of the not over-abundant cash in his pocket; but, better than that, he left a smile on the face of the tired, discouraged nurse-wife—the children wished that he might come again, and the sick man felt the cheer of his presence.

He was an arbitrator in personal disputes in the shop, and the boys never repudiated his decisions. Not infrequently he dared approach the boss in behalf of a wronged fellow-workman. The boys admired his disinterested nerve, as he seemed to know when the rest of us had met with adversity, or even the smaller discouragements which make life seem hard. Always was there a strong, cheerful word which usually braced up the fellow who thought that the whole world had gone wrong. The apprentices were particularly fond of him, because he appeared to have a lively interest in their affairs. Never did he begin to hand out wisdom in large chunks, with an air of patronage or paternalism. Never was there a suspicion of cant.

May this kind increase. We need them. The sympathetic touch of a shopmate counts for more than most of us imagine. Every morning brings its weight of woe, and every evening its burden. No matter what the cause, the need is ever the same, and relief is usually found in the simple, manly message of love and sympathy manifested in the life of the fellow who works by our side. At least it will help, for it is doing just what the Great Carpenter did, and what He would continue to do were He upon earth. That's what made Douglas, the machinist, a bigger factor in the lives of those two thousand workmen than any other single individual. It paid him, too. Anyway, you'd think so if you could see his face while he worked—worked for men and for God just as a machinist.—Rev. Chas. Stelzle, in Congregational Christian Advocate.

Men of good sense and judgment are worthy of confidence and respect, but for others to become their slavish followers, and "sneeze every time they take snuff," is quite as unworthy as to be the henchmen of a ward boss.

Some Christians have an idea that there is no work to do in the church, thinking that religion was simply designed to make people happy and carry them to heaven. What the reward of such Christians will be we have no means of knowing.

It is easy to talk big and make big promises. We meet men who do that almost every day. Of all such boasters it can be said, as was reported of Jerry Larkum in Post Oak Circuit: "There's a long distance between Jerry's talk and Jerry's cash."

Paul the aged, at the close of his life, triumphantly said to Timothy, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Every man of Pauline spirit who determines to do one thing, and steadily adheres to the purpose, can exult as triumphantly as did Paul, even though he be in sight of a martyr's death.

A preacher dreamed one night that he was hitched to a carriage and pulling it up-hill. As the load got heavier and heavier, he looked back to see what was the matter. To his horror every member of his church was in the carriage, riding. To some preachers, carrying the weight of the whole church is neither a dream nor a fancy. It is a killing reality.

It seems to us that the extreme of intolerance is reached when the spiritual advisers and guides of a people forbid their children to attend public school commencement services which are opened by prayer. That is what the Roman Catholic Bishop of Syracuse, N. Y., has done. In view of which, and some other things, we venture to say that it is not quite time to superannuate those Articles of our Religion that are anti-Romish. We had better keep them in service a little longer.

DR. KILGO ON ORGANIC UNION.

We have been favored with the July issue of the South Atlantic Quarterly, edited by Drs. Edwin Mims and William H. Glasson, Professors in Trinity College, Durham, N. C. The leading article, "A Plea for the Union of Methodism in America," is by President Kilgo. It appears simply as a contribution to the Quarterly, but, as we have seen elsewhere stated, it is the baccalaureate address of Dr. Kilgo at the late commencement of Trinity College.

We are much surprised to find Dr. Kilgo in favor of the organic union of Methodism. Our surprise at some of the statements he makes is inexpressible.

1. Dr. Kilgo declares that "The issue which sixty-two years ago divided Episcopal Methodism in America into two ecclesiastical bodies was a political issue." That is hardly a fair statement of the matter. The uninformed can but infer that it was purely a "political issue," whereas it was also a moral issue. The Northern delegates in the General Conference of 1844, as a rule, argued the question from that standpoint. Believing with Mr. Wesley that the "African slave trade was the sum of all villainies," they identified slavery as it existed in the Southern States at that time with the "African slave trade," and could not see the difference between the slave holders of the South, and a "man stealer" in Africa; and though they did not publicly declare it impossible for a slave holder to be a Christian, they did not hesitate to say that a slave holder was unfit for a Methodist preacher. Hence their action in expelling Mr. Harding of the Baltimore Conference from the ministry, and also demanding that Bishop Andrew, who, though not a slave owner, was connected with slavery by legacy and marriage, should cease to exercise the duties of a Bishop until he should rid himself of the embarrassment. Had the slavery question been only a political issue, a three week's discussion over the matter would have been impossible in the General Conference. And Dr. Kilgo is wrong in intimating that the whole discussion in 1844 revolved around the question of "abolitionism as a political sentiment." Other and important issues were discussed.

2. Dr. Kilgo says: "There was no contention as to the fundamental doctrines nor the general principles of policy in the Methodist Church." That is true as to our doctrines, but true only in part as to our polity. The Northern and Southern delegates differed widely on the Episcopacy, and that difference has not been reconciled to this day. The Northern delegates took the position that the Episcopacy is the creature of the General Conference, and that Bishops may be made and unmade at will. Hence, without charging Bishop Andrew with immoral conduct, they demanded that he cease to perform the functions of his office. Expediency alone was the ground on which the demand was made. Our Southern delegates, without affirming the Episcopacy to be a third order of the ministry, held that, as it ante-dated the organic existence of the church, it was a co-ordinate branch of the government, and not to be dispensed with at will. They had ground for this opinion. Dr Coke came to America as a General Superintendent, or Bishop, with authority to organize the Methodists in the United States into a church. This he did at the Christmas Conference in 1784. This ground was maintained in 1844, and saved Bishop Andrew from outright slaughter. Otherwise, notwithstanding he was not guilty of immorality, nor charged with mal-administration, he would have been deposed. Southern Methodism has never seen cause to change its attitude. The difference between the two Churches on this question is vital, if an independent general superintendency is necessary to the efficient working of our itinerant system.

Further on in the address Dr. Kilgo says: "The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church have held faithfully to our Episcopal form of government." This is only partially true, if in connection with the Episcopal form of government we take into consideration the Episcopacy itself. Doing that, it is very clear that the Methodist Episcopal Church has not maintained the Episcopacy in its original purity. This is manifest from the fact that, not only the Episcopacy, as a co-ordinate branch of the government, is repudiated, but also that a form of Episcopacy has been introduced and operated that is in no wise a general superintendency. The third restrictive rule expressly declares that the General Conference shall not destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." This the Methodist Episcopal Church has done by instituting the order or office of "Missionary Bishop." Such Bishops have limited jurisdiction. The exercise of their functions is in a given territory. For example, Bishop Thoburn is Bishop in India, but he is not a Bishop at home. With these loose views put into operation, it cannot be said that our Northern brethren "have held faithfully" to our Episcopacy. Their actions strike at the very roots of our polity.

3. Alluding to the "negro problem," "one of the chief causes why it seems inadvisable, if not even impossible, for the two branches of Methodism to reunite," Dr. Kilgo says: "The supposed differences of attitude to the negro problem should rather hasten than hinder the reunion of Methodism." It is not in our heart to blame Dr. Kilgo for the broadness of his charity, but we are bound to say that, in this sentiment he reveals a confiding spirit, coupled with less caution than we suspected him of possessing. Certainly the Doctor did not fully consider the import of his words, else his conception of the problem is vastly different from that of many others.

If the "supposed differences" between the two sections on the problem should hasten rather than hinder reunion, we take it for granted that he would favor reunion without even so much as making the problem a matter of consideration. We are not afraid of "social equality" being thrust upon Southern people—that can never be; but we are afraid of the trouble that would ensue. To reunite with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and trust to an adjustment of the problem afterwards, in which adjustment the negro members of the Church would have a voice, would be a rash business. What would follow, of course, could not be foretold, but we venture to say that union with the Methodist Episcopal Church would soon be followed by union with the African Methodist Episcopal and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Churches, and perhaps other bodies of colored Methodists. Is there not a call for an undivided and universal Methodism? The call is made and championed by our Northern brethren. Failing to absorb and disintegrate, they now avant union. Their ambition is dominion. The end would be domination.

Dr. Kilgo makes but one plea that appeals to us, and that plea is based on an assumption. The reunion of Episcopal Methodism will greatly increase its religious power and moral influence. There is no way to prove this. Of course, it is a pleasing thought, but we cannot afford such an experiment. We are satisfied. The success of Southern Methodism since 1846, notwithstanding the decimation of our ranks in consequence of the war, is unparalleled. Reunion with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1866 would have driven Southern Methodists from the Church entirely. There are thousands among us to-day who will not go into any sort of union.

If the Northern branch of the Church is doing her own work in her own way, and succeeding, and the Southern branch is doing her work in her way, and succeeding, we shoul l be satisfied. Feeling sure that Southern Methodism does not stand in the way of progress, we are content to remain as we are.

PLEASE BEAR THIS IN MIND.

It is very embarrassing to us to receive an official communication when we are almost ready to go to press, with the request that it be printed immediately. It makes the writer "religiously mad" when he finds it missing. But, beloved, you see how it is. Only this week we have been compelled to hold over matter in type to make room for a lengthy announcement that would be out of date by our next issue. Our paper is printed on Wednesday. If it is important to get an announcement in the next issue, it should be started to us on Thursday or sooner.

Please bear this in mind.

NOTICE

Arrangements have been made with the Louisiana and Arkansas and the Arkansas Southern Railways whereby delegates and visitors to the District Conference to convene at Winnfield, July 26-31, are entitled to a one and one-third rate for the round trip, provided certificates be secured by them from agents at point of starting. I hope to secure a similar rate on the V. S. & P. Ry. Bishop Seth Ward will preside and a good time is anticipated. To this end let every one come praying. R. A. HOLLOWAY, P. C.

PERSONALS.

A note from the presiding elder of the Winona District, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, attests his modesty. It simply says: "Everything prospers on the Winona District." The elder, of course, shares in the prosperity.

Rev. J. C. Lowe asks us to say that in his letter last week, in the last paragraph, the word "property" should be "prosperity." The word, as printed, "sounds a little awkward and out of place."

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Ponchatoula, has steadily worked for the ADVOCATE and from time to time has sent in lists of subscribers, until he has secured twenty, or more. He has our hearty thanks.

Please read the revised notice of Rev. R. A. Holloway in regard to the Arcadia District Conference. He sent us a telegram, asking a change in the notice of last week, but it did not reach us in time.

We had the pleasure on Tuesday of a visit from Rev. C. C. Miller, of Centenary College, and his son, Prof. Eugene Miller. President Miller is working in the interest of the College, and not without hope of success.

President Jas. D. Wade, of "The Seminary," which we advertise, calls our attention to the fact that "The Seminary" was established in 1830, not in 1803, as we have it printed. We take great pleasure in making this correction.

Bishop Candler will sail from Seattle, Washington, the 25th of this month for the far East, where he goes to look after the mission work in Japan, Korea and China. He will probably not be able to return until the last of October.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, student in Vanderbilt University the past session, has been appointed to Rankin Street Church, Jackson, Miss., in place of Rev. W. L. Hightower, who, on account of ill-health, was compelled to give up the work.

Rev. Geo. W. Brinsfield, of Huron, Ark., on May 16, celebrated the one hundred and seventh anniversary of his birth. He is yet "fairly active in mind and body," and for many years has superintended a small Sunday-school a mile and a half from his home.

Rev. T. W. Adams was in the city this week, waiting on his son-in-law, of Gloster, who was dangerously, if not fatally, shot by a negro a few days since, in cold blood and without provocation. We deeply sympathize with the family, and especially the young wife, who is so sorely grieved.

Rev. W. B. Pinson has succeeded in placing the ADVOCATE in "most of the Methodist families" on his work, Sidon and Tchula. At this writing he is at Slate Springs assisting in a meeting, with prospects of a great revival. Brother Pinson encourages us by saying: "I am glad you take the stand you do on the 'restatement' of our 'superannuated' Articles of Religion."

A correspondent of the Alabama Advocate speaks in high terms of Rev. Theo. Copeland, who recently assisted in a meeting at Twenty-third Avenue Church, Birmingham. "He was on his native heath and among the people who have known him from his cradle up. The Lord has endowed him with an unusual voice and personal magnetism. He did his work well and faithfully." Eighteen persons were added to the church.

Rev. O. A. Oats, agent and manager of our Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home, has sent out an appeal to the pastors for help. Money is needed immediately—at least two thousand dollars for furniture, laundry, school desks and other supplies. The editor has no pastoral charge, but he has many readers in Mississippi, and we earnestly exhort them to respond to the call of their preachers, and relieve at once the wants of this noble institution. The cause is worthy.

Rev. R. H. Harper, before his transfer from Pollock, La., to Lecompte, was successful in securing new subscribers, and the renewal of nearly all the old ones, sending eighteen names at one time. The old subscribers, he says, "are pleased with the ADVOCATE, save they can't keep it together." We kindly ask Brother Harper to say to them that the trouble will be remedied as soon as possible. The publisher has in view a folder that will fold, paste and trim, but it involves an outlay of nearly $1,000, and he is cautious—is "making haste slowly," but we trust surely.

Rev. H. T. Carley, transferred by Bishop Ward from the Mississippi Conference, and appointed to Parker Memorial Church, is a young man of fine character, well educated, and of great promise. He has had suddenly laid upon him a great responsibility. His charge is engaged in building a costly house of worship—just now about half finished. The Church is not strong, either financially or numerically, but it is devoted and active, and Brother Carley will have the hearty co-operation of good men and women. We welcome Brother Carley as a co-laborer, and pray for his success.

DENHAM SPRINGS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We held our second Quarterly Conference June 16 and 17 at Alford's Chapel, Live Oak work. Brother Tucker, our beloved presiding elder, was with us and preached three excellent sermons. We had a regular old time Conference. The house was full and the people had dinner on the ground. The people here know how to feed; if you don't believe it, Doctor, come up and you will see. The officials said our reports were best of any second quarterly conference held in the history of the circuit. Our work is moving on nicely and we are expecting even better results. We are planning to enter into our summer meetings, trusting the Lord for great results. Pray for us. With best wishes for the ADVOCATE, editor and readers. Your brother. J. F. WALTMAN.

THE PROPOSED RESTATEMENT OF THE DOCTRINES OF METHODISM.

The action of our late General Conference in appointing a committee of five, to act jointly with committees from the other branches of Methodism to give a restatement of what Methodists believe, seems to have created consternation in the breasts of certain brethren in our midst, who claim that the Restrictive Rule, that stands as a safeguard to our articles of religion, has been put at naught, and left us in a surging sea of doubt and uncertainty as to what might be our faith and doctrine.

We have just read the articles from the pens of zealous brethren, who seem to fear that we are about to let slip some of the things which we have heard of the fathers of Methodism, and are about to turn the prow of our vessel towards a tempestuous and uncertain sea. Now, there are a number of reasons why this writer sees absolutely no danger, but only good to be accomplished by this action of our General Conference. The first is our belief that the good old doctrines of Methodism have come to stay. The next is that we have confidence in our delegation, who composed the General Conference, and believe them to be men of judgment, piety and loyalty to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, her doctrines and polity. If I understand the object in view, it is to get before the world as clear a statement as possible what Methodists believe now, and always believed. We have confidence in the piety, judgment, common sense and loyalty of the thirteen men who compose our College of Bishops, and feel that they had at heart only the good of the church when they appointed this committee. In the next place, we do not see nor understand that this committee is authorized to revoke, alter, or change our articles of religion or establish any new standard or rule of doctrine. If a restatement of the doctrine of Methodism be a violation of the above rule, then what shall we say concerning any Methodist preacher who dares prepare a new sermon on justification by faith, regeneration, witness of the Spirit and sanctification, and delivers it on Sabbath morning to his congregation? Is not this a restatement of the doctrines of Methodism? A restatement of creed is no new thing. It has been done again and again. When the Son of Man preached that wonderful sermon on the Mount, he restated the Ten Commandments. At that time there lacked not those who lifted up their hands in holy horror and proclaimed that he had altered or revoked the Law of Moses. Paul restated the doctrines of Christendom when he wrote the Epistle to the Romans. Martin Luther restated the doctrine of Paul in the 16th century. In the 18th century John Wesley made another restatement. And who will dare say that these restatements of the old, old Gospel truths have not shed untold blessings on mankind? We frankly admit that such an act proposed by a body of men is a serious and solemn undertaking.

When a few men get together with the intention of stating the one and only path that leads through the vale of tears to the portals of heaven, we are frank to admit that it is sufficient to make strong men tremble. No one can read the utterances from that pillar of Methodism, Bishop Wilson, made in our last General Conference, without being profoundly impressed with the seriousness of the proposed restatement. While he opposed the action, he frankly admitted the indefiniteness and inaccuracy of our present statement of doctrine and approved of revising the fifty-two Standard Sermons of Wesley, which he asserted, contain things that our church never endorsed as part of her teaching. While he asserted that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to give a perfectly satisfactory statement of doctrine, no one would accuse him of meaning to state that the trumpet of Methodism for nearly two centuries has been giving an uncertain sound. As a matter of fact, have not the doctrines announced by John Wesley, to a large extent, changed the creed of Christendom? While his language would seem to indicate it, we do not believe the Bishop meant to say that the doctrines of Methodism are so indefinite that they cannot be clearly stated? It is useless to be discussing the wisdom of appointing the committee to do the work already settled by the action of the General Conference. There is no rule that forbids the appointment of such a committee. But if the restatement alters, revokes or changes our Articles of Religion, then it would be well or in order to apply the restrictive rule before accepting it.

Respectfully,
R. C. DICKSON.

WILLIAM CLARENCE SHAW, son of Brother and Sister C. N. Shaw, of Northfield, Miss., was born in Jefferson county, Miss., Jan. 31, 1884, and died of hernaturia at Georgetown, La., June 26, 1906. He was taken sick on Saturday and died the following Tuesday at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He realized his condition from the first, and had his wife read the Bible to him and pray for him. He had the best of medical attention, and though far away from father and mother, he was surrounded by kind friends who ministered to his wants. Clarence had many commendable traits of character. "He was fond of flowers and children." He was married in 1905 to Miss Quenia Hawsey, of Ora, Miss. He was a Woodman of the World, but above all we trust, a Christian. His remains were temporarily interred at Winnfield, La. Later they will be brought to Mississippi as a final resting place. May God comfort the bereaved ones in this time of sorrow by the consolation of his grace!

L. CARLEY.

JOHN B. RAMSAY, the subject of this sketch, was born in Harrison County, Miss., June 27, 1837. In early life he dedicated himself to God, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained loyal till death. May 30, 1906, he quitely fell on sleep. His advice was always on the right side of every moral question, his life a living epistle known and read by all for good, his home life sweet and tempered with the grace of God; no harshness or roughness to be condoned in the man of gentlemanly bearing and noble character living the Christian life. Though God has seen fit to remove him from his accustomed place, and his form and face are no longer seen among us, yet the influence, the aroma of life lingers, a benediction to the whole community. His fidelity to the church was remarkable. His home has sheltered many a weary itinerant, and his liberality relieved many who were distressed. It was his desire to die easily and quietly, and when the messenger came one long sigh escaped his lips, and the soul was with its God. We laid the body to rest in the family burying-ground, near the place of his birth, believing that after awhile in some brighter land we'll meet to part no more. May the mantle of the deceased rest upon the bereaved family and bring them, by the grace of God, to the heavenly home.

G. P. McKEOWN, P. C.

J. BASCOM WILLIAMS was born July 21, 1861, and died at his home at Hico, La., April 28, 1906. Brother Williams joined the M. E. Church, South, when he was 8 years old, and he was ever faithful to the church as he was true to God. He served the church as Sunday-school Superintendent the last six years of his life, was steward several years; always faithful to every trust committed to him. I was his pastor four years and knew him as a brother and loved him as such. He was married to Miss Addie Wainright, July 21, 1892. There were six children born of this union, three of whom died in infancy. He was the youngest son of the late Rev. J. L. Williams, and a brother to our Rev. J. B. Williams, of the Louisiana Conference. We pray God's blessings upon the widow and children left behind, and mingle our tears with all the sorrowing ones. The church will miss him, his community will miss him, his pastor will miss him; but we expect to see him again.

His former pastor,
B. H. SHEPPARD.

HAZEL WILHELMINA MILLICAN, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. N. Millican, was born Aug. 30, 1899, and went to her eternal home April 21, 1906. Her stay on earth was short, but her sweet and precious image will ever live in the hearts of those who loved her with a love that cannot die. She was a child of very rare beauty and loveliness, and possessed all the natural qualities and graces which, if she had lived, would have made her a very superior woman. All that medical skill and fondest love could do was done, but, alas, she must have been needed in the Master's fold. We say she is dead? Its not so. She did not die, and is not dead. She only in reality then began to live and lives in that realm of eternal youth and perpetual spring, where her expanding nature now has room, where her soul is liberated from all humiliating limitations, where she has found, and is at home with, her God. Dear ones, who grieve so severely for your loss, look not at the little grave, where only the material particles were laid to rest, but look by faith to the pearly gates, whither the immaterial spirit went, and see the fair little hands beckoning you on and upward, and since you know that your loss is her eternal gain, humbly done."

LESSON FOR JULY 29.

JESUS DINES WITH A PHARISEE.

(Luke xiv, 1-14.)

Golden Text: "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Luke xiv, 2.

On a Sabbath day not very long before the time of to-day's lesson our Lord was teaching in one of the synagogues. The subject of His talk was varied. He spoke of the impossibility of man explaining the works of Providence, and as He mentioned the Galileans slain by Pilate, and the eighteen killed by the falling of the Siloam tower, he taught them the necessity of repentance. As he further taught them of the fig tree that had borne no fruit, and the dresser of the vineyard pleading for the fig tree. His loving eyes alighted on a poor woman all bowed down with some affliction, which she had suffered for eighteen years. At once the Master rose above all law regarding the Sabbath, and by the law of love and with the kindly words, "Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity." Instantly cured her. Everyone should have rejoiced and given glory to God with the poor woman. Not so, for the ruler of the synagogue, the very one who should have been the first to show thankfulness, was indignant. He vented his anger on the people, when in fact it was Jesus with whom he was displeased. He told the people they had six days in which to come and be heard, not to come on the Sabbath. It was the Lord that was indignant then, for turning to the ruler He used an expression that on another occasion showed the extent of His displeasure. "Thou hypocrites," said Jesus, "doth not each one of you, on the Sabbath, loose his ox or his ass from the stall and lead him away to the watering?"

At this time Jesus was surrounded by enemies, who were watching to catch him in some way so that the authorities could effect His arrest. It is said that they were ashamed when the Master ceased speaking, after He had told them that the poor woman had been bound by Satan for eighteen years, and ought she not be loosed from the bond on the Sabbath day? The people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by Him.

From studying this incident, it seems that His enemies had planned so that they could have the Master at a disadvantage, so they supposed. However, the invitation was not given from any desire to honor, or to show hospitality to the guest. The Scripture says: "And they watched Him." He must have been very sorrowful as He move among the people who were ready and eager to catch Him in any word or act by which they could indict Him for a breach of the law.

Nothing ever moved Him from His set purpose of teaching all and every one from every incident that happened. It is this part of our lesson that appeals most strongly to our attention. To enable us to walk more closely in His steps, it should be our earnest desire to know, by deep study, all of His emotions, as He was surrounded by fierce persecutors, yet to remember that He was, presumably, the guest of honor at the feast. He knew the inmost thoughts of their hearts, and it must have pained Him as He saw their deep hatred of Him. Yet, as He taught others, He "resisted not evil." There was no antagonism aroused within Him. He was the great Teacher, and all opportunities were at once taken to give instruction. His great theme was love, and the actions that were the fruits of love. His present host knew of the fame of Him that had gone abroad throughout all Judea, that He was bestowing blessings on every one that came near Him.

The company assembled was composed of the rulers of Israel, who were ready to thank God that they were not as other men, and maybe then were really moving away further from the poor man, with the dropsy who had made his way into the room in which they were dining. They could not understand the love that prompted Jesus to so readily take notice of the sufferer. They only knew that He certainly would do so, and the day being the Sabbath would make no difference. They were ready to condemn Him as was the ruler of the synagogue a Sabbath or so before.

Jesus could see their thoughts when He asked them, "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day?" Is it possible for us to act and speak so calmly and kindly under like circumstances? We must learn to "Let the same mind be in you that was in Christ Jesus." Think of His loneliness even in that assembly. He saw no look of kindliness or sympathy on any face that was turned toward Him. They had no answer for His question. Jesus took the poor man that had the dropsy and healed him and let him go. There was no contamination for the Lord of Heaven to touch one of His suffering children. After this came some lessons for these wise lawyers and Pharisees to learn, and this poor Galilean who had not where to lay His head, this poor carpenter who talked about sheep and oxen, and birds and flowers, and grains of mustard seed, and prodigal sons, was to teach them. The first lesson was that in all things as well as observing the Sabbath, we should exercise the reason that God has given us. If they would pull an ox out of a pit on the Sabbath day, was it not reasonable that a man should be made whole on that day? As class distinction was prominent in their code of social law, Jesus taught them humility, enforced by the soundest logic. Noticing their contention for the most prominent places at the dinner, he told them that it was best to take the most humble place, and then if they were worthy they would be invited to come up higher. And then He gave them a principle to follow which is well for the Christian to heed: "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." The Master then address Himself to the host, saying: "When you give a feast or an entertainment, do not invite those who are able to repay you at some time by inviting you to a similar gathering; but, rather call the poor and the lame and the blind, for they cannot repay you, but you shall be repaid at the resurrection of the just."

These kindly words must have disarmed His enemies of their cruel hatred, for He continued to teach them wonderful lessons of love and duty, of which we will learn in our next lesson.

SKEPTICISM.

It is better to believe everything a man says than to believe nothing. The crucial test comes and the true things accepted on faith will greatly aid you in life's battles in time. Believe everything rather than reject everything.

Johnson's Chill and Fever Tonic is the greatest Fever medicine and Life Saver in the whole world. If you believe this and accept it as a truth, you will be the immense gainer thereby, and if you doubt it and wholly reject it you may be the loser to the extent of your very life.

We will send 2 bottles to any reader of this paper on these terms:—If the two bottles cure two cases of Fever, send us $1. If they do not do all we claim, send us nothing. We take the risk. THE JOHNSON'S CHILL AND FEVER TONIC CO., SAVANNAH, GA.

BIENVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Doctor: We have just closed a very fine meeting at this place. Rev. D. E. Kelly, of Pearlhaven, Miss., did the preaching and every sermon was wonderfully blessed of God. The life of the backslider was so strikingly portrayed to him that he was constrained to give up the sins that led him away from the path of rectitude. Sinners were made to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin and were turned from the way of death to the way of life. The attendance was large from the very first service, but increased to the close. Some real good material was taken into the church and others were getting ready to join. Such a pity that the meeting had to close. Brother Kelly won the hearts of all and he is invited to hold another meeting for us in the near future.

G. D. ANDERS.

DUBACH.

Dear Doctor: We had just finished one of the prettiest church buildings in this section, putting in the last frame, when a storm blew our church from its pillows. We had just started our protracted meeting two days before. This happened June 25, at 3:45 o'clock. We went right on with our meeting. We have had thirty-five to join to date. We commenced at Bernice, Wednesday, July 4, 1906. The Weldon (La.) Baptist Church was blown down at the same time. We are going to put ours up right away. Pray for us. Yours in Christ.

W. T. WOODWARD, P. C.

PARIS CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I would like to have a small space in our paper to make a short report of our work on Paris charge. We are moving on finely, having good services each Sabbath. We have six appointments, four Sunday Schools, all doing fine work. We have one prayer meeting at Paris. I am thankful to say that the prospect for a revival is good. I find my people praying for a sweeping revival on the Paris charge. We are improving our little church at Paris. I think we will have a neat little house of worship when we get it completed. And I am proud to say that we are building a new parsonage at Paris. We have the frame up, and we are going to build one that will be an honor to the little town. We want to fix up our preacher a good home, so when the new preachers get to Paris they will not be ashamed of the parsonage. The parsonage will be built by Tula and Paris. I find my good Tula people always ready to help in any way they can. I want all of the readers of the A41*3(95 to pray for us in our meeting this summer. We need prayers to do this great work.

God bless all of the readers of the dear old A41*3(95.

Your brother in Christ,

D. M. FLOYD.

July 11, 1906.

REVIVAL AT LAKE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Our protracted meeting at Lake began on last Sunday, and closed on Friday, at 11 a. m. Rev. J. R. Jones came on Monday afternoon and could only stay until Wednesday afternoon. Brother H. Mellard came and remained to the close. We had a good meeting. My people were delighted with the two strong young men. I predict great usefulness for both of them.

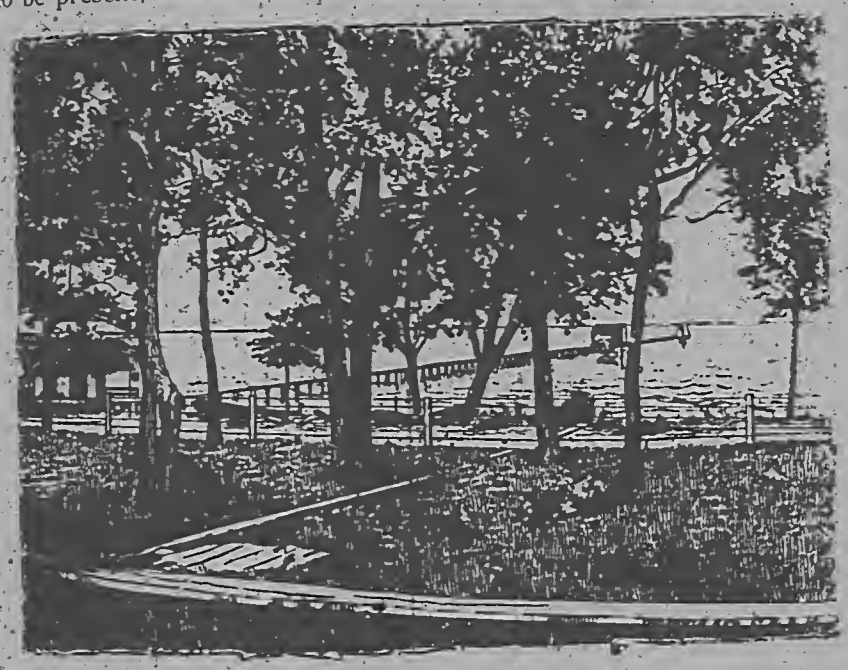
35th Annual Camp Meeting,

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND, JULY 11-19.



The management announce the Thirty-fifth Annual Camp Meeting, Seashore Camp Grounds, commencing Wednesday, July 11th and continuing until about July 20. The cottages and grounds have been put in thorough order, and other improvements made, looking to the comfort and convenience of those who attend this meeting.

The religious services are under the direction of the Presiding Elders of the New Orleans, Seashore and Mobile District Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and these brethren will be assisted by the best preaching talent that can be obtained. It is hoped that one or two of the Bishops will be present; in all probability Bishop Candler.

Preaching under the Tabernacle Grove, Grove and Cottage Prayer Meetings, and other religious services, will be held during each day and evening, to which all persons on the grounds are not only cordially invited, but are expected to attend.

Seashore Epworth League Assembly, July 25 to Aug. 5.

The Seashore Annual Epworth League Assembly will be held on the Seashore Camp Grounds, commencing Wednesday, July 25, and continuing until Aug. 5. Great good has been accomplished by these meetings from year to year, and it is expected that the meeting of this year will yield larger results than yet attained. All Leaguers, young people and others interested, are earnestly and cordially invited to be present, and share in the glorious results.

RAILROAD RATES.

The Louisville and Nashville, and connections within a radius of about 400 miles, will sell round-trip tickets to Seashore Camp Ground (Biloxi) at greatly reduced rates. For detailed information apply to your railroad agent.

LOCATION.

The Seashore Camp Ground is located on the Mississippi Sound, seventy-nine miles from New Orleans and sixty-two miles from Mobile, on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and is one of the most beautiful places on the Gulf Coast. It enjoys a railroad service that is unexcelled for comfort and convenience. A magnificent artesian well furnishes cool and life-giving water from a depth of many hundred feet, and by a perfect system of water works the cottages and hotel are furnished with this water direct from the well. The hotel has a frontage of one hundred and sixty feet on the beach. A multitude of magnificent shade trees temper the noon-day sun, and at night numerous electric lights dispel the darkness and illuminate the roads and pathways that intersect the Grounds. A new pier twelve hundred and forty feet in length, with a Summer house on the end, extends out into the Gulf, and offers positively the most delightful advantages in the South for a promenade. The bathing is unexcelled by any other point on the gulf. All parties residing on the grounds have the privilege of the bath-houses. Good board can be secured at the restaurant, which is in charge of a competent chef, and in private houses at reasonable rates. The comforts and conveniences of all visitors will be carefully looked after.

All Methodist preachers will be admitted into the Grounds, and provided with board and lodging free of charge during Camp Meeting.

Persons wishing to secure accommodations before the rush of opening of Camp Meeting should address communications to R. G. Price, Keeper Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., or any of the undersigned officers.

Some of the labor organizations of the country, if not actually registered as political parties, are preparing to become factors to be reckoned with by the leaders of the dominant parties—Republican and Democratic. Their complaint against Congress for failing to meet their demands embraces at least seven specifications, and wherever Congressmen offer for re-election, they propose to call them to account. Mr. Gompers, President of the Federation of Labor, in an address to the people, says: "We are not organized as a political body, but we shall do all that is within our power to make the country see we are a political factor. We have influence and power in this country, and I am free to make the prediction that when the Sixtieth Congress convenes some of the familiar faces will be missing." In some Congressional districts the labor unions hold the balance of power, and will naturally rally to the man who proclaims himself their friend. The contest will be interesting in several districts.

A great reform has been determined on by the National Convention of Bill Posters, in session last week at Chicago. The bill-posting business is one of great magnitude, as any one might infer by looking at the thousands of glaring pictures on houses, and billboards and dead walls in all our large cities. Many of the pictures are objectionable to good taste. Many are offensive, and not a few are positively indecent. Such things are to offend the public eye no more, if the resolution of the Convention is properly enforced. The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Associated Bill Posters and Distributors of the United States and Canada condemn the use of all sensational, vicious and suggestive pictures and titles for such productions, and hereby instruct all members, under penalty, to refuse to post after the expiration of this season's contracts, Aug. 16, 1906, such paper, titles and pictures as may be deemed objectionable." Let everybody bid god-speed to this reform so ardently desired by our good women for so many years.

Rev. Benjamin W. Laburee, a missionary in Persia, was killed by religious fanatics. The Government of the United States held Persia responsible, and exacted of Persia $50,000 as indemnity. This indemnity was declined by the widow of the murdered missionary. In her letter to the American Minister at Teheran occurs the following unselfish and significant statements as given out from Washington:

"I believe in the great mission cause to which my husband and I dedicated our lives and which has become dearer to me because of the terrible sacrifice I have been called upon to make for it. I believe that his memory may receive serious injury if my children and I accept an indemnity for this murder. The matter would not be understood by the great mass of the people in this district who would inevitably know of it, as the Persian idea of blood money is so different from our civilized understanding of an indemnity.

The M. E. Church, South, at De Ridder, La., Rev. S. L. Riggs, Pastor.

Thus serious and lasting injury might be done to the mission cause for which we have already sacrificed so much that I prefer to waive my rights as an American citizen rather than to see this cause suffer." She further protested against the size of the indemnity, saying that while her husband's life could not be measured in value by the standards prevailing in that country, which fixed the life of the Christian at 33 tomans (dollars), and the maximum value of life of a Moslem at 1,000 tomans, yet the disproportion between the sum demanded in this case with that of sums paid in similar circumstances by other governments was too great. In spite of her protest the Persian Government actually paid her $30,000, a sum three times as large as any sum ever before paid by the Persians for the murder of a private person.

It is not often that a disastrous wreck, or even a slight accident occurs on the railroads of Great Britain, but one a few days ago was very destructive and peculiarly distressing. A steamship just landed, discharged its passengers, and many of them took a fast train for London. This train, going at speed little over a mile a minute, in rounding a curve at Saulsbury, left the track and was literally dashed to pieces. Many passengers were injured, and twenty-seven instantly killed. All those killed were Americans. The coroner's inquest into the cause of the wreck resulted in a verdict to the effect that the derailment was due to the high speed at which the train was running, and which was contrary to the company's orders. The jury declined to allow the verdict to be recorded as one of accidental death, saying they considered that a certain amount of blame attached to the company, as well as to the engineer."

There is a little war on in the Central American Republics—the combatants being Guatemala, Salvador and Honduras—the two last-named being allied against Guatemala. These Republics are so frequently "at outs" with each other, threatening bloodshed, that a move for revolution creates but little excitement. The present war, however, has aroused interest, one or two engagements having taken place, resulting in the killing of several soldiers, among them one general. The nature of the trouble now on hand we do not exactly understand, but it is of such magnitude as to call for friendly intervention. In this matter, the United States will extend its friendly offices, which, it is said, will be accepted, and a "peace will be patched up." A dispatch to Washington announces that Honduras is willing to disarm and submit to arbitration as soon as the two other Republics agree to do likewise. It is understood also that Guatemala and Salvador are willing to enter into negotiations.

There is in the heart a longing after something this world can never give—which God never designed it to give. Otherwise, those who have reached the goal of their ambition, whether for place and power, or fame, or earthly gain, would be among the happiest of men. But they are often the most miserable. Only that which God supplies through grace can satisfy an immortal soul.

THE DE RIDDER CHARGE.

The De Ridder Charge, while only recently organized, deserves the attention and sympathy of the whole body of Methodists of the Louisiana Conference.

When at Lake Charles, in December, 1904, De Ridder was made a station and I was appointed as the pastor, we had forty-four members and no church nor parsonage. This was a new town. About seven years since the first settlers made it a station on the Kansas City Southern Railroad. It had rapid growth in all lines, having a splendid saw mill, and another one about a mile above town. During the spring of 1903 the business section of the place was destroyed by fire, and every business house had to be rebuilt. The owners pressed themselves to put in fireproof buildings and start their business over again. Necessarily, most of our men borrowed money to run their business on. Not having any schools or churches, they met in borrowed halls and vacant houses. During the summer of 1904 they built a schoolhouse, costing $7,000, which is a credit for a town five times its size in inhabitants.

During 1905 the Methodists, with faith in the people at home and abroad, attempted to erect a house of worship. Just as the contracts for materials and building were let, the quarantine was put on, and all know we had considerable fever here, and not a train stopped at our station until the 19th of November. We struggled with the building of the church, and pushed the work as fast as possible, for we could not revoke our contracts. The building was completed Dec. 1, 1905, at a cost of $3,500. The two lots on which it was built were donated. They are valued at $1,000, and made the property worth, at the time of completion of the church, about $4,500, and is becoming more valuable each month. Other fixtures have been added since.

We now owe on this building $1,000, and have another note due next November, on furniture, of $175, making a total debt of $1,175. We are renting a parsonage at $12 per month, and the ladies have furnished it at a cost of about $300, which is nearly paid out. They are struggling on their part of the work all the time.

We have plenty of ground in connection with the church to build a parsonage on, when we have lifted the debt off the church.

There are on the register ninety-eight members; the church is creditably organized in every department. While trying to pay their pastor $50 a month, they are working hard to lift the other claims upon them at the same time. Any churchman can see we need help.

Now, we are asking 200 persons to give us $5 each, and this amount will be raised, and no one oppressed. Lake Charles has helped us to the extent of $150; Leesville, $45. Cannot other established churches help us a little?

We have one of the prettiest churches in the Louisiana Conference—not out of reason, but a credit to the prospects we have at this point. The Santa Fe Railroad crosses here en route to New Orleans from the West, and the Long-Bell Lumber Company is putting in a road from here to Lake Charles, connecting five of her saw mill plants, thus giving all the railroad facilities a place of this size could desire.

By legislative act the sale of intoxicating drinks and gambling are prohibited within four miles of the High School grounds. Prohibition also prevails in our ward of this parish. The health of the place is most excellent, and with these advantages we have a very hopeful and promising future.

With some help, we would be able to stand alone another year, and will give to Conference one of the best charges among rural towns of the State. Very respectfully,

S. L. Riggs, P. C.

A QUERY.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I notice in the proceedings of the Meridian District Conference that a resolution was adopted requesting the various Conference Boards "to confer at the next Annual Conference on the advisability of holding at the same time and place the Epworth League Conference, the Sunday-school Conference, and the Mid-Year Missionary Meeting." The same thing has been suggested before, and I wish to ask, why this desire on the part of the brethren to do away with our series of Sunday-school Institutes? Have they accomplished nothing? Was it unwise in the Sunday-school Board to inaugurate them in the first place?

At the session of the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Institute, held at Columbia in May, a communication was received from the Epworth League Convention held at McComb a few days earlier, suggesting the same plan of consolidation. That communication was respectfully tabled, because we believed that the institute was the best method of reaching the Sunday-school workers. That is our object—to stir the Sunday-school waters to keep them from stagnating, to teach better methods of work, and to build up a better Sunday-school spirit. To accomplish these results we must reach the lay workers. The ministry already has, or ought to have, the proper Sunday-school spirit. To that end we have carried the Institute to different portions of the Conference, to place them within reach of all, and to give all Sunday-school workers the benefit of the masterful teaching of Dr. and Mrs. Hamill. We thought the institutes were doing a good work, but now comes the suggestion from various sources that we do away with them altogether.

Would the mid-year union meeting reach the lay workers? From my experience with institutes and conventions, I think not. And I watched the efforts of our North Mississippi brethren carefully, and read the report of the meeting at Grenada with great interest. It was a "great assembly, masterful addresses, fine papers," etc., but how about the attendance of lay workers from the Sunday-schools and Leagues? Not a word was said on that point, and I venture the assertion that not one-tenth as many lay Sunday-school workers attended the Grenada meeting as attended the last institute held by the North Mississippi Conference at Winona. If I am wrong in this, I hope Brother Jaco will set me right.

But I am open to conviction; if I am wrong I wish to be set right; if there is any good reason for the consolidation I would like to hear it. It looks to me to be too much of a mixture to be of real service.

N. A. Mott.

[Note by the Editor]—Our Discipline recommends the holding of a "Sunday-School Conference, or Institute," in each presiding elder's district. It also recommends "a Conference Sunday-school Convention, or Institute, be held annually within the bounds of the Conference." If we understand, it is the Conference Convention the brethren desire consolidated with other mid-year meetings. Such consolidation need not interfere with the District Institutes. Are we right in this?

BROTHER BINGHAM'S PROTEST

Dear Doctor Boswell: In last week's Advocate appeared an article by an "Interested Methodist," i.e., "Brother Blank's Predicament." At the time I read it with interest, though possibly a little hastily, and endorsed it.

To-day I read "A Protest" by Brother J. R. Bingham.

Now, I wish to say that for the last eighteen years I have admired Brother Bingham and held his opinions in great respect. He always speaks respectfully and to the point. Hence of course he is entitled to his opinion and a respectful hearing. Who will say that he has not thus far received a respectful hearing along with others? Then I cannot see why he protests. To-day I also re-read "Brother Blank's Predicament" and frankly confess that I see no reason why it should be rejected and laid away in the rubbish of the editorial temple; except the protest be aimed at the closing lines, quoted from Bobby Burns. Is that his protest? Surely Brother Bingham does not object to free discussion!

The manner in which this whole matter of "revision" was introduced, i.e. without warning, when the church was quiet and at rest, startled all Israel and caused the nerves of that great man of God, Bishop Wilson, to twitch.

The whole thing is unworthy of its author and the great trust committed by a great church to his hands.

Turn on the light, Mr. Editor, that Israel may see her way. As a subscriber to the New Orleans Advocate, and a member in good standing of one of the patronizing Conferences, I protest against the rejection of such respectful and respectable papers as "Brother Blank's Predicament." A brother who does not like unpleasant predicaments should not rush into questionable predicaments.

Stealth may become Cæsar under some circumstances, but under no circumstances does it become the subjects of Christ's Kingdom.

Cordially and respectfully,

H. C. Edmondson.

THE EDITOR INDORSED.

My Dear Dr. Boswell: I have just read Mr. J. R. Bingham's "Protest," in your issue of the 5th inst., and I also read his former letter, to which he makes reference.

It is my custom to move swiftly to the support of any position that Mr. Bingham may assume, being impelled thereto by the deepest sentiments that can ever inspire my conduct. Furthermore, I have that respect for his opinions which his high character, large intelligence and Christian manhood so richly merit. Therefore, it is with very great reluctance that I oppose my opinion to his in this instance.

It is claimed by many gentlemen in our connection, both clergymen and laymen, who are held in the highest esteem for their piety and learning, that this matter of creed revision is a serious mistake, into which we have been forced without proper discussion before the meeting of the General Conference.

I feel reasonably sure that Mr. Bingham and I can do fairly well with any creed that may result, but there is a large number of good people who, it is claimed by thoughtful men, will be greatly troubled. Our leading men in the ministry will probably experience little difficulty, but it is "the boys in the trenches" who will bear the brunt of the battle.

We have been proceeding for a hundred years under the impression that Wesley was little less than inspired in all that he gave to Methodism, but now, in the twinkling of an eye, and without warning, the flag of repudiation is flung to the breeze.

Since we had no discussion prior to the meeting of the General Conference, it seems to me that simple justice demands a free and full discussion at this time. Such a discussion should develop the source from which the demand for creed revision springs—it will then be less difficult to trace the meanderings of this stream of theological error.

I do not possess the theological equipment, nor am I disposed to discuss the main question, viz., creed revision, but I believe in the doctrine of fair play; therefore, I indorse your policy of opening your columns to this discussion.

Truly yours,

J. D. BARBEE, JR.

LETTER FROM OKLAHOMA.

Dear Brother—We have been anxiously expecting to see an obituary of our beloved and aged Brother Thomas Raynham, of St. Francisville, La., in the ADVOCATE, but up to this date it has not appeared. Doubtless because of his infirm condition for a number of years he has not been able to take the active part in church work he used to take, for that reason is not so well known to the present pastor at St. Francisville as he was to us older preachers who served Bayou Sara Circuit some twenty-five years ago. In those days Brother Raynham was one of the two most solid supporters of the preachers and Methodism in all that country; his home was headquarters for the weary itinerants and the delegates to the different conferences held in their little city. The families of Brothers Raynham, Town and Garnett for over fifty years were the backbone of Methodism in Bayou Sara, and the integrity and solidity of their characters are vouched for by every good citizen of the neighborhood.

Bro. Raynham was first a member of the Episcopal Church and then a Wesleyan Methodist in England before coming to America. A peculiar incident occurred as he was visiting some friends directly before leaving England for America. They remarked to him that they had a friend by the name of Garnett who had emigrated to America, whom they wished to be remembered to if he should meet him in the new country; rather strange to tell, not long after Bro. Raynham reached Bayou Sara among his first visitors was Bro. Garnett, who proved to be a member of the same church and a devoted friend through life. Bro. Raynham was married in England to Miss Maria Town of Kent, who bore him nine children, three of whom survive him, Thomas W. Raynham, a merchant of St. Francisville; Miss Sallie Raynham, a teacher of long standing, and Mrs. H. R. Bradford of Golden, Oklahoma, who is a missionary worker with her husband on the border.

Many of the preachers will also recall Sister Lizzie Flowers of St. Francisville and Crystal Springs, the white winged spirit who had so many friends in both places, and who died at Monteagle in 1892.

One of the remarkable incidents of Bro. Raynham's life was his second marriage to Mrs. Mary Garnett in 1882. Though she was a devout Catholic and he a devoted Methodist, they lived together in perfect harmony until her death on the 5th of May, 1900. Sister Raynham was always the sweet tempered wife and faithful helpmeet through his last long illness, when at times his sufferings appeared so great that the family feared the dethronement of reason.

His largely attended funeral by the most respected citizens of St. Francisville, consisting of all denominations, and of the Masons and Confederate veterans, both of which orders he was an honored member, attest the appreciation of his associates.

A beautiful tribute to his worthy character and life-long integrity appeared in the Free Democrat of May the 12th, written by Mrs. Leake, the editor. Also an In Memoriam by the members of the Masonic lodge of which he was a member.

Well may it be said of him:

"Servant of God, well done!"

A STUDY IN STATISTICS.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference for 1905 afford an interesting study in statistics.

We Methodists are a great folk for figures, and a certain high authority gives us no little praise for our care and accuracy in numbering the Methodist hosts. Now, "praise is comely for the upright," and acceptable to everybody, but if it is our due in this instance it is because we have surpassed someone else, and not because we have approximated perfection in our method of reckoning or in our knowledge of addition and subtraction. A very cursory examination of almost any copy of Annual Conference Minutes will demonstrate this much.

A case in point is found in any of the districts, or, for that matter, in reports of practically each separate charge in the Conference; but we cite Boyce, of Alexandria District. In 1904 this place was credited with 414 members. During 1905 there were 36 additions and 6 removals, or a net gain of 30; but the Minutes for 1905 only allow a membership of 275, a loss of 139, in place of our expected gain of 30. Of course, there is the usual explanation, that the circuit had been divided, part of Boyce appearing in the report from another charge. If so, what then of the report for the entire district? But the same discrepancy appears there also. In 1904 Alexandria District had 14 pastoral charges and 4345 members, or, to be accurate, 4335 members, for there was an error in adding up the column. The following year 483 names were added to the rolls and 182 removed, and yet the total membership is decreased to 3721. A clear gain of 301 is converted into a loss of 624.

Such handling of facts and figures is enough to make one think that we are on the verge of losing our distinguishing and distinguished title of Methodists, and fast becoming poor, inoffensive Episcopalians. Nor is the result any more satisfactory if we consider the Conference as a whole. At the end of 1904 we had 32,308 names on our rolls. The following year we received 3596 new members and dismissed 1741, leaving us a seeming gain of 1855. But things are not what they seem, for our Conference minutes show a total loss of 160 members. And once more things are shown not to be what they seem, for the Minutes are wrong! The original mistake appears in the Minutes for 1904. Crowley District was credited with 5256 members, a glaring blunder of an even thousand, as anyone can prove by adding up the column. The total should have been 4256 for the district, and 31,308 for the entire Conference, with a gain of 1502, instead of 2,502, as the Minutes have it.

Nor is this correct. In the Minutes for 1904 Monroe District is credited with 2877 members, a mistake of one, and Alexandria is given 4345 members, or 10 too many, both owing to errors in addition. Subtracting 11 from 31,308, we have 31,297 for the total membership.

But the same man must have added up the columns in 1905, for Shreveport ought to have 4722 members, or 200 less than the Minutes allow. Deducting this from 32,148 we have 31,948 members for 1905. Now, then, subtracting 31,297, the total for 1904, from 31,948, the total for 1905, it is evident that we had a net gain last year of 651 members, a fairly creditable showing, and not a loss of 160, as we had been led to believe.

Such a discovery of progress is sufficient ground for rejoicing. N. E. JOYNER.

FANNIE ELIZABETH LAGRONE.

Fannie Elizabeth Lagrone, (nee Hall), was born in Tallidega, Ala., July 4, 1854, and was married to Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Jan. 7, 1869. She professed religion and joined the church in August, 1870. Eleven children were born to this devout couple. Four of these preceded her to the good world and seven of them yet remain, but they are on the way home.

In 1872 Brother Lagrone, with a young wife, was admitted on trial into the traveling connection by the North Mississippi Conference.

Sister Lagrone was a devout, consecrated, holy-hearted Christian woman. She was distinguished for her amiability, gentleness, and self-sacrificing spirit for the good of others. It was her chief joy to make other people happy. For thirty-six years she stayed at home; reared her large family and took care of everything while her husband went abroad proclaiming the Gospel of God. His remarkably active and singularly successful ministry was made possible by the diligence and self-sacrifice of his most excellent wife. She has been crowned first, as she richly deserved to be.

The last six or seven years were particularly trying to Sister Lagrone. He was presiding elder and absent from home more than half of the time, and this entailed a heavy burden on her which was cheerfully borne. While greatly interested in the work of the church, she could not take an active part in it. Her cares and duties at home were too exacting to allow of public and active part in the work of the societies. She paid her dues and gave what help she could. The sick, the poor and needy always found a tender, sympathizing friend in Sister Lagrone. She was a splendid neighbor—she always helped those in need. No wonder she was ready when the end came.

The end came suddenly, though not entirely unexpectedly, on June 12, 1906. On June 13, her body was laid to rest in the cemetery in Winona, Miss. Six or seven of the preachers of the Conference mourned with Brother Lagrone around this cave of Machpelah, henceforth a sacred spot to him and his children.

A faithful woman, the right hand of her husband and the best friend of her children, now rests at peace in the bosom of God.

AN APPRECIATION.

On Wednesday, June 13, we buried at Winona, Miss., Mrs. W. S. Lagrone, who for thirty-five years had borne the hardships and privations incident to the Methodist itinerancy. She was born in July, 1854, in Tallidega, Ala., but nearly all her life was spent in Mississippi.

She was very averse to publicity but found her true sphere in the home. She had no patience with what the world calls the "new woman." She asked no greater privilege than to serve those she loved. Her husband served every grade of appointment in his Conference and she was a great help to him. She did not ask for larger liberties and a wider field of action, but was content to stay at home and exert her energies in behalf of her family. Many lonely hours she saw pass by when her husband was away from home, but she did not complain.

She had not been in robust health for a year or two. For a month or more she had been a little more complaining than usual. On the morning of June 12, her husband heard her breathing in a labored way and spoke to her. She did not respond, and he called to her again and there was no response. He lifted her up; her head fell back upon his own, and she was dead. God touched her and she slept. She was buried at Winona beside her little boy, who was buried there a number of years ago.

Rev. R. A. Meek conducted the funeral service and other preachers taking part in the service were G. W. Bachman, J. E. Thomas, T. H. Dorsey, T. H. Porter and the writer.

Sister Lagrone leaves seven children to mourn her death. The Cleveland parsonage has been a sad place since her going away, but the God whom she served while alive is able to comfort and soothe the hearts made sad by her death.

REVIVAL AT COFFEEVILLE, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: The fourth Sunday in June I began a meeting with Brother D. C. Foust, at Coffeeville, Miss. We continued ten days. The attendance was good both day and night. Most of the merchants closed their places of business and attended the services. We have had a fine meeting. Quite a number of conversions and additions. Our congregations were largely made up of Baptists and Presbyterians, hence many of the converts will join those churches. A good work was done in building up the different churches spiritually. Coffeeville cannot be called a Methodist town, yet our church has some good people there. I have often helped Bro. Foust in his revivals and always enjoyed it. He is a good man, a good preacher and pastor, competent to fill a good work.

I am staying at home now with a sick mother. Shall spend the Summer and Fall in revivals on circuits. Could make a few more engagements with pastors. There is too much of a tendency nowadays to neglect the country. It is just as important to save the people of the country as it is those of towns and cities. It is sometimes said that men of my work confine themselves to towns only, but I have never so done. It is true that the greatest revivals I have ever conducted, in point of numbers added to the church, have been in connection with our pastors serving stations. But I am always glad when Summer comes, so I can get out into the country churches, and help in the "big meetings." Because a man holds revivals in the country, or serves as a pastor on a circuit, is no sign that he is not competent to do acceptable town work. Many of our best preachers are on circuits and could fill our stations equally as well as many of those who do fill them.

Of course, any place to preach the Gospel is a good place, and should be so considered by all. It is an admitted fact that there are some pastors who are not fitted for the work in our larger towns and cities, and these brethren know it themselves; they don't want city work, but are contented and happy filling the hardest circuits and missions. But this is not applicable to all of our circuit pastors. If some of our circuit preachers were put into stations and some of our town preachers put on circuits, many of our congregations would never recognize any objectionable difference. But both the ministry and the church would be helped thereby.

Our church does not need any restatement of our faith, if it could be done without overturning our constitution. There is no demand for it on the part of our church, but we need a re-living of the faith and doctrines as given us by our fathers. We need smaller districts, and strong men as presiding elders to develop them. We need more preachers and better preachers. We need a deeper work of consecration in the lives of our people. There is great demand for all of these things. May the good Lord give them to us. Truly.

BROTHER BLANK'S PREDICAMENT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Brother Bingham objects to such articles as "Brother Blank's Predicament" because they upset his idea. Indeed he objects to an article against the new-creed idea from any source, however "graceful" it may be written.

But free speech has not yet been denied American Methodists, especially when they speak in defense of law. A new creed cannot be written lawfully.

An old Roman once said, "I have broken the law, but I saved the state." It is admitted that the recent General Conference broke the law, but it is questioned whether its action will save the state. Some are apprehensive at that point.

WOODVILLE, EDWARD McGEHEE COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT AND ELSE.

At 11 a.m. on Sunday, the 24th ultimo, Dr. W. B. Murrah, President of Millsaps College, preached the commencement sermon from the chapel rostrum for Edward McGehee College to a representative, interested and, I trust, a profited audience. "The Profitableness of Godliness" was the well chosen theme. How appropriate and timely such a subject! Especially on commencement occasions when the vitiated public sentiment clamors for tropes and figures, songs of mocking-birds, and flights of frenzied fancy, as far removed from Gospel preaching as the east is from the west. The sermon was packed with sound theology and scriptural truths, and was delivered with characteristic ease, grace, and elegance of diction.

On Tuesday at 11 a.m., June the 26th, Rev. Richard Wilkinson, of the Louisiana Conference, now stationed at Monroe, La., delivered the baccalaureate address. His subject was "The Economics of Education." The address was up to high water mark, in point of learning and sustained eloquence. Brother Wilkinson's audience surprised him greatly, when, at the close of his impassioned address, the people gathered about him in groups, biding their time to give him their hands, expressive of their enthusiastic appreciation as well as their comprehension of his learned discourse.

The writer was an interested observer and psychological student on the occasion. Diplomas were delivered to two worthy young ladies, viz.: Miss Hattie Casey and Miss Mamie White. The college exercises were exceptionally well attended from start to finish. On the night of the student's recital the people went to the chapel through a driving rain.

The session was one of laborious, persevering effort. It is questioned if superior classwork has ever been done in the history of the institution. The president, Miss Swanson, is hopeful of yet larger and more satisfactory results the coming session. Her wonderful sagacity is never more eminently displayed than in the selection of a faculty. Wisdom, prudence, and discretion of high order has characterized her former selections, and the patrons feel well assured that the same care will be exercised still. Thorough qualification and Christian character are the demands which Miss Swanson makes of those whom she employs to teach.

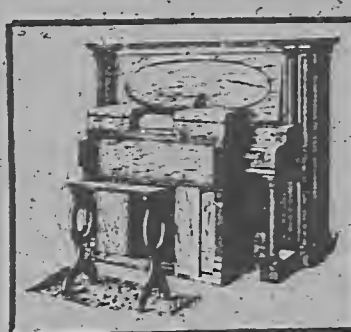
The school is distinctly Christian in everything but not specifically sectarian in anything, and yet it is a pronouncedly Methodist school. The discipline is not rigorous, but firm and decisive.

We bespeak for the school the patronage which the geography of the territory naturally suggests that it should have.

The next session will open (D. V.) Sept. 15, 1906.

On Sunday, July 8, at 11 a.m., Bishop Galloway gave us a rare treat in a sermon of fervid eloquence, magnetic power, and world-wide sweep, on the "Transforming Power of Christianity."

At 6:30 o'clock Grandma Lewis died. It was fitting that a life of such great length and superior consecration should come to its close on Sunday. If she had lived until November she would have been 94 years of age.



The writer, assisted by Bishop Galloway, conducted the funeral ceremony in the Methodist church in the presence of a large and sympathetic congregation. The Bishop's remarks were felicitous, reminiscencial, and inspiring.

Woodville Methodism has sustained some great losses during the year. Captain George McGehee, a scholar of breadth, a graduate of Yale, an omnivorous reader, and withal a knowing man, has gone from among us. Many of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi retain delightful memories of Capt. George McGehee. Col. R. M. McGehee, familiarly known as "Capt. Bob," the most popular, and in some particulars, the most influential man in the county, is no longer here to greet us and scatter sunshine along every man's pathway. Grandma Lewis, after a long and useful life given to others, to the church and her Lord, has gone to her reward, but the aroma of her life will linger about Woodville, lo, these many years. A suitable memoir of Grandma will be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Rev. H. D. Howell, justly called by many "the old man eloquent," together with his aged wife, sojourned recently with the occupants of the Woodville Methodist parsonage, giving us great pleasure. Bro. Howell preached for us on a recent Sunday a sermon which would have done credit to a Bishop in his prime. I have heard but few preachers whose grasp of the truth is superior to Brother Howell's. May God abundantly bless these old saints, and give them a sunset without a fleck or cloud to overshadow.

Cordially and fraternally,

C. A. POWELL.

GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-seventh session of the Grenada District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Oxford on July 6, with Rev. S. M. Thames, P. E., in the chair. All pastors excepting two were present, and quite a good attendance of laymen. Several revivals had been held with a net increase of more than 250 added to the church. The charges yet to hold revival services reported prospects good. They were praying to that end.

Four young men were granted license to preach: one recommended for admission on trial, and one for re-admission.

Prof. W. L. Clifton and Dr. J. M. Sullivan represented their respective colleges. Rev. J. W. Raper spoke in the interest of the Endowment Fund.

The preaching was done by Revs. R. H. B. Gladney, A. H. Williams, W. W. Woollard, and B. P. Jaco.

G. D. Shands, A. R. Bogard, R. F. Cole and S. S. Spencer were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; J. M. Wyatt, J. G. McGowan, reserves. The next Conference goes to Coffeeville. S. S. SPENCER, Sec'y.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY MEETING.

On Thursday July 5, one day in advance of the session of the Grenada District Conference, there was held in the Methodist Church in Oxford a joint meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Societies, presided over by Mrs. W. W. Woollard, District Secretary of the Foreign, and Mrs. L. K. Butler, District Secretary of the Home Mission Society.

This meeting proved quite a success, and proved very helpful to those present. Much information concerning the societies was imparted. The women are thoroughly aroused and deeply in earnest for the cause of missions. Mrs. Evans gave quite an interesting talk on the Board meeting; Mrs. J. M. Wyatt read a very interesting paper on "Why send the Gospel to the Heathen Women?" A paper on "Christ the Need of the World" was read by Mrs. S. S. Spencer for the author, who was prevented from attending, and I understand desires her name withheld.

The reports from the different societies were quite interesting. I do not now recall the amount of the collections for the year, but the report from the Oxford society impressed me very much. They reported over $700 collected for the year. This report stated the amount paid out, and wound up this way: "We have in the hands of the treasurer $230, and $14 worth of goods in the hands of the sewing circle."

I thought, as I heard this, that it would be interesting at the end of time to know just what part the needle and thread had played in the work of the world's redemption.

S. S. SPENCER.

FAILURE OF EFFORT TO CORRELATE WHITWORTH AND PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGES.

Inasmuch as Port Gibson Female College has suffered somewhat on account of the idea that got abroad that it was a preparatory school only, I think it but just that a few statements covering the facts in the case be made by myself, as the author of the recent revisions of the curricula of both Whitworth and Port Gibson Female Colleges. It was my policy, when Brother Cooper and myself first took charge of the Port Gibson College, to offer, as an encouragement to students to attend Port Gibson, the opportunity of graduating there in an M. E. L. course easier than the Whitworth A. B., so that, if the student, through lack of means or time, could not go to school longer, she would already be assured of a fair training and have an alma mater, but offering, too, the idea that, if a student with this M. E. L. wished to proceed with her studies until she could get the A. B. degree, she might go to Whitworth and take A. B. just as soon as if she had gone there at first, with some advantage, too, on account of a reduction to be given her in rate.

But, it soon became evident that this effort at correlation could not succeed for two reasons: (1.) This plan meant that Port Gibson was giving up its advanced work and would appear as preparatory to the other college, whereas the other school was giving nothing in return, inasmuch as it was not in position to give up its preparatory department in which about half its students are enrolled. (2.) There was no disposition on the part of Port Gibson students to work with Whitworth in view as a place for further study.

For these reasons, it began to appear that Port Gibson's interests were to be subserved by strengthening its course of study; and the most recent revisions look in that direction, the M. E. L. being still retained, but the A. B. degree being resumed. There will be an A. B. class at Port Gibson during the session of 1906-07, though students have to be brought up by degrees to the full requirements as laid down in the catalogue, according to the same policy adopted at Whitworth when we took charge there four years ago.

It was our original plan to administer Port Gibson through a lady principal; but, though our lady principal during the past session showed remarkable ability, it has been deemed wise for the school to have a man in charge and on the grounds. For this reason, and to prevent further complications, I have moved to Port Gibson; and steps are being taken by which the definite connection and correlation of the two schools are to be discontinued, at least until times and circumstances shall have changed.

SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-sixth session of the Sardis District Conference, North Mississippi Annual Conference, convened in the M. E. Church, South, Hernando, Miss., July 10-13, 1906; Rev. H. T. Gaines, P. E., presiding.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix was with us the first day. He preached at 11 a. m. a strong and impressive sermon, after which he dedicated the beautiful new brick church. He presided over the evening service, but on account of pressing engagements, was compelled to leave that evening, to the regret of all.

The attendance was fairly good, all of the preachers being present except two, but the attendance among the laity was not as good as it should have been. The religious feature was given prominence, and earnest sermons were preached by H. T. Gaines, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, S. A. Brown, J. W. Raper, J. T. Murrah and J. A. Hall.

Among the visitors to this Conference were G. W. Bachman, with "the books;" Prof. J. M. Sullivan, representing Millsaps College; Prof. Clifton, President Grenada Female College; J. W. Raper, representing the Superannuate Endowment Fund, who made impressive talks on the respective interests, as represented by them.

Lay delegates elected to the Annual Conference: P. T. Callicott, E. C. Holmes, N. E. Wilroy, and I. Sam Hinton.

Licensing Committee for current year: W. W. Mitchell, J. A. Hall, J. T. Murrah, and R. O. Brown.

The entire day (Friday) was given over to the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies.

Hernando entertained with open doors, open hearts, and lavish hospitality. All the interests of the church were well looked after and thoroughly discussed, and not a jar, or note of discord was heard during the session of the Conference, and all are hoping and praying that we may have the most prosperous year in the Sardis District that we have had for years.

Next District Conference goes to Byhalia.

HOW BENNIE RAN AWAY.

"Come, Bennie, you must go to bed," said Nurse Nora.

"Don't want to," returned Bennie, scowling his baby brow.

"But you must. It's half-past seven."

"Don't care. Me run away."

This was a common threat of the little boy. Ever since he could talk he had made use of it, until his mother and Nora had ceased to pay any attention to the words, hoping that he would forget them as he grew older.

So Nora said, cheerfully: "I'll get some nice cold water, for you, and then take off your hot clothes, and put you in your little bed."

It had been a hot day, and perhaps that was why Bennie was not as good-tempered as usual.

"Will run away!" he said, after Nora had gone. He stamped his little foot, knocking over a fort which Nora had just made with his building-blocks.

Then he clambered down the porch steps, slipped through a hole in the hedge, and ran over to a vacant lot where there were some trees and rocks, as fast as his chubby legs would carry him.

"Me bad boy," he kept saying to himself. "Me running away."

Meanwhile there was trouble in the house. When Nora returned with the water she looked for the child in the garden, dining-room, and parlor; then, becoming anxious, she called her mistress.

"O, ma'am," she cried, "I can't find Master Bennie anywhere. Is he upstairs with you, ma'am?"

"Why, no," said Bennie's mother, taking alarm at once. "Where did you leave him?"

"He was playing on the porch, ma'am, and I went to get him some water, and when I got back he was gone. He didn't want to go to bed, and said he'd run away."

"Then he has done it at last!" wailed the mother. "O, my baby, my baby! Nora, run! You go one way and I the other! O, my baby!"

After looking in vain for him at the neighbors' and along the street, the two women returned to the house. Darkness had fallen, and the thought of the dear little fellow wandering alone in the night made them both weep.

"O, what shall we do?" moaned the mother. "If his father were only here! We must get the neighbors to help us look for him with lanterns."

Just then a little noise at the back door sent them running to the back of the house, where, to their great joy, they saw Bennie toiling wearily up the steps.

"Mamma, mamma!" he was crying, and when he felt his mother's loving arms around him, he sobbed as if his little heart would break.

"There, there, Bennie," his mother said, comfortingly, "don't cry any more. You're safe with mother now. Where did you go, darling?"

"O mamma," he said, between his sobs, "I runned away. I was bad. I didn't want to go to bed, and I was going to hide where Nora, nor you, nor anybody couldn't find me. But it was awful dark, and nen the angels lighted all their lanterns up there in the sky," pointing with his forefinger, "and found me out, and nen—and nen—I got scared and runned home. I wanted mamma."

"Yes, darling, and mamma wanted her little boy. Bennie must promise not to run away again and make mamma cry."

"Did you cry, mamma? Poor mamma!" patting her cheek with his soft hand.

"Yes, and poor Nora, too. Aren't you sorry for her?"

"Poor Nora!" he repeated, holding out his baby hand to her. She kissed it, and he said, graciously, "Now, you may put me to bed."

So mother and nurse undressed and bathed him and laid him lovingly in his little white bed. Then they watched beside him until sweet sleep closed his eyes, their hearts filled with gratitude to the good God who had let no harm come to their darling while he had "runned away."—Lida C. Tulloch.

COMFORTABLE PEOPLE.

"I overheard a bit of a conversation the other day, which set me thinking," said Aunt Margaret, one evening. "Two ladies in the seat in front of me were discussing a neighbor. 'She is the best housekeeper I ever knew,' said one. 'Her house is always immaculate; her bread always sweet and light, and her cake never fails.' 'I know,' replied the other; 'but for all that she isn't what I call a comfortable person to live with. She seems to feel a great deal more virtuous if the house is spotlessly clean from top to bottom, even if she is so tired that she simply cannot help being irritable, than she does if she can see a speck of dust or a finger-mark somewhere. It does seem to me that people ought to try to be comfortable.'

"I've thought of that a good deal since then, and I think she is right. It isn't enough to strive to be patient and unselfish, and all that. We ought also to make a special effort to be 'comfortable' people. Don't you remember the old man who said of his neighbor's wife: 'She's a powerful good woman, but I've known heaps o'wuss ones who were pleasanter to live with?' We get set in our own ways; we acquire little vexatious habits; we think because they are not what could be called sinful acts that we have a perfect right to indulge in them if we please. But if they make us uncomfortable to those about us, isn't there something wrong about them? Somebody says that we have not fulfilled every duty unless we have fulfilled that of being pleasant, and I take it pleasant ways are meant as well as pleasant words.

"We complain of other people's ways vexing us when doubtless we have habits which try them. 'Johnnie's an orful selfish boy,' wailed Mamie. 'He took the very biggest apple, and I wanted it myself.' 'I don't mind disappointing other people,' said Tony Lumpkins, 'but I can't abide being disappointed myself.' We need to apply the Golden Rule to our everyday life. I think, and strive to cultivate in ourselves the virtues we desire other people to possess.

"And remember, while it is very pleasant to be accomplished, a large proportion of our life is commonplace. I recollect visiting an old school friend, and she was telling me about her daughters, all of whom happened to be away from home. One was a great scholar, the valedictorian of her class; another was a fine musician; and one was quite an artist. 'But Sadie's the bestest of all,' exclaimed her little son, eagerly. 'I don't care if she can't do things like the others, she's always glad as she can be when a fellow is happy; and she says: "Oh, dear!" so sorry-like when you're in trouble.' Sadie was a 'comfortable person,' you see; she had a heart of leisure from itself, and that, I am coming to feel, is more to be desired than almost anything else in the world.

"It is in the commonplace, everyday life that we lose or win the battle of life, I am sure. 'Just where you are,' Doctor Babcock said, 'take the things of life as tools, and use them for God's glory; so you will help the kingdom come, and the Master will use the things of life in cutting and polishing you so that there shall some day be seen in you a soul conformed to his likeness.'"—Kate S. Gates, in Zion's Herald.

OVER THE TELEPHONE.

As the light from Number 340—M flashed up, the telephone girl sighed impatiently. Even "hello girls" are tired sometimes, though we think of them as part of the electric apparatus. Today Central was tired; her head ached; she had just succeeded, after repeated calls, in getting the number wanted by 340—M, and here they were, calling her up again! "Can't that woman be quiet a minute?" soliloquized Central while she reiterater; "Number, please?" trying to speak crossly. "Central," said a pleasant voice, "I want to thank you for taking so much trouble to get me that last number. You are always very kind and obliging, and I do appreciate it." The surprise was so great, so overwhelming, that Central could only murmur confusedly, "I—O—yes, ma'am." Nothing like this had ever happened before. Suddenly her headache was better; suddenly the day was brighter; suddenly, too, there came a lump in her throat, and she reached for her handkerchief. It was so good to be thanked!—Congregationalist.

No man works greater harm to his country than the one who, though he may not violate the law himself, inspires contempt for the law in others. Contempt will breed disobedience, and a whole crop of lawless hoodlums will be the outcome.

Was there any politics in the late General Conference at Birmingham? It has been so intimated, and it was advanced as the reason, by a reporter for a daily paper, why fuller reports were given of it than of a bigger convention in session at the same time. Was there such a scramble for office as to justify the reporter in looking upon us as a political body? We are not so persuaded.

Some of the brethren of the Christian order are coming at last to see the worth of a written creed. One of them, in answer to an appeal by a congregation struggling to build a house of worship, thus responds: "I will give $20 or more to help build a churchhouse in ——— for the use of those loyal to the Scriptures, provided the creed is put in the deed, so the digressives can never capture it." That is progress!

One who has been preaching twenty years and more should have sufficient command of language to be able to get rid of the "chunk-words" of his early days, such as "we find," and "coming a little further down we find," "along this line," etc. In recent months we have heard one of these expressions as often as twenty-five or thirty times in one short sermon. The worth of the discourse is largely destroyed by the constant repetition of the same words.

As a rule, we are never much interested in knowing that persons change from one church to another, but as it has been predicted that many Cumberland Presbyterians will seek other communions rather than accede to the union of their church with the Northern Presbyterians, and as we have just learned that one young man has already gone into another church and received authority to preach, we would be pleased to know how many feel compelled to seek another fold. We do not expect to see very many take such a step unless the courts uphold the legality of the union.

A GREAT LOSS TO THE CHURCH.

A statement has been given out, based, as we suppose, on statistics, to the effect that one-fifth of the Sunday-school scholars in the State of New York are converted while in the schools, and "another fifth after they leave them." Three-fifths go astray and are lost to the kingdom of God. We have no way of verifying these figures. This proportion of Sunday school scholars that go out into the world unsaved is all too large. It naturally leads us to the conclusion that the proportion of the unsaved who never had the advantages of the Sunday school is very much larger. But, whether the figures are above or below the mark, the fact that any number of children trained in the Sunday school should be lost is alarming, and calls for serious reflection on the part of those who are responsible for the moral welfare of the children—the Sunday school superintendents and teachers, pastors, and parents.

We take it for granted that conditions prevailing throughout our country and the results of Sunday school work are practically the same. We have seen no statistics on the work in our section, nor anywhere in the South, but we know it is a fact that, upon the part of the majority of Sunday school children, there is utter indifference to the claims of the Church. This is particularly true of the towns and cities. If when men and women are making their way to Church for public worship they meet crowds of children leaving the Sunday school for home, not to rest and return, but to spend the day at play in the parks and on the streets, they can readily determine who is most responsible for the indifference of children to their claims of religion, and their final loss. The parents are at fault. It is their business to have their children under control, and to see that they attend the preaching of the Word. We doubt not that in our cities, where Sunday school rooms are provided apart from the public sanctuary, hundreds of children never see the inside of that sacred place. No wonder they know not what preaching is, and when they come to years, abandon the Church altogether.

Pastors, superintendents, teachers and parents should be impressed with the idea that unless the Sunday school leads the children to Christ and into his Church, it is a worthless institution. The fact should also be impressed upon the children. But this can never be, so long as parents allow them to neglect public worship, and encourage them in it. That those engaged in Sunday school work are zealous in their efforts we do not doubt, but their work will fall short of the true aim of the Sunday school if they fail to lead the children to Christ.

All useful and successful Christians love the Church, even as Christ loved it, and gave his life for it.

ARE PREACHERS PRETENDERS?

The Homeletic Review, in commenting on the charge of heresy, very plainly shows that it is not in sympathy with credal statements, nor with the almost universal custom of churches in requiring their ministers to subscribe to a written creed. It expresses the idea that if a church is to regulate its theology, "it is better to invite and encourage every minister to form and express his beliefs at all times with absolute freedom, holding the statements of the creed as general historic symbols of the Church, and trusting to the great progressive consensus of Christian opinion that in the long run will always make it certain that every man shall go to his own place." Holding to a regime of that sort, it is easy to imagine what sort of theology would be preached in our pulpits by young men trying to find their places.

We are not surprised that a Homeletic Review, having no denominational preference, but which seeks the favor of all, should entertain such liberal views; but what shall we think when that same Review virtually accuses nine-tenths of all preachers as being false pretenders. This Review says that "what Dr. Crapsey does openly nine-tenths of the clergymen do in secret." "What Dr. Crapsey does in an extreme degree, without question, nine out of every church requiring creed subscription also do in some degree." That is to say, nine-tenths of the ministry in Presbyterian, and Episcopal, and Methodist Churches, and some others, secretly repudiate some of the doctrines which they professed to believe, and vowed to defend.

Methodist preachers, the writer among them, in entering the ministry, not only declared their faith in the creed of the Church, but promised before God and the congregation to "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines." Is it true that of the eleven thousand preachers, local and traveling, nine thousand and nine hundred are dishonest? We do not believe it. Nor does the world believe it. Otherwise the world would lose confidence in the ministry, and the Christian religion.

A LITTLE OFF.

Brother Bailey, of the Baptist Record, writing of the recent Baptist Convention, says: "It was said by some speaker that the Methodists of the State (Mississippi) received about 1,600 members on a profession of faith, while the Baptists received 7,000 on confession of Christ in baptism."

We are unable to tell from the above just how many were added to the Baptist churches in Mississippi. We take it for granted that the number was as low as seven thousand, which, according to "some speaker," exceeds the number received by the Methodists by 5,400. But these figures do not agree with the official statistics. According to the returns, the Southern Methodists of Mississippi received 4,856 members on profession of faith. They also received by letter from other churches and otherwise 5,441, making a total received in 1905 into the Methodist Church in Mississippi of 10,297. This is a fairly good showing, compared with our Baptist brethren, who are always zealous in good works.

PERSONALS.

"What kind of a neighbor is Mr. C.?" was the question asked by one man of another. The answer was, "He is the cleverest man at your house you ever saw." The point is easily seen.

We are indebted to Rev. M. R. Jones, of Hurley, Miss., for a fine list of new subscribers and renewals to the ADVOCATE—twelve new subscribers and ten renewals. Brother Jones has our thanks.

We have received an invitation to be present at the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Rev. and Mrs. Wellborn Mooney, Dresden, Tenn., July 31, 1906. Blessings on the happy couple!

May they live to enjoy many more anniversaries of their union.

An invitation has been extended by the Trustees of the Texas Episcopal residence at Dallas to Bishop Ward to occupy the residence. As Bishop Ward is a native of Texas, we take it for granted that a home in Dallas will suit him, and that he will accept the invitation.

We had the pleasure one day last week of a long conversation with Rev. Theo. Copeland, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church. Brother Copeland preaches to large and interested congregations, is giving them the "pure Word," and is hopeful of great results. He is cheerful and happy.

Mr. D. M. Smith, Jr., son of our senior publishing agent, of Nashville, has been added to the Faculty of Centenary College. Prof. Smith has just finished his course in Vanderbilt University, closing the course with the highest honors. He was winner of "Founder's Medal," and gives promise of a brilliant career.

Rev. J. W. Harris, of Tillatoba, Miss., informs us of the death of Brother Francis M. Gee, who passed away June 30, in the 70th year of his age, leaving his wife and eight children—four boys and four girls. He was a good man and a member of our Church. His funeral was preached in the Church by Brother Harris to a large and sorrowing congregation.

Rev. W. G. Evans, of Covington, was in the city this week and honored the ADVOCATE with a visit. Brother Evans informs us that our pastor in Covington, Rev. T. M. Ryley, is in great favor with the people, and is doing a fine work. He has organized a Senior and Junior League, has the good women at work in the missionary societies, and has received one hundred and thirty persons into the church this year. He is a valuable man.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, in this issue of the ADVOCATE, gives us the result of a very thorough study of the statistics of the Louisiana Conference. If he is correct in his figures, it will prove very gratifying to brethren who have never been able to understand that, with so many great revivals and ingatherings, there was a net loss of one hundred and sixty members. It might be well for other brethren to study the figures. We thank Brother Joyner for his study.

We thank Brother R. Bradley, of Felder, Miss., for a couple of clippings from the Methodist Recorder of London. One clipping is an editorial note, the other a short report of the fraternal address of the Rev. J. S. Limon, Governor of Didsbury College, before the Primitive Methodist Conference. Both very clearly indicate that Dr. Tillett's proposed restatement of Methodist faith will meet with but little sympathy among the Wesleyan Methodists.

We clip the following personal allusion from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of July 19: "Dr. Parkhurst of Zion's Herald says of the Wesleyan Advocate's sermon for July, by Rev. J. E. Wray: 'It is a great sermon in the correct and strongest sense. To be able to preach thus is God's divinest gift to man.'" Rev. J. E. Wray is pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South (Old Carondelet), New Orleans, and is doing a great work in the city.

Please quit it. We mean please quit using abbreviations when you write about things of which readers know nothing. The use of abbreviations is almost a fad, especially in efforts to designate railroad lines, schools and societies. Writers should bear in mind that what is plain to them may be incomprehensible to others. This Editor is unable to spell out or read out all the abbreviations that reach him. Abbreviations presume on the knowledge of others. It is not always right to presume.

Rev. T. G. Freeman, of the North Mississippi Conference, once strong and efficient, going up and down as an itinerant, is now on the honor roll, but able to preach occasionally. A few weeks since he visited his son, Rev. W. A. Freeman, at Covington, Tenn., to join in the celebration of a birthday—his son being fifty years old. On the Sunday of his visit he preached two strong sermons, to the delight and edification of the people. We heard Brother Freeman preach his first sermon a little over forty-three years ago. The family have a remarkable history. They were Methodists and good people in the pioneer days—grandfather, and father, and son, all being preachers. Brother W. A. Freeman has preached with his father and grandfather in the pulpit with him, a thing, as far as we know, never duplicated in any family, though we know of two other families in which grandfather and father and son were all preachers at the same time—the family of Bishop J. S. Key, and the family of the Editor of this ADVOCATE.

AN ERRATIC EVANGELIST.

Dear Dr. Boswell: For six weeks past the inhabitants of Ruston might have embraced the rare opportunity of enjoying protracted services conducted by a real Christian (?). He says that "it hurts worse than running a splinter under his finger-nail to be called a Campbellite." We never did enjoy hurting folk; at the same time, we find some names misnomers, and hesitate to use them. He invites questions, but becomes enraged when they are asked, and finds it easier to deny than explain. His name is John N. Stevens. He claims to be "interdenominational," which claim, according to his statement, secures for him a large following wherever he goes. He says an evangelist in his church is not considered "much" if he fails to secure in a place the size of Ruston five or seven hundred converts. He seems to have defined his own position, since, after preaching six weeks and holding National (I believe) Convention, he cannot count one-fourth that number. Time seems to be no object with him, as he promises us six weeks longer.

In order to prove how we Methodists cut out immersion, and other denominations cut out other things, he took a Bible and a pair of scissors into the stand and proceeded to cut the Word of God. At another time, he exclaimed "Three cheers for Jesus Christ!"

He claims to have taught the Methodist preachers of Mississippi to let him alone, and so proceeded to try to give Brother Wynn, our pastor, a few lessons forthwith and immediately. If Brother Wynn had not advocated letting the "tares" remain till "harvest" he would have learned to let the Methodists in Louisiana alone.

There was talk of an "egg hunt" or "cat-o-nine-tails," but Brother Wynn forgave, and will let the boys forget, if they can. I wish the readers of the ADVOCATE had the benefit of an article he wrote to his church paper in Cincinnati about the vile literature Brother Wynn had circulated among his members—"The Wheel," "Grub All," etc.

One more claim and I'm through. He says in five hundred years everybody will belong to one church, and that one his, of course.

Doctor, are you glad or sorry that neither you or I will live to see that day?

MRS. ALICE CARY MCKINNEY.

A SPECIAL REQUEST.

Agents and individuals who remit to the ADVOCATE are requested to send Express, or Post Office money orders, instead of bank checks. Our Publisher informs us that, under new regulations adopted by the banks, he now has to pay ten cents on every check he collects, no matter for how small a sum. This is rather expensive when checks call for only one dollar. If brethren are obliged to send checks, they are requested to add ten cents for collection. This is reasonable in view of the greatly reduced price of the ADVOCATE.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting of the Trustees of Grenada District in the Methodist Church at Grenada, Miss., at 1:30 p.m., July 31, 1906. This meeting is important, and a full attendance is very much desired. The Trustees are: G. D. Shands, Oxford, Miss.; S. S. Spencer, Water Valley; S. T. Tatum, Grenada; L. G. Fant, Holly Springs; J. B. Cole, Tula; Jas. Moore, Oakland; C. K. Hall, Waterford; A. R. Bogard, Oxford, and L. B. McFarland, Water Valley, Miss.

NEWS FROM BATESVILLE, MISS.

Dear Doctor: We are having the greatest meeting I have ever been in. This is the fourth week, and we cannot seat the crowds who flock to hear the Word. Old-time repentance and conversion at the altar! The whole town is stirred.

The meeting was planned by the three local pastors—Brothers Wilson, of the Presbyterian; Lomax, of the Baptist, and myself. Our dear Brother Lomax died during the first week of the meeting, but his influence abides. A true "yoke-fellow" and a man of God. Brother Hill, of Louisville, Ky., is assisting Wilson and myself, doing the preaching on the street every evening at 6 o'clock, and directing many of the prayer meetings.

The secret of it all is prayer, faith in God, and our people busy as bees, at work for God and souls. Have heard so far of sixty-five conversions, or professions; numbers of reclamations, and the membership of all the churches revived and at work. Batesville "is on fire for God." It is wonderful! Pray for us. Yours hastily,

R. O. BROWN.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Resolutions of respect in memory of J. M. Rogers:

Be it resolved, first, That in Mr. J. M. Rogers, the city of Gulfport, the M. E. Church, South, and most especially the young men's Sunday-school class of which he was teacher, had a character of whom they should be proud, both Christian and moral, and whose example, if closely followed, would do any and all honor.

Second — That we realize forcibly and painfully our great loss, both religiously and socially, and we, his Sunday-school class, feel as though his place could never be filled.

Third—That we, the young men, his every-day associates, in a business way, and the Sunday-school boys, recognize that in Mr. Rogers we had a friend of the most gentlemanly and loyable disposition, and any and all of us, would be glad to have the host of well-deserved friends which he had.

Fourth—That all persons who had dealings with him, or knew him, loved him, and those who knew him best loved him most.

Fifth—That we, the entire Sunday-school of the Twenty-fifth Avenue Methodist Church, of the city of Gulfport, tender our heartfelt sympathies to his bereaved relatives in their great loss and deep affliction, for in our own hearts there is an aching void which can never be filled in this life, but in the "bright beyond," where all is bliss and sunshine, we all hope to meet the dear brother. So let us all look to that source from whence comes all our blessings, and as best we can comfort ourselves and each other with the glad thought, "That our loss is his eternal gain."

Sixth—That a copy be placed on the minutes of the Sunday-school, one be sent to the "New Orleans Christian Advocate," and one to his parents.

COMMITTEE.

MRS. SUSAN THOMAS NISBET was born April 22, 1850; joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of 10 years; she was happily married to V. E. Nisbet Oct. 30, 1867; died at her home in Union County, Miss., April 30, 1906. For a number of years she had been a patient sufferer, and her release was not unexpected. She was the mother of a large number of children, some of whom have preceded her to the haven of rest, one of them being a minister in our Church, who died just as he was entering upon his life's work. Seven children are left to mourn their loss, with her godly husband, all of whom love God and his church. Her children are a living demonstration of her pious life. The chief ambition of her life, with that of Brother Nisbet, concerning their children, was that they should be an honor to the Church of God. This high ambition she lived long enough to realize. It would not be out of place for the writer to make grateful acknowledgment here of the many times his faith has been made stronger by the unanswerable argument of her purely good life, and the many words of encouragement, comfort and motherly admonition. In her home our preachers have always found a hearty welcome, as many living to-day will attest. Everyone who came in contact with this beautiful life recognized its virtues. To find an accurate description of this strong woman, read Prov. xxxi, 10-31. As the years pass, the loved ones join mother around the throne of God in heaven, where there shall be no suffering, separation, sorrow nor death, and "there shall be no night there." God will give comfort to the sorrowing husband and children.

In grateful memory,

THOS. H. DORSEY.

ARTHUR R. WHITTINGTON was born Oct. 15, 1818; was married to Miss Cora Butler Aug. 29, 1844. There was born to this union eleven children, six of whom are now living. He died at his home, near Salem Church, where he lived 60 years, May 29, 1906. Brother Whittington joined the church under Brother Pipkins in 1832. From that year he was a faithful, earnest Christian till the day of his death. This was seventy-four years of faithful service in the Church of God. He never faltered in his Master's service. His conversion was a certainty to him, and meant a new heart and fruitful life for his Lord. He enlisted for life and fought bravely and surely for seventy-four years. He always had time for his Master's service. He was never too busy to go to church during the week. He would go and conduct a prayer-meeting in mid-week. He found time for his religious duties at home, at church, at any place where duty called. Uncle "Arter," as he was familiarly called, had the confidence of everyone. People believed in his religion because his light was not hid; because he was positive in knowing his Lord; because his life bore fruit. The children, the young folk, the old, the sinners had confidence in Uncle Arter's piety. His religion was the pearl of olse. His experience was a living, joyful, fruitful one. When with him you felt you had been near your Lord. It was his custom to observe watch-night at his home. This to him was always a gracious service. His life was a triumphal one. He had victory over the devil, the world and the flesh. His end was full of peace. It was always a pleasure to stop at his home and commune with him; in so doing so you always realized the presence of the Holy Spirit. His death was full of victory. He talked of it as going over to his home. He was ready and looked to his going with joy and gladness. On one occasion he said to me, when I bade him adieu "I may not see you again; but be all is well with me. You will know where to find me, if I am gone." How marvelous the life "hid with Christ in God!" His life was one of simplicity, earnestness, faithfulness, kindness and love. He wrought well, bore fruit, was ready for his inheritance. He is at home with God. "Though dead, yet he speaketh."

LESSON FOR AUGUST 5.

FALSE EXCUSES.

(Luke xiv, 15-24.)

Golden Text: "And they all with one consent began to make excuse." (Luke xiv, 18.)

The dinner at the Pharisee's home was still in progress, and the Master continued His teaching. He may have been invited there to entertain, and the entertainment was being made profitable, both to the assembled guests and to all who read of it in the Scriptures. Just after the Lord had taught the beauty of Christian love and charity in extending hospitality, devoid of desire to be repaid—intimating that the invitation to come into the kingdom of God was given from a source of love and compassion, and to all, however unworthy—one of the guests exclaimed "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God."

These words of the guest seemed to have suggested to the Lord the use of the parable of our lesson of to-day. However, He began at once to tell of a certain man who made a great supper, and, in advance, invited many guests. When the supper time came, he sent his servant to say to them that had been invited, "Come; for all things are now ready." The supper of the parable was the doctrine of the long-looked-for Messiah, and He was there to offer it.

The invitation to the supper had long been with the people; it was given them not only by the Prophets and writers of inspiration, but also by God's dealings with them, as His chosen people, through all the events recorded in sacred history; and now the Master of the house had sent his servant to tell them that the supper was ready, come. That servant was Jesus; and He was there among them, sitting at the table with them, teaching them, and they, in their hearts, were desiring excuses. The Lord was angry, as He had been provoked many times before, and determined to provoke them to jealousy by opening wide the door of the kingdom of God that the Gentiles should come in. "Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation will I anger you." (Romans x, 19).

The real reason why the class represented by some of the guests at the dinner did not accept the Messiah was given by themselves in John xi, 48. It was just after Jesus had called Lazarus back from death to continue his life on earth. The chief priests and Pharisees called a council, and some member of it said, "What do we? For this man doeth many miracles; if we let Him thus alone all men will believe on Him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and nation." And it was at that council that High Priest Caiaphas prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation, and not for that nation alone, but that He should gather together in one the children of God, not knowing the significance of his prophecy. It is all so plain to us that we wonder that any excuse was given, and that Jesus was not accepted at once.

The next part of the parable is that in which all people, everywhere on the face of the earth, are interested, for the Lord has turned to them for guests at His great supper. They are represented by the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind. Even some of them make excuses when they are called. The Gospel of Christ is preached, and they stand condemned; for "He that believeth not is condemned already," and of them many make one of these kind of excuses named in the parable.

These excuses are not only made by the impenitent, but are also often used by the nominal Christian as to why he does not attend more regularly on the services and duties of the church, and why he is not engaged in some work for the Master. The first is an excuse on account of property. The very blessings of God are used as an excuse for not being a working Christian. Let us take heed, for God can take away all that a man hath. Remember the rich man that pulled down his barns and built greater ones in which to store goods for self. The next excuse is business. No time for God's work; must hurry and get business into such a shape that when misfortune comes I will be safe. Remember to "seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you. The next excuse is of a social nature; home matters, they say, come first. The happiness of any home is very insecure unless the family altar is firmly and permanently established there. Family worship makes a better husband and father, the wife is more contented and happy, and the children are often so reared that they can never tell you the exact time they first learned to love Jesus, or give you the time when first they had the witness of the Spirit that they had passed from nature to grace.

Let us also have the lesson teach us that we that have given ourselves to the service of the Master, are the servants that are to go out to the highways and hedges after the poor and the maimed and the halt and the blind. Let us take this parable to ourselves and hope that as we are free from any necessity of excuse, we may be able to teach the same to others; for no man can teach a truth unless he makes that truth a part of his faith and practice.

How to Make Money.

You should make money and make it fast by selling a Dishwasher, an article more salable in a household than a sewing machine. It does away with the drudgery of the kitchen and keeps the hands out of greasy, boiling water. Agents are making from $2.50 to $5.00 a day selling these goods. People pay $50.00 for a sewing machine which often stands idle for weeks; whereas, a Dishwasher is used three times every day. How quickly they will pay $50.00 for one that will save that amount in dishes every year. You cannot break or chip dishes in this Dishwasher. In about five minutes it washes and dries dishes and silverware ready to be put away. Write to the MOUND CITY DISHWASHER CO., Dept. K, St. Louis, Mo. They will give you all particulars.

POPULARVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I am glad to tell you and our friends that we laid the foundation of a new two-story parsonage this week in our church lot.

Our people expect to begin the erection of an up-to-date church. We are corresponding for plans, etc. The Methodist church here is not strong numerically or financially, but I am glad to say they are strong in will. They are doing their best. We have sent a good many circular letters stating the facts, and asking our friends to help us a little. A few have responded very readily, and we appreciate it. I believe others will. Several times in my life when I have seen that a church and parsonage have been distroyed I did not wait even for a personal appeal, but brought the matter before my people, and gave them a chance, joining them in their contribution. We expect to build at once, whether we are helped or not. Take my letter and go to God in prayer, and the Spirit is allowed to guide—I'll risk results.

Yours fraternally,
D. P. BRADFORD.

Dear Doctor—Although some have sent in their "protest" concerning the articles published in our paper against the action of the General Conference on our "Articles of Faith," yet I, for one, am glad you publish them. It makes me feel more hopeful to know that there are others of the same opinion as myself on that action.

We held our Children's Day services at Bradley's Chapel on the first Sunday in July; had a glorious day, and closed with a collection of $10, which makes $25 from our work for the Children's Day fund.

The Seashore Camp Ground is located on the Mississippi Sound, seventy-nine miles from New Orleans and sixty-two miles from Mobile, on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and is one of the most beautiful places on the Gulf Coast. It enjoys a railroad service that is unexcelled for comfort and convenience. A magnificent artesian well furnishes cool and life-giving water from a depth of many hundred feet; and by a perfect system of water works the cottages and hotel are furnished with this water direct from the well. The hotel has a frontage of one hundred and sixty feet on the beach. A multitude of magnificent shade trees temper the noon-day sun, and at night numerous electric lights dispel the darkness and illuminate the roads and pathways that intersect the Grounds. A new pier twelve hundred and forty feet in length, with a Summer house on the end, extends out into the Gulf, and offers positively the most delightful advantages in the South for a promenade. The bathing is unexcelled by any other point on the gulf. All parties residing on the grounds have the privilege of the bath-houses. Good board can be secured at the restaurant, which is in charge of a competent chef, and in private houses at reasonable rates. The comforts and conveniences of all visitors will be carefully looked after.

It won't cost you a penny unless you are satisfied! Just a letter, just a statement that you need it, just a request that you want it. It will do the rest.

Stop dosing, drugging and doping! Use a package of Vitæ-Ore—The Mineral Spring Condensed and Concentrated—for thirty days. Don't use another thing but the V.-O. treatment we will send you. Our profit, our pay, our reputation will depend upon what you think after thirty days are over. We leave it to you entirely, for you to decide. How can you refuse this offer?

If You Are Sick we want to send you a $1.00 package of Vitæ-Ore, the great healer from the earth's veins, enough for 30 days' use, postpaid, and we want to send it to you on 30 days' trial. We don't want a penny—we just want you to try it, just want a letter from you asking for it, and will be glad to send it to you. We take absolutely all the risk—we take all chances. You don't risk a penny! All we ask is that you use V.-O. for 30 days and pay us $1.00 if it has helped you, if you are satisfied that it has done you more than $1.00 worth of positive, actual, visible good. Otherwise you pay nothing, we ask nothing, we want nothing. Can you not spare 100 minutes during the next 30 days to try it? Can you not give 5 minutes to write for it, 5 minutes to properly prepare it upon its arrival, and 3 minutes each day for 30 days to use it. That is all it takes. Cannot you give 100 minutes to insure for you new health, new strength, new blood, new force, new energy, vigor, life and happiness? You are to be the judge. We are satisfied with your decision, are perfectly willing to trust to your honor, to your judgement, as to whether or not V.-O. has benefited you. Read what Vitæ-Ore is, and write today for a dollar package on this most liberal trial offer.

From the Earth's Veins To Your Veins

Vitæ-Ore in its original condition is an ore substance, a combination of minerals mined from the ground, from the EARTH'S VEINS. It contains Iron, Sulphur and Magnesium, three properties most essential for the retention of health in the human system, and one package (one ounce) of the ORE, when mixed with a quart of water, equals in medicinal strength and curative value many hundred gallons of the most powerful mineral waters of the globe, drank fresh at the springs. The mineral properties which give to the waters of the world's noted healing and mineral springs their curative virtue, come from the rock or MINERAL ORE through which water forces its way, only a very small proportion of the medicinal power in the ORE being thus assimilated with or absorbed by the liquid stream. The rock contains the much desired medicine, the water serves as the conveyance to carry but a small part of its properties to the outer world. Vitæ-Ore is a combination of these medicine-bearing minerals, powdered and pulverized, and partly soluble in water, the addition of which makes a remarkable curing draught. VITÆ-ORE has cured more chronic, obstinate, pronounced incurable cases than any other known medicine, and reaches such cases with a more rapid action than any medicine possible to procure.

CURES RHEUMATISM.

MOUNT HOLLY SPRINGS, PA.—I can testify to the value of Vitæ-Ore as a permanent cure for Rheumatism. I had the disease so bad that I could not get out of bed. I used the doctor's medicines faithfully, but they did me no good. I used but two packages of Vitæ-Ore and it cured me effectually and permanently, as it is now more than two years since my cure and I have had no return of the disease. DAVID LIGHTNER.

CURES CATARRH.

MOINGONA, IOWA.—I have given Vitæ-Ore a fair and thorough test and have been greatly benefited by its use. I had been a great sufferer with Catarrh of the Head, Lungs and Stomach, impairing the latter organ so that my diet for about four years was a little bread and tea or hot water, anything else causing me intense agony. Since using Vitæ-Ore I can now eat any and all vegetables and fruits without the least unpleasantness. It is the best medicine that I have ever used, and I have taken a great deal in the past seventeen years. JOHN F. MCGEE.

CURES STOMACH TROUBLE.

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA.—I suffered terribly with Stomach Trouble for over fourteen years and for the last six years was unable to do any housework whatever. I was induced to try Vitæ-Ore, and since taking it, I feel like a different person and am now able to attend to all my household duties. V.-O. has brought me back to health and I would not be without it in the house. MRS. JOHN REEDER, 620 W. Water st.

CURES HEART TROUBLE.

CALLAO, MO.—I have not words to express my gratitude for the benefit V.-O. has given me. I had Heart Trouble for several years and could hardly eat a meal without having to get up and go to the door and wash my face and fan myself to breathe at all, and very often I would have to get up and open the doors, even in cold weather, and be fanned to be kept alive. Since taking V.-O. I have no more bad spells; I am able to cook and eat all I want and would not be without V.-O. in the house. I do not feel satisfied without it. MRS. SARAH SCHOBEL.

Vitæ-Ore

Contains Iron, Sulphur and Magnesium, Three Health Elements which help to Make Each Dose a Most Remarkable Curing, Healing and Restorative Draught.

CURES LIVER TROUBLE.

RYAN, W. VA.—For six or seven years I have been a sufferer with Liver and Kidney Trouble. My stomach would not properly digest my food; I could not sleep; I was, in short, a physical wreck. During these years I tried almost every medicine I could find, only at best to obtain temporary relief. Last August, however, I began to use Vitæ-Ore. I have been using it right along since and am today in better health than I have been for seven years. I ascribe to Vitæ-Ore all the praise. THOS. P. RYAN, Att'y at Law.

CURES BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

MARTINSVILLE, CAL.—My mother was afflicted with what the doctors called Bright's Disease for about six or seven years; was attended all of that time by physicians. She was finally given up to die and at this time was induced to try Vitæ-Ore. To our surprise, and great joy, she was cured sound and well by the use of three packages. JOHN WILLIAMS.

CURES GRAVEL.

DIDO, VA.—I was taken ill with Gravel last January and would have died but for Vitæ-Ore. A Vitæ-Ore agent persuaded me that it would help me, so I took it and after nine doses the stone was passed. I cannot praise Vitæ-Ore highly enough. I feel like a new man since I have been so much relieved. JOSEPH F. MERCER.

CURES SALT RHEUM OR ECZEMA.

LUVERNE, MINN.—I feel it my duty to let others know how much good Vitæ-Ore has done for me. I had been a sufferer from Salt Rheum for over fifteen years and Vitæ-Ore is the first thing that did me any good. My hands have been perfectly well for over a year and you are welcome to use my name to everybody. MRS. M. M. BULLIS.

CURES CONSTIPATION.

BROCKVILLE, FLA.—I have tried Vitæ-Ore and know that it has the virtue claimed for it, as it relieved me of Constipation that has followed me for forty-five years, and for which I tried many remedies. None gave me any permanent relief except Vitæ-Ore. J. C. SMITH.

WHAT IRON DOES

AMONG the properties which go to make mineral springs famous for their medicinal qualities is Iron, hardly a spring of any consequence or renown being without some proportion of this mineral substance. There are certain springs which contain sufficient iron to impart the iron taste to the waters, which are then known as ferruginous or chalybeate waters, and Vitæ-Ore in solution, ready for drinking by the patient, is representative of the best class of these waters, having the added advantage of being stronger than any water known.

Iron is of especial value in blood disorders and because of this fact the large proportion of iron in Vitæ-Ore does much toward making possible the wonderful curative power possessed by this remedy. As the blood is the vehicle which ordinarily carries medicaments to the different portions of the body, the only means in repairing the ravages of disease in these parts is in supplying that fluid with the elements necessary for the proper restoration of the abnormal or diseased tissues.

The countless millions of little red corpuscles which are contained in this fluid have a powerful affinity for iron. Without iron they cannot live and their death means the death of the entire body. The iron in Vitæ-Ore causes it to be immediately absorbed by the blood, owing to the property of the fluid above mentioned, and it is on account of this that results from the use of this remedy are so easily and quickly established. Iron is also an ideal astringent, possessing the power of allaying irregular or catarrhal action upon any mucous membrane with which it is brought into contact. The wide range of usefulness of iron, and through iron, Vitæ-Ore, may easily be considered when it is known that membrane which is liable to excessive action exists in the mouth, tongue, throat, lungs, stomach, bowels, kidneys, bladder, head and nose, causing much trouble and a long train of ills which may be primarily traced to such excessive action or catarrh. The astringent properties of Vitæ-Ore gained by the iron which is part of its composition, make it the most powerful remedy known for checking such catarrh, as thousands of cures in these cases have thoroughly established.

Last, but by no means least, in the many merits possessed by iron and Vitæ-Ore in relation to the curing of human ills, is the ALTERATIVE action, a prominent quality of iron, and which, owing to the formation of Vitæ-Ore, is exerted by that remedy in a more marked degree than has ever been accomplished by artificial compounds of iron used for a like purpose. The term "alterative" is difficult to explain, but a remedy is said to possess "alterative action" when it can check or alter certain morbid processes that work in the system. Embraced in the group of diseases in which alteratives are of benefit are Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Nervous Disorders, etc., numbering up into several score.

The patient afflicted with any of the diseases named herein and those kindred to them, in following the Vitæ-Ore treatment, is securing a more direct medication of the parts affected than could be obtained from drinking the waters of any of the world's noted mineral springs, since one quart of the solution prepared from Vitæ-Ore is from four hundred to eight hundred times stronger than the same quantity of the valuable waters of the globe, and it is not necessary to drink gallons of water to obtain the much desired medicinal power. And remember Iron is but one of the many constituents of a medicinal value found in Vitæ-Ore and all are in a state capable of easily being digested and assimilated with the blood.

Thousands

Have pronounced Vitae-Ore the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Dropsy, Catarrh and Throat Affections, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Ailments, Stomach and Female Disorders, La Grippe, Malarial Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility.

IF you are sick or suffering from any of the above named disorders, in all of which Vitae-Ore is of special value, don't let another day go by before you send to us for a trial package.

Thus the dreaded insect has proved in some cases a blessing in disguise.

The trouble between the loyalists of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and those who favored union with the Northern Presbyterian, as foreseen and predicted, has materialized. SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The 35th annual camp meeting has come and gone. The three presiding elders provided for most of the preaching, in person or by proxy. Rev. W. E. Boggs, D.D., represented Rev. T. J. Warlick; Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D.D., represented Rev. M. L. Burton; Rev. J. T. Morris, D. D., represented Rev. J. S. Frazier. The presiding elders each preached one sermon and then stepped aside for their representatives. Several sermons were preached by Rev. G. H. Galloway, a cousin of Bishop Galloway, and one sermon by President Murrah of Millsaps College. Rev. A. J. Lamar, our publishing agent, preached twice, making very powerful appeals to sinners. The preaching was all of a very high type and very helpful to the body of Christians gathered on the grounds. There was some disappointment that there was not large ingatherings of souls, but all who attended feel that there will be gracious results. To quote from the sainted Bishop Keener: "It was a time for sharpening of irons, rather than for harvesting."

But no man could spend a week in the peaceful and beautiful surroundings, listening to pointed and inspiring messages, and not come away better equipped for service. There seemed to be a perfectly delightful spirit of love and harmony among all. With the body invigorated by the daily plunge in the salt water, the invigorating sea breeze and the wholesome fare, a man was in physical condition to take a sane view of life, to appreciate the worth of his fellowman, and the richness of divine love.

There was but one criticism to make upon the general plans—the camp meeting was too short. It might not have been practicable to have held for ten days or two weeks, but to very many it seemed as if we closed when the indications of results were beginning to appear. There is only one way by which we are likely to have a very extended revival in a week—we must hold preparatory services in all the churches in the territory of the camp meeting, and go up to the camp grounds in prayer and expectation.

As it is, the camp meeting has rather proven the preparatory service for ingatherings that will appear elsewhere.

The camp meeting had hardly closed before the preparations were under way for the coming Epworth League Assembly.

H. W. WHITEHEAD.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

At Seashore Camp Meeting on July 15 a special service was held in memory of the late venerable Bishop John C. Keener. Rev. M. L. Burton, presiding elder of the Seashore District, presided over the meeting. Bishop Keener was one of the founders of the Seashore Camp Ground, and from the beginning as a meeting place for Christians, thirty-five years ago, he was identified with the forces and grew over taken by age and feebleness was an annual camp- er on the consecrated soil. We copy from the Times-Democrat of July 16: The memorial to Bishop Keener was made a touching and as deeply expressive of affection and veneration as such a service could be. The preachers on the grounds and the members of the Board of Trustees were grouped on the rostrum, and the tabernacle was filled to the doors with the congregation collected from all along the coast. Tributes were paid by selected speakers, and then others who knew and loved Bishop Keener were permitted to say a few words in his memory. After this part of the service was completed the annual ministration of the sacrament followed.

The principal speaker was the Rev. Dr. A. J. Lamar, the intimate friend of Bishop Keener for thirty-two years. Another speaker was Dr. E. L. McGehee, the son of another of Bishop Keener's friends and his physician in the last years of his life. The songs selected were those the Bishop especially loved. It was regretted that the Bishop's few surviving relatives could not be present, and that J. H. Keller, another old friend of the Bishop, could not pay the Bishop a public tribute.

The first speaker, Dr. Lamar, said: "I met Bishop Keener on these grounds thirty-two years ago, and I saw him for the last time two weeks before his death in New Orleans. All through these years I have loved, trusted and admired him. I feel it meet that he should be honored here on these grounds with which he was identified since the inception of the movement. I have personally known many men who illustrated the history of the South, and no name will be more illustrious than his. He was truly great as a man, as a preacher, and as an ecclesiastical statesman. With his gifts he would have gone to the front in any profession.

"The last years of his life he spent in feebleness. His devoted wife had gone before him. The children God had given them had all been taken but one. But his faith in God was never shaken. He lived serenely until his resurrection morn in heaven."

Dr. Lamar then added a biographical sketch of Bishop Keener. Continuing his tribute he spoke of the Bishop's burning zeal for the conversion of souls, his eloquence in the pulpit, and his patience with the penitent at the altar. Dr. Lamar recalled the Bishop's last sermon on the camp grounds last summer during the revival meetings. He said while the Bishop would never more be seen here in the flesh, his spirit would be present, and every leaf and blade would serve to keep his memory green upon these camp grounds.

Dr. E. L. McGehee, of New Orleans, whose father was the Bishop's close friend, and who gave largely to Methodist work in Louisiana and Mississippi, represented the Board of Trustees in the memorial tributes. Dr. McGehee said he inherited the Bishop's friendship from his father. He spoke of him as a man, a father and a friend. He said God made no mistakes and that he raised up Bishop Keener just at the time he was needed for a great work. To Bishop Keener the Methodists were indebted for these Seashore Camp Grounds, with Messrs. Lester, Stuart and J. H. Keller. He said Bishop Keener was a positive man, a lover of truth. He lived so close to the Master that he did not care for the opinions of men. In his home life he always maintained a family altar. He was greatly concerned about the conversion of his children and that was one of his reasons for bringing them yearly to the camp grounds. Dr. McGehee compared the Bishop with the late Dr. B. M. Palmer of New Orleans, and he said that the members of the Board of Trustees were trying to carry out Bishop Keener's plans for these grounds.

Mrs. George Leftwich sang a solo, and then tributes were asked of any others who wished to speak.

Rev. Dr. LaPrade said Bishop Keener had been a second father to him. It was through his influence he had come from Georgia to Louisiana. He said the Bishop was a noble fighter for principle and truth; his deep spirituality had always appealed to him. He spoke of Bishop Keener's wonderful mind. He said he was a man of great tenderness, and that his capacity for loving was as great as that for thinking and doing. The place of Bishop Keener could never be filled.

Rev. Dr. J. S. Frazier, of Mobile, recalled a scene upon the grounds nine years ago, when Bishop Keener had preached a memorable sermon. One young boy, converted under that sermon, was now preaching the Gospel. He believed that Bishop Keener would one day be recognized as the greatest Methodist America had ever produced.

Others who knew and loved Bishop Keener—who knew him in the days of his manly prime—offered a few words of tribute, and the service was followed by the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Bishop Keener was a great and good man. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

OUR ORPHANS' HOME.

AN APPEAL BY THE AGENT AND MANAGER.

Dr. Boswell: Your kindly and timely reference to the call being made by myself as Agent and Manager of our Orphans' Home is highly appreciated. It also reminded me that you would probably extend me the use of your columns to make further statement to your many readers, and appeal for help.

Perhaps there has not been a time when our situation has been more critical—not even after the disastrous fire two years ago, that very nearly destroyed everything that had been done, and the accumulations by hard efforts of years.

Then there was the stimulus of the interest and sympathy aroused by the startling news that the Home had gone up in flames suddenly, leaving over 100 children without food, clothing and shelter, which had been preceded by no special call upon the people for any considerable amount of money for the cause. Now, we have no fire or anything that will enable us to make a startling appeal. On the other hand we are in an elegant building, with no debt—not only so, but a building that has cost about $40,000, all paid by constant and urgent appeals to the people for the last two years. Besides the feeding, clothing and housing has been carried on under unusual disadvantages, increasing the cost, and, in addition, much cost has been incurred in the huge and tremendous move. All these have been faithfully and patiently met. The danger now is that our supporters will decide that the difficulties are all over, and will think they can now rest. We are, in fact, near the end, but this last portion is the finishing of the journey, and the most essential, though [illegible] make, because of the fatigue of the [illegible] exhausted [illegible] happy anticipation of a final [illegible] gathered a [illegible] and marketed [illegible] and labors. He knows well at least enough that he has labored [illegible] pended much [illegible] the crop, but realizes that the work still to be done is necessary to make all past labor and expenses effective. Usually the joy of the near crowning of all the labors cause him to forget the hardships and expenses of the past, and he performs the finishing work with renewed energies. Let us now deal in a similar way with our orphanage.

So far as I know, nobody has charged that we have built too large, and at too great expense. If they should, I hope they will allow me to disabuse their minds.

I have no personal interest in this appeal, as events yet to be made public will show. I am appealing as a Methodist, a preacher, a lover of humanity, and a Christian.

I have been connected with the work now nearly two years. I have studied it in the Home, in the field, and from other sources of information. We are just beginning the work. As it succeeds attention will be drawn towards it, and vast numbers of children now suffering for the Home will be sent to it.

The Home is one of the institutions that indicates that our people are being aroused to a practical side of Christianity, and are ready to do effective Christian work.

We need really $3,000 to properly furnish the building, build barns and other buildings, furnish our school rooms, and fit up and beautify the grounds. This is needed over and above the average of $700 per month to keep us running. We will now have to lay in our coal supply of not less than 200 tons to keep us warm, make our lights and do our cooking and laundry work this winter, and through next summer. It must be done now, or we will have to pay much more, and run the risk of strikes, and deficiency of freight facilities next winter. To be here with thirty babies under three years old, and probably 125 children in all, without coal, is a horrible thought too serious to risk.

We need at least eight good cows more than we already have to give these children milk. They cannot be gotten without money.

Will not every reader of this come to our help at once?

O. M. Cox,
Agent and Manager.

Jackson, Miss.

A FINE MEETING.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I write a few words for the ADVOCATE. I have just closed a fine meeting for Brother G. W. Huff, at Moselle, on the N. O. and N. E. Railroad, north of Hattiesburg. The meeting ran one week. I reached the meeting on Monday night and remained to the close of the meeting the next Sunday night.

We had fine congregations at every service, close attention to the preaching of the Word. Large numbers presented themselves for prayers at every service. Twenty-three accessions and the church greatly blessed, were some of the visible results of the meeting.

Moselle is a good place to hold a meeting. I never visited a more kind and appreciative people. They know how to entertain a visiting brother and make him feel like a brother beloved. And then they do not forget their pastor. They take good care of him. They gave Brother Huff a nice pounding during our meeting, making his heart glad. I fell greatly in love with those people.

I held a meeting at Eastabutchie, Brother Huff's home-town, in April. We had good congregations there and seven accessions, some very [illegible] are [illegible] and taking an active part in [illegible]

[illegible] are [illegible] established as [illegible] met and there [illegible] are not as many as [illegible] but the faithful few are true to the church, to God, and to their past. They also pounded for their Huff mightily.

I certainly spent a very pleasant week in Brother Huff's home with him and his delightful family. They know just how to supply the wants of the helper in the work. And Huff! why he is a veritable steam engine under full head: he just makes things move. He found the parsonage in very bad condition, water just pouring through the roof and much of the ceiling and floor rotten, and he went to work with his own "big" hands and repaired and painted the parsonage and built a new picket fence and painted that. So the parsonage is now one of the most beautiful as well as most comfortable homes in Eastabutchie. Brother Huff ought to stay in that lovely home the full four years.

I found Brother Huff and his people very much in love with each other, and though they have the majority on him, he makes it up in intensity. I like to work among a people that speak well of their pastor. Their love is genuine.

I held a meeting for Brother W. W. Simmons in June, at Metcomb City. We carried the meeting on for a week, and while there were no accessions, yet we feel that good was done, and many of the people blessed by the services.

Brother Simmons is not in his usual robust health, though he is very active in looking after all the interests of the church; in fact, Brother Simmons taxes his strength far too much at times. Brother Simmons has served as presiding elder for several years, and as a pastor for a great many years, always faithful and true to all the demands. He has been very successful in both positions.

It was certainly a great pleasure to me to enjoy the week in the home with Brother and Sister Simmons. They know so well how to make one comfortable, and everything so homelike. Bro. Simmons was very busy while I was with him, planning for the sale of the parsonage and the buying or building of another in a much more desirable place. It will be a great help to the charge when accomplished.

While Brother Simmons is busy looking after the spiritual welfare of his people, they love him very much and are looking after his interests in everything. Brother Simmons will doubtless bring up a fine report at Conference, and have the church in much better condition than when he took charge of it.

Well, Doctor, my letter is longer than I intended, but being my first for the year, please excuse its length. May the Lord's blessings rest upon you richly.

Your Brother in the work.

M. J. Miller.

Rials, Miss.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

Bishops W. A. Candler and E. E. Hoss were appointed by the College of Bishops, under instruction from the General Conference, as "members of the commission to build a representative church in Washington City."

Bishop Candler speaks as follows on "An Enterprise of Connectional Importance":

"That was a generous gift of that noble layman, Murray Carleton, of St. Louis, to the fund for the erection of a representative church in Washington City, and it was as wise as it was generous. His gift of $5,000 should be speedily followed by many more until the full amount of $200,000 shall have been raised.

"Southern Methodism has long needed such a church at the National Capital. The necessity was recognized by General Conference action many years ago, and when the General Conference at Birmingham put forward the plan again [illegible] which have [illegible] in the past, [illegible] carry the spirit [illegible] needed enterprise.

"It is not a matter [illegible] affects the welfare [illegible] Many of our people are in the public service at Washington, occupying places from the highest to the lowest grade. Unless we make for them many of them will be lost to us, it may be, to ans and all churches. I maintain they are not able to build the kind of house required by the needs of the situation. The whole church should unite in building that which will represent and serve the whole church. The building ought to be worthy of the great denomination which it will visibly express at the Capital.

"Let all our people give something to make such a structure as will honor and bless our cause at this great national center.

W. A. Candler."

THE PROPOSED RESTATEMENT.

It is true that the action taken by the recent General Conference is only a tentative measure, a feeler, and not what the two distinguished ecclesiastics had in view in presenting the original motion, yet it is a straw, or it may be a whole hay-stack scattered, showing which way the wind is blowing. The wind may be stilled, having soon expended itself, or it may become a whirlwind of cyclonic power, disrupting the Church, and wrecking the hopes of many, but lifting into prominence a few ambitious persons who aspire to be creedmakers.

Let us keep before us the Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as the same appears in the Discipline of 1902. We begin with page 21, paragraph 42. Ans. 11. "The General Conference shall have full powers to make rules and regulations for our Church under the following limitations and restrictions, viz.:

"(1) The General Conference shall not revoke, alter or change our Articles of Religion, or establish any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine.

* * * * * * * * *

"(4) They shall not revoke or change the General Rules of the United Societies:"

"Paragraph 43. Provided, nevertheless, that upon the concurrent recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences, who shall be present and vote on such recommendation, then a majority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding shall suffice to alter any of the above restrictions, excepting the first article; and also, whenever such alteration or alterations shall have been first recommended by two-thirds of the General Conference, so soon as three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences shall have concurred aforesaid, such alteration or alterations shall take effect; provided that when any rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference, which, in the opinion of the Bishops, is unconstitutional, the Bishops may present to the Conference which passed said rule or regulations their objections thereto, with their reasons in writing; and if then the General Conference shall, by a two-thirds vote, adhere to its action on said rule or regulation, it shall then take the course prescribed for altering a Restrictive Rule, and if thus passed upon affirmatively the Bishops shall announce that such rule or regulation takes effect from that time."

Thus it appears that not only is no provision made for the stating or changing of our Articles of Religion, but it is absolutely forbidden.

Bishop McTyeire, in his "Chatechism on Church Government," page 8, says:

"Q. How may a change be made on any subject which is protected by these Restrictive Rules?

"A. A majority of two-thirds of the General Conference, with the concurrence of three-fourths of the members of the several Annual Conferences, may effect it.

"Q. What is the purpose of these constitutional limitations and restrictions?

"A. To give stability to institutions. Where change is so difficult, it will hardly be made unless the wisdom and necessity of it are very plainly seen.

"Q. Could our Articles of Religion and doctrinal standards be revoked or altered even by such a large vote as that?

"A. They could not. It would require a more general consent to effect any, the least, change in them."

Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, Fraternal Delegate from the Wesleyan Conferences of England and Ireland to our recent General Conference in Birmingham, Ala., is quoted as declaring, when the question of "restatement" was being discussed, the status of Wesleyan Methodism to be this: "My impression is that we cannot have a genuine restatement or revision of the creed without the consent of parliament, owing to John Wesley's poll deed, the legal foundation of Methodism. This certainly applies to any alteration in the Constitution. For instance, we could not get rid of the three years' limit without an Act of Parliament; but, I am not sure, but I think the same rule applies to any alteration or revision of the doctrine, as well as of the Constitution of the Church." And Mr. Young might have gone further and declared that not only was an Act of Parliament necessary, but that also "a more general consent," or a unanimous consent on the part of the ministry and members of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. They have some regard for laws governing eleemosynary trusts, and neither the political nor the "ecclesiastical statesmen" will permit a majority of the beneficiaries to juggle or trifle with the rights and privileges of the minority, no matter how small that minority may be.

Bishop Hoss, in his admirable article lately published in "Zion's Herald" (Boston), and republished in the "Texas Christian Advocate," rightly characterizes the bold and unwarranted, nor to say, presumptuous, attack on the doctrinal standards of Methodism in the following language:

"From my standpoint, the action of the General Conference in taking the initial steps towards a restatement of Methodist doctrine was very far from being a forward movement. Nor could anything be more unjust than to class those who opposed it as Bourbons and reactionaries. Many of them are men of the most liberal culture, who know quite well what is going on in this modern world, and are diligently seeking to find a true and solid, standing ground in it, and none of them deserve to be stigmatized as narrow or incapable. * * * But to proceed:

"1. The delegates acted without any mandate from their constituents, as, on a matter of such far reaching concern, I think they had no right to do. For this reason, if for no other, their action does not bind me to unprotesting acquiescence. In no way had the Church spoken, or had a chance to speak about the matter. * * * I much doubt whether the annals of the Christian Church can afford another instance in which such a closet scheme, born of no restlessness or agitation on the inside of the Church, and of no necessity for meeting and combatting aggressive heresies on the outside of it, was ever before precipitated on a body of contented believers. In calling it a closet scheme, I merely state a fact, and do not in the least, mean to cast a reflection. A closet, in fact, is in good place for various uses.

"2. While the action professedly calls for a mere 'restatement,' all the arguments of any weight that were adduced to support it were really arguments for a thorough-going 'revision.' * * * What 'restatement,' short of a 'revision,' can convert inadequate doctrines into adequate ones, or rejuvenate articles of faith that have become 'superannuated?' * * * If our creed is inadequate, it needs expansion, enlargement, enrichment, and nothing less. Merely relating in the language of the twentieth century, or of any century, will not increase its adequacy by the fine dust of the balance. And if it is superannuated, the thing to do is not to try to doctor it out of its senility by word-juggling and change of phrase—an impossible process—but set it aside and get a new and better one in its place. This very thought, vague and half-formed, was evidently in the minds of some of the brethren, who, nevertheless, honestly and stoutly denied that they were revisionists. One of them, for example, said (I quote from memory): 'We do not propose to tear down the old house, but to build a new one, and move out into it.' If that is not revision with a capital R, what is it?

"3. The whole movement, instead of being progressive and modern, is a distinct retrogression towards the spirit and temper of the sixteenth century. * * * In other words, it is deliberately proposed to put up all there is of Methodism in sealed packages for convenient and ready distribution. * * * Why not also codify the Sermon on the Mount, and reduce the Parable of the Prodigal Son to a series of scholastic syllogisms? * * * Nothing could be a vainer dream than that it is possible to inject new life into the body ecclesiastic by feeding it on fresh formulae manufactured in a theological laboratory. * * * Bondage and not freedom is the end of the whole scheme. It means putting on us a yoke which our fathers were not able to bear. It is an effort to triangulate the kingdom of heaven, to run a human bonndary-line around the infinite, and to put into the molds of uninspired human speech the truth which in divers ways and varying measures God has revealed to us by the prophets and by his Son."

The Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) provides:

"Article X. Powers and Restrictions— * * *

* * * * * * * * *

"Section 1. The General Conference shall not revoke, alter, nor change our Articles of Religion, nor establish any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine.

* * * * * * * * *

"Section 4. The General Conference shall not revoke nor change the General Rules of our Church."

And the foregoing section corresponds verbatim with (1) under answer 5, Question 2, section 3, chapter 1, Discipline of 1808. (See Barclay's "The Constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Churches in America," p. 35.)

These quotations from recognized authorities show the futility of trying by resolution of the General Conference or by the action of a majority of two-thirds of the members thereof present and voting, and of three-fourths of the members of the Annual Conferences, to restate, alter, change or revoke any of the doctrines or of the standards of doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. And the courts of the land will stand in the way of the attempt by revolution or by force of a determined majority. When John Wesley restated the Articles of Religion of the Established Church of England it was not done by him for members of the establishment, but for "the people called Methodists," and more especially for those in the United States of America. He did not attempt to force his "restatement" down the throats of those who adhered to the Thirty-nine Articles." Nor did he undertake to confiscate, or carry off, or appropriate to his own use any Church property. Quite a respectable minority of the General Conference voted against the resolutions for the appointment of the Committee to Confer with other Methodisms. And it seems that quite a majority of the members of the National Conferences, and, I am quite sure, a controlling majority of the members in the pews would vote against such a movement. And even if a majority did not, the respectable minority will only have to declare their will, hold their ground and hold the Church property as the true beneficiaries upon whom the property is held in trust—holding to the true Standards of the Doctrines of Methodism.

Two objections are urged to the Twenty-five Articles of Religion. One is, that they are couched in the language of the sixteenth century, and the other is, they are mainly aimed against the Roman Catholic Church. Well, admit those to be true—what then? Those old theologians had a very clear and concise way of expressing great dogmas and doctrines, and crystallizing the great truths in God's Holy Book; and the great Roman Catholic Church is not yet dead; it is a great power in the world today, and in no land is the Pope more Pope than in these United States of America. The issues between true Protestantism and the Roman Catholic Church are living issues.

But I am afraid that the effort to restate is a blow aimed at Article V—Of the sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures for salvation, and to cast discredit on the historical books of the Old and of the New Testaments alike, as unreliable and inaccurate, and far inferior to other histories; and on the poetry of Job and the Psalms as far inferior to other poetry.

On my table lies what critics have called "Jefferson's Bible," but which Thomas Jefferson himself labeled "Morals of Jesus," or "The Lip and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth, Extracted Textually from Gospels in Greek, Latin, French and English." The miraculous births of John the Baptist and of Jesus, and every miracle of our Lord, are omitted as unworthy of credence, and no doubt as very "unreliable and inaccurate history." I vastly prefer my old King James' version to Mr. Jefferson's, and our old "Doctrinal Standards" to anything put forth by the present Theological Faculty of the Vanderbilt University.

Let those who do not believe the doctrines of Methodism, and are so eager to restate them to fit in with or sanction what they do believe, remember, that the world is wide and people are many. They can found another ecclesiasticism and build their own houses.

Let the members of all our Annual Conferences be on their guard against any schemes or efforts to anticipate the report of the Committee appointed by the General Conference to co-operate with other Methodisms. And let us stand by the old landmarks.

May God save us from the "confusion worse confounded" that awaits the effort to restate the doctrines of Methodism!

UNION OF METHODISM IN JAPAN.

The Joint Commission of the Union of Methodism in Japan, composed of representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Church of Canada, met in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., July 18, 1906. After two days of patient and prayerful consideration, articles of union were unanimously adopted and provision made for the organization of the Methodist Church of Japan. This action, authorized by the General Conference of the said Churches in the United States and Canada, was in response to the practically unanimous conviction of the pastors and members of the churches in Japan, as well as the foreign missionaries laboring among them.

The name of the United Church will be "Nippon Methodist Kyokwai" (the Methodist Church of Japan).

In the introduction to the eighteen Articles of Religion adopted are these words:

"The Nippon Methodist Kyokwai shall be permanently founded on the fundamental doctrines of the Holy Scriptures as unfolded by Christ and his apostles, formally stated in the Articles of Religion embodied in this plan of organization, and expounded in Mr. Wesley's notes on the New Testament and the first four volumes of sermons published by him during his lifetime."

The Methodist Church in Japan will be modeled after the organization of the three uniting churches, and includes General, Annual, District and Quarterly Conferences, with well-defined duties and powers. The General Conference will meet quadrennially and be composed of an equal number of ministerial and lay delegates. The itinerant system is preserved and an itinerant general superintendency provided.

The following will indicate the duties and functions of the General Superintendent and presiding elder:

"1. The Kantoku (General Superintendent or Bishop) shall be elected by the General Conference for eight years, by ballot, without nomination or debate, and shall be eligible for re-election.

"2. In the appointing of the Buchio (presiding elders) each Annual Conference shall nominate by ballot, without debate, two for each district or a larger number, if requested by the Kantoku, and from among those thus nominated the Kantoku shall appoint the necessary number.

"3. The appointment of the preachers to their respective charges shall be fixed by the Kantoku, after consultation with the Buchio in annual session. Vacancies shall be filled or necessary changes during the year made by the Kantoku, after consultation with the presiding elders concerned.

"The first General Conference will meet in the city of Tokyo, Japan, May 1, 1907. Delegates to same will be elected at the next session of the Annual Conferences. Commissioners representing the uniting churches will be present at this first General Conference to assist by counsel and consultation in the organization of the new church.

"The Japan Methodist Church will begin its independent existence with a membership of about 11,650, and a native ministry of over one hundred. The churches in the United States and Canada will continue their generous support of the work in Japan as heretofore, dealing with the Nippon Methodist Kyokwai.

CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The thirty-sixth annual session of the Corinth District Conference, North Mississippi Annual Conference, convened in the Methodist Church at New Albany, Miss., July 4, 1906, and continued three days. The presiding elder, Rev. W. C. Harris, was in the chair. Hardy W. Rees was elected secretary. The roll was called and all of the traveling preachers of the district answered to their names, except J. H. Felts. Fourteen of the thirty-five local preachers and thirty-five of the one hundred and sixty-eight lay members answered to their names.

One of the loved and honored superannuates belonging to the district, Rev. Thomas Cameron, was present and took an active part in the discussion of the various subjects. His presence and his sweet-spirited speeches were a blessing to the Conference.

The presidency of Brother Harris gave rise to much favorable comment, and, by his fair and impartial rulings, his faithful labors and strong gospel sermons, he has won the love and esteem of the preachers and membership of the district.

The first day was devoted to a discussion of the Sunday-school work, and all agreed that the greatest need of the Sunday-school to-day is co-operation, consecration, concentration and efficiency.

The cause of education received careful attention. Millsaps College was represented by Rev. Dr. W. B. Murrah and our much-beloved brother, T. W. Lewis, while Prof. Clifton and Rev. W. G. Harbin looked after the interest of Grenada College. Rev. J. W. Raper represented the Superannuate Fund.

The Woman's Home Mission Society had an hour on Thursday, and were represented by Miss Etta Murry and Mrs. Sallie Brown.

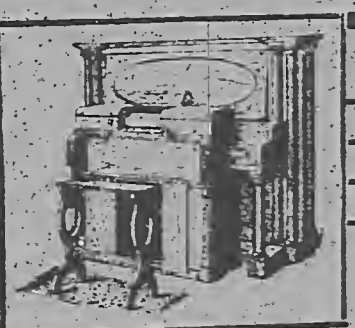
H. D. Stephens, Dr. J. Y. Murry, W. G. C. Ireland and L. T. Carpenter were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference.

Tilden was selected as the place for holding the next district conference.

V. L. Davenport was licensed to preach. L. H. White, W. L. Broom, T. E. Yancey, M. V. Bates and V. L. Davenport were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. L. H. White was recommended for Elder's orders.

The preaching was of a very high type, and was both spiritual and edifying. We had sermons by the following brethren, and in the order named: Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, T. H. Dorsey, J. W. Raper, T. W. Lewis, G. W. Gordon and W. G. Burks.

A resolution was passed memorializing the Annual Conference to restore the old Holly Springs District.



No more successful session of the Corinth District Conference has ever been held in the district, and the spirit could hardly have been better. New Albany knows how to entertain a conference, and showed her appreciation of having the Conference meet with them by the hospitable and elegant manner in which they entertained their guests, and by the large attendance at all the services. The writer was entertained in the pleasant and hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Henderson.

The host of the Conference is Savage, yet he is as harmless as a child, and gentle and sweet-spirited as a woman, and knows just how to take care of a Conference and how to place his guests so that everyone thinks that he has the best home. We all fell very much in love with Brother O. L. Savage, and his people speak in the highest terms of him. He is doing a good work, and we predict for him and his people a great year.

Brother J. W. Anderson, who lives in New Albany, was with us during the entire Conference, and added much towards its success by his sound, strong and earnest speeches. We are sorry to say Brother Anderson is not much improved in health, but we hope he may be so improved by Conference that he will be able to re-enter his loved employ.

Brother Bachman was with us, looking after the interest of our publications. We all agree that he is the right man in the right place.

Hardy W. Rees, Secretary.

A DAY AT MONTEAGLE.

A LETTER TO THE JUNIOR LEAGUERS OF NEW [illegible]

Dear Children: One fair morning in July the great, big, clanging bell at Mrs. King's seemed to say in ringing tones, "Get up! Be stirring! Be stirring!" But a sweeter sound than that of the bell comes in at the open window for,

"There's a merry brown thrust sitting up in a tree,
And he sings: 'Oh, the world is running over with joy.'"

That cheerful little carol is another invitation to be up. In fact, children, the mooing of the cows down by the barn, the crowing of the roosters and all the dear morning sounds that attend country life woo us. So all this time I've been telling you about them we have been shaking off our lazy feelings and getting ready for breakfast. Now, girls and boys, I know you would like to be with me, for on the table are bowls of large red plums and pretty yellow harvest apples. Or, maybe awhile after breakfast you'd like to go with me to the orchard and pick a real (I was going to say "live") apple from the tree or shake the plum tree until the fruit comes raining down in crimson showers. It's great fun, I tell you!

But across the road, on the other side of that barbed-wire fence, there is something very attractive, too. Now what do you think it is? I don't believe you would ever guess, so I'll tell you. Why, it is a real little city in itself. So imagine yourself with me and let's go over there. A short walk through a lane, bordered on each side by orchards of ripening peaches, brings us to the entrance gate. We must take out our purses now, for we must pay to enter. How nice and wide and smooth the paths are! Come, though there are ten of us, we may all walk abreast! Trees are everywhere, so I'm glad we left our hats and parasols at home. We do not need them. How fast we are going. We just can't help ourselves, for we are going down hill. Every now and then a neat cottage looms up, and a group of happy children pass us. Is not that a long bridge we have to cross? The view below the bridge is lovely, isn't it? A tiny stream of water looks like a silver thread, as it winds through a valley. Yonder is a truckster's wagon, loaded with fruit and vegetables. We cross the bridge now and begin to go up-hill. Not so easy to do, is it? I see a large building over there to the left. That is what is called the auditorium, and we are in the Monteagle Assembly Grounds. To-night we must come over to the concert to be given in that big room. I hear music there now, so over we'll go and hear the orchestra.

My! this house will hold fully 3,500 people. How nicely the seats are arranged—in tiers, so everyone can see, even if far away from the platform. Do not those ladies play the violin well, John, and is that not a fine leader of the band? But come, let's go over to the library and read a bit. There, Susie, you take Puck, and the funny papers. Something interesting for all; and so the time slips away, until Beatrice says: "I see some people going to the auditorium." So we go, too, and hear Mrs. Mdige. She talks just like a wee girl or boy, and recites some such funny things and some such sad pieces that we are ever so pleased and hope to hear her again. She bows gracefully and disappears and we stroll out to see the grounds. We pass the Lawn Tennis Court, where young girls and boys are playing. We see garden plots and come to other bridges. Many roads and streets there are, and all lead not to London or Rome, but to the auditorium. Children, I see you are smiling at some of the houses, and I, perforce, smile with you for they are like playhouses, toyhouses, and we feel like peeping in to see if the dolly is there. But only a few are like this and all of them are neat and attractive. Pretty names they have too—"Rest-a-Bit," "Bide-a-Wee," "The Den," (not the lion's den), "The Bonnie Cottages" and so on.

By this time I see that the girls and boys are tired and hungry (mountain air gives one such an appetite), so we go home, have a good dinner and then—what happens? Why, you children begin to feel homesick. You girls cry a bit, you boys look rather serious, and after awhile all fall asleep and are fetched by the "slumber man" to New Orleans and I am left alone. As you have deserted me, I'll have to tell you about "Twilight Prayers" and the night concert.

At half-past seven o'clock Warren Hall, on the grounds, is lighted up and people gather from all directions. So many children are there and they sing very heartily and repeat verses of Scripture so readily. About one hundred and fifty people are present, and the singing is ever so inspiring. Then, too, everyone is so friendly, which bring to mind these lines,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

A short talk is given, and another song is enjoyed, and then all go over to the auditorium. The band begins playing, and this is followed by solo, choruses—a feast of songs it is. Children, you ought to have stayed with me, for I believe there are very few little lads or lasses but who love music.

The concert over, Mrs. King and I go to the entrance and Mr. King meets us with the surrey, and we are driven through the cool sweetness of this retreat far up in the mountains to our mountain home.

"From the cool cisterns of the midnight air
My spirit drank repose!
The fountain of perpetual peace flows there,
From those deep cisterns flows."

And now, little Juniors, I bid you good-night, and may you have pleasant dreams.

Your friend,
EDDIE BENTLEY.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

Of all the forms of worship, none, it seems to us, is more beautiful than that which we see around the family altar. As a means of grace it occupies a distinct place of its own. The all-important "quiet hour," when the soul alone in the presence of its God, seeks the Divine blessing and communes as friend with friend, can not take its place. The hour of public worship, when we meet at the house of God for prayer and praise, can not take its place, for it stands alone.

It matters not so much at what hour we meet for family prayer, but the morning hours are best. Surely the ideal hour is immediately after the morning meal, when the whole family, including the servants, if there are any, retire to the library, parlor or living-room, and after reading a morning lesson from the Word, kneel in prayer, asking the Father's blessing on the new day. The benediction which will rest on each member of that household as he goes out into the world to fight the battles of life can not be overestimated.

We wish we might say to every young husband and wife who are beginning life in a new home of their own, "Do not fail to erect the family altar." We had the pleasure recently of being in a home as a guest where morning and evening the young husband and wife knelt at an altar of prayer. It was truly beautiful, and in speaking to them of the wisdom of their course, the husband said: "It seems a little time to give to God in return for what He has given to us." Of course, there are times in our lives when it is impossible to observe this daily practice; but let each family do the very best it can, and often difficulties disappear faster than we imagine they could. We may not be able to choose the morning hour, and each family should observe the hour in whatever manner it chooses—there are no set forms—but family worship must be a scene which angels delight to see.—American Friend.

FROM THE COLPORTER'S DESK.

The Publishing Agents promise the new edition of the Discipline by the middle of August. This will contain all revisions and additions made by the last General Conference, and will be worth more than it costs to any church member who would be up-to-date in the knowledge of the policy and work of his church. Thirty cents, with name and address, will secure a copy, postpaid, as soon as ready. Send us your orders.

The Methodist Hymnal is going rapidly and is in high favor where used. Churches recently supplied as follows: Philadelphia, Forest, Madison, Auburn, D'Lo, Winona, Indianola, Batesville and Cockrum Circuit.

Let us continue diligently our efforts to supply our churches and the homes of our people with this, our chief, song book. Next to this, let us use our Young People's Hymnals, Nos. 1, 2 or 3, especially in the revival meetings.

Though not heard from much through the press of late, be it known to all concerned that the colporter has neither been "unemployed" nor "trifingly employed." Eight District Conferences, besides other church meetings, have been attended and others would have been, but for conflicts of dates. At all of which the visiting brother had all needed courtesies shown him, and the work represented had right of way, for which he is very grateful to the brethren and friends.

Including the first Sunday in June, I spent three days and nights with Brother O. S. Lewis and his people at D'Lo and Braxton, preaching three times at as many churches and selling a good lot of books. Brother Lewis is popular, is doing good work and has reason to expect large results of his faithful ministry.

The fourth Sunday in June and day following I was the delighted guest of the parsonage home of Rev. J. R. Jones and family at Madison Station, and had the enjoyable privilege of preaching Sunday morning and evening to good congregations.

On Monday many books were sold, including a good supply of Methodist Hymnals and Young People's Hymnals for the church. One brother gave the church a handsome pulpit Bible.

The camp and protracted meeting season is now opening, and I have many invitations; for which I am grateful, and hope, under God, to be present and helpful at several of them. I am engaged for South Union Camp Meeting this week; Independence, first week in August; Shiloh and Lake Camp Meetings, third and fourth weeks in August.

The revival wave is in Mississippi. May it strike every church and community, particularly where special efforts are made.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL INSTITUTES.

Dear Dr. Boswell: In your note to my article in the ADVOCATE of July 20 on the consolidation of the Sunday-school Institute, the Epworth League Convention and the Mid-Year Missionary Meeting, you say: "If we understand, it is the Conference Convention the brethren desire consolidated with other mid-year meetings." That is correct, and it was against that I was protesting. The district institutes are always, or nearly always, held in connection with the District Conference. That is all very well, because it has been found impracticable to get the Sunday-school workers of a district together for an institute, because there are no funds with which to employ trained workers.

But in the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Institutes the attendance of lay workers has ranged from about 75 to 300. And I do not believe it possible to get that number to attend a lengthy consolidated convention, and that is why I am opposed to the consolidation.

A FRIENDLY WORD.

If you could see the working of a kind word or an unkind, see its influence filtering through a life, see its bracing or blighting human energies, what romances, what tragedies you would then be able to read! A word of cheer, of encouragement, of sympathy, how it would enter into life, to brighten and to strengthen it! Its path no eye can discern; but it slips in at the ear, finds its way up that mysterious staircase that leads to the viewless mind, lodges itself in the chamber of memory, and at each moment of failing courage or of slackening nerve sends a magic spark thrilling through the soul which liberates fresh stores of energy for the hard and lifelong task. Many and many a time the echo of that kindly voice, the thought that such a one thought well of him, believed in him, trusted him to be brave and true, has reequipped the warrior whose broken armor seemed slipping from his shoulders. "Eye hath not seen," but the word you spoke yesterday, last year, ten years ago, may even now be building up character and achievement out of some moral material which, but for those brief syllables, would have lain strewn and scattered on the ground.—R. S. Armstrong.

ONE AT A TIME.

For three days Great-Aunt Isabel's keen eyes had studied her niece's family, dwelling longest and most thoughtfully upon her namesake, Bella. Bella was a pretty girl, quick and generous and sensitive and full of enthusiasm, yet somehow she never succeeded in any undertaking. Far less clever girls surpassed her in studies—girls less talented in accomplishments. Bella herself confessed it half laughingly, half wistfully. "I don't know why it is," she said, "but I never seem to get anywhere in anything I do. I am sure I want to badly enough; it must be just fate."

Upon the fourth morning of her visit, Great-Aunt Isabel spoke suddenly: "What do you consider that you are doing, Bella?"

Bella stopped in surprise. "Why, dusting, Aunt Isabel. I always do the dusting in the library."

Aunt Isabel laid down her knitting. "Now, Bella," she said, "I'm going to tell you exactly what you've been doing while you thought you were dusting. You have dipped into five books, run out on the piazza twice, into the parlor once, fussed a bit with the puzzle Rob brought last night, put a few stitches into Jess's sofa pillow, played with the kitten, and read a letter. Now, how much of your mind, do you suppose, was really upon your dusting? Is the secret of success is bringing your whole self to every duty, how much success does your dusting deserve?"

Bella flushed, but tried to speak with her pretty sauciness. "Is it a problem, Aunt Isabel?"

Her aunt's voice softened; it had not been easy, and she was glad it was over. "It's a problem in life, child," she answered.—Selected.

WALNUTS.

These nuts belong to a grand old family, "Juglans" by name, which means nuts of Jupiter, who was said to be the god of thunderbolts. There are three species native to America which have many varieties, or, as one might say, "relations." Some are well known to you, whether living in the country or city; others are little known except to country boys and squirrels; a few kinds are so disagreeable that neither boy nor squirrel cares to know them or to eat them.

One species are called walnuts, and another hickories. They can be known by their husks, the walnut husk clinging to and drying on the nut, the hickory husk breaking apart at its seams and falling off. The walnut husk is also spongy and has a strong odor.

There is one kind not often found called the nutmeg walnut, which looks and smells very spicy as the husk opens and falls, and is a dark mottled brown when ripe.

Nigher, the black walnut of Texas and Arizona, grows more like a shrub, has a very small nut, with very thick shell, the kernel no larger than a pea.

The butter nut, also a kind of walnut, a near relative of the grand old family, is the "Juglans."

The hickories are of many kinds also, and are the most known and liked. The very best one to eat is called the shellbark, sometimes shagbark, from the rough, shaggy bark of the tree. It is a large nut, the husk deeply seamed into three or four parts. This nut is a great favorite in New England towns. They cannot raise enough to satisfy the appetite for them, so they are sent from other States in large quantities. The shell-bark has the thinnest shell, the largest, sweetest kernel, somewhat oily but very wholesome. Now it is used in many ways formerly unknown and untried, such as nut cake, nut candy, salted walnuts, nut bread. They used to be served with raisins and wine at dessert or in the evening.

Hickories (a name supposed to be an Indian one) grow in almost every State except the most Southern. Many kinds not so good are the mocker nut, with a very thick shell, hard to pick out and not very sweet; the pig nut, a pear-shaped kind with better taste; the bitter nut, so very disagreeable that mice, squirrels, and even boys refuse to eat it.

Indians use the bark and husks of hickories to make a bright yellow color for staining or coloring things.

Perhaps the greatest pleasure among walnuts and hickories is the "gathering" in the brisk, crisp autumn days, with a merry party armed with pails and flails, to beat about the trees in woods and fields until we have more than we can carry home, so leaving a harvest for the prudent squirrel to gather in. We must beat "wisely," not "too well," or we might so injure the trees that we should find small reward next year.—M. E. Merrill, in Christian Register.

THE TEACHING PREACHER.

Years ago we heard one of our leading preachers, now elevated to the Episcopacy, say that "the preacher of the future is to be a teacher," and he proceeded to elaborate extensively on the teaching preacher. We did not fully agree with the speaker at that time, and we see no reason after the lapse of three years to endorse him now, notwithstanding the teaching preacher is presented to the Church as necessary to the fullest development and efficiency of the membership, and given the place of honor above his brother, who is looked upon as only a soul-saver. We could hardly agree to the sentiment, with all it implies, without first undervaluing another class of preachers who are accorded some prominence in the Scriptures, viz. exhorters and evangelists.

According to the word of St. Paul, men have gifts differing, according to the grace that is given to them. Every man, in his own sphere, and in his own way, is required to do the best he can, whether his business is to prophecy, to minister (attend to the secular and manual needs of the Church—see Whedon), to exhort or to teach. St. Paul told the Ephesians that the Lord Jesus gave "some to be apostles, and some to be prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." If any significance is to be attached to the order in which these different officers are named, then by all means we are to give first place to those first named. This will be conceded, and if so, evangelists take rank above the pastors and teachers.

It is true that in point of time and labor involved the work of one in converting a soul is small compared to the work necessary to take an ignorant and untrained individual, and bring him up to a high degree of excellence in knowledge and service. This is the work of months—often of years. In the matter of soul-saving, we are told that the uneducated evangelist seems to be quite as successful as men of learning, but that in training and developing converts the educated preacher has the advantage. The truth of that statement depends altogether on what use a man makes of his education. The supposition is that he uses it to the edification of believers. Every man has the right in view, and believe that he is doing what is right. But it is not every high [illegible] to devote his learning to the best [illegible], and in saying the educated preacher has the advantage over his less fortunate brother, exception should be made [illegible] preachers, whether in the pastorate or chair, who use their learning to [illegible] the faith of their hearers.

We cannot see what good can come to an individual brought into fellowship through the agency of an evangelist, to be turned over to a teacher who will upset his faith in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the supernaturalism of our religion. And we seriously doubt whether any sinner, tainted by the teachings of such men as Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Crapsey, and others who possess great learning, can ever be brought under conviction by the preaching of the most powerful evangelist. The preaching of a Whitefield, a Jonathan Edwards, a Summerfield, or a Spurgeon, can move them. Personally, we would rather see in the ministry one who is endowed only as an evangelist, and let him pound into us Sunday after Sunday only "the principles of the gospel," than to be tortured once a year by one who imagines that learning is all that is necessary to constitute a competent and successful instructor in righteousness.

We would be glad to see all our preachers thoroughly educated, but we are not prepared to say that none save men who hold a college or university diploma are qualified and efficient pastors. Some men we have known, who never saw the inside of the high-grade institution of learning, in their young manhood, were teaching principles equal to any. They edified believers, and instructed young converts in the way of truth. This is all that is required of a faithful pastor. It may be, and doubtless is, a great satisfaction to be the possessor of much learning, and preachers have as much right to learning as any other class of men, and enjoy it just as much. But preachers may have stores of knowledge absolutely useless in the pulpit and pastoral work. It is no reflection on a faithful preacher, who fully measures up to his duty in leading and feeding the flock of Christ, to say that he is not as highly educated as some college presidents and professors. Many preachers of this order will not suffer by comparing the results of their labors with the work of those who topped off their education by a course in Germany. We have in mind a prince among men as a preacher and teacher, who had no diploma, but who in all respects was the equal of any man with all the honors and titles competent for schools to confer. He was not an ignorant man. He was learned, but scholastic according to the standards. Such as he, though few are his equal, are not to be regarded because they were ungraduates in point of [illegible] a college degree.

INSPIRING CONTEMPT FOR LAW.

The efforts of newspaper reporters to be [illegible] and caricature, and in every way degrade the laws of the land intended for the protection of the Sabbath and the morals of the people, are a short sometimes of being shameful. [illegible] editors, we are sorry to say, see no [illegible] to publish, as reporters are constantly doing, accounts of the work of officers who undertake to enforce the law. To give an illustration: Some days ago, Judge Hardy of the Judicial Districts of Mississippi, instructed the sheriff of a coast county to enforce the Sunday law, especially against base-ball and open saloons. [illegible] he was not specific, and the sheriff notified the public that he would take "no exceptions," the law would be applied to everything [illegible]. Forthwith the reporters rush to the [illegible] and tell the public that in Mississippi only [illegible] are lawful on Sunday; that is, to [illegible] provided one does not snore. [illegible] go so far as to say that the law is considered [illegible] to "reach the preacher who [illegible] his livelihood by his labors on the Sabbath." The reporter also says, "it is alleged that in the future the dairymen will be notified not to [illegible] cows later than 12 o'clock Saturday nights." And many other things are reported as coming under the ban of the law, as interpreted by the sheriff, that are just as foolish as forbidding to [illegible] cows after Saturday midnight.

The laws of Mississippi are none too strict—they are simply what is designed for the public good. Works of mercy and necessity are not prohibited on the Sabbath. Only secular work, designed to make money, or to minister to needless self-indulgence, and that actually profanes the day of the Lord, are prohibited. If laws prohibiting such things on the Sabbath are Puritanical, we for all means, we exhort the people to be more Puritanic.

Such reporting as we see in one of our daily papers in regard to the enforcement of the law of the land is well adapted to inspire disrespect and contempt for all law. In all conscience we say, there is [illegible] to stand for and obedience to [illegible] law. Those who shape the opinions of the [illegible] should help build up rather than tear down the morals of the country.

MISSIONS TO PROTESTANTS.

We [illegible], in recent years, have we read [illegible] sermons, not to say denunciations, of Protestant [illegible] sending missionaries to countries in which Romanism is the established, or dominant religion. The criticisms were based on the idea that if a people are satisfied with their religion nobody should undertake to upset their faith and cause confusion. This argument was [illegible] immediately after the war with Spain, when Protestants were specially active in sending missionaries to Cuba and the Philippines. We wonder what the critics will say now that the Catholics, Roman Catholics, in solemn assembly have determined to institute missions among the Protestants. Let nobody misunderstand. Their purpose is not to build churches in given communities and convert the people in the ordinary way. They propose to establish missions among the Protestants. The Catholics have been in the United States a much longer time than Protestants, and while Protestant churches grow up all around them, they can outstrip them in point of numbers. We are at a loss to know where they will begin [illegible] work. But if they have really determined to do it, they will begin it somewhere.

We are curious to see the criticisms of [illegible] papers. Will they criticise, and denounce, as we see the papers [illegible] with saloon keepers who habitually [illegible] law is to do with them after the [illegible] City Council of Paducah, Ky., [illegible] recently declined to renew the license of several of these law-breakers, and they [illegible] business, or, if they do business in [illegible] will conduct it in the dark.

UNION IN JAPAN.

The Commissioners from the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Church of Canada have at last come to an agreement, and effected a union of the three Churches in Japan. They agreed not only to a form of government but also on articles of faith. The articles are eighteen in number, but what they are has not yet been made public. In the agreement the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of our Church virtually gave up the distinctive features of our Episcopacy. Bishops, or General Superintendents, are retained, but they are elected for a period of eight years, and eligible for re-election. The presiding eldership is also retained, but those appointed to the office are to be nominated by the Annual Conference, two from each district, or a larger number, arranged by the Bishop. Appointments, under this arrangement, cannot be made without consultation with the presiding elders.

It will be remembered that a short time ago the Commissioners met, and, failing to agree, the Commissioners of the two Episcopal Methodisms in the United States, after adjournment, called a meeting and agreed upon terms of union, but held themselves in readiness to unite the Canadian brethren at a future time. In this last meeting we suppose every concession demanded by the Canadians was granted, and the Churches in Japan will become one. This we shall see the Church in Japan experimenting in part on a line laid down by O'Kelly, viz., an elective presiding eldership. The agreement is also in line with a radical element in Episcopal Methodism, who for more than a decade have been demanding that the life-tenure of Episcopacy be abolished. The new Church will be formally organized by a General Conference to be held in 1907. It will then be separate and independent. If the brethren directly interested are satisfied, and can carry on the work successfully, we shall bid them godspeed.

PERSONALS.

Mr. E. B. Cooper, of Brookhaven, Miss., who graduated with a most excellent record at Trinity College, N. C., June 6, has been elected Assistant Professor of English in Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas.

Rev. John G. Shann sends us a notice of the death of Mrs. N. F. Sanders, a most excellent Christian, and member of our Church at Farmerville, La. The bereaved family have the sympathy and prayers of many friends. An obituary will appear shortly.

Rev. S. H. Werlein, D.D., reared in New Orleans, and remembered by many Methodists of the city, has just passed through a tedious spell of typhoid fever. We are glad to learn of his recovery. He is now pastor of Tenth Street Church, Austin, Tex.

We are requested by Rev. L. M. Morse, presiding elder of the Forest District, to say that Rev. R. P. Fikes has been appointed to fill out the remainder of the Conference year on the Montrose Circuit, and that Rev. W. W. Moore will give his entire time to the Montrose High School.

Mr. R. N. Jeffery, late of Los Angeles, Cal., well recommended by California papers as a "singing evangelist," is now located in Covington, La., and will gladly assist our pastors in revival work. Preachers in need of such help will do well to correspond with him. Address him at Covington, care M. E. Church, South.

The good brethren of Mansfield, La., have unanimously resolved to build a new house of worship. After this point was settled they unanimously resolved that the new house should not cost less than $15,000. A building committee was determined upon, and the work will be commenced as soon as possible. In this great work the pastor, Rev. K. W. Dodson, will take the lead.

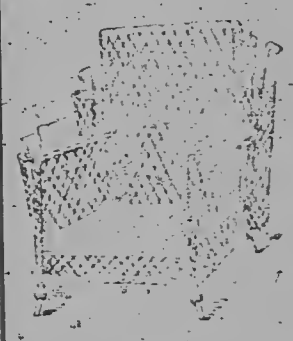
Bishop Ward, in reply to the invitation of the Texas brethren to occupy the Episcopal residence at Dallas, has declined the offer for the present. In his reply he intimates a preference to live in a home of his own. While having the matter under consideration he leaves the trustees free to make other disposition of the Episcopal residence.

Mrs. Jno. B. Hobbs, of New Orleans, who contracted with our manager, Mr. C. O. Chalmers, for the publication of the minutes of the late session of the Woman's Home Mission Society for the Louisiana Conference, is much pleased with the work. It is a pamphlet of forty-six pages, on good paper, and printed about as well as the minutes of any Conference we have seen. Our Publisher is to be congratulated on turning out such nice work.

A note from our friend and brother, J. Y. Webb, Sr., of Minden, La., written July 22, says: "To-day is my 74th birthday, and I want through your good paper (of which I have been a subscriber for a number of years) to send my love to all of the members of the Louisiana Conference that know me and my dear wife, and ask their prayers and sympathy in her behalf. She is sadly afflicted. I believe in the efficacy of prayer. The good Lord has heard and answered my prayers many, many times."

Rev. Henry T. Carley, recently appointed to Parker Memorial Church, this city, entered upon his work Sunday last, preaching both morning and evening. He was heartily welcomed by the people, and his sermons made a fine impression. Brother Carley begins his ministry here under unfavorable circumstances—the weather being hot and sultry, and many people being out of town. We hope he may have a pleasant and prosperous pastorate.

It is with great pleasure we learn that the Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, under the wise and efficient administration of Rev. Robt. Selby, has arranged to build a new and elegant house of worship. Plans will be drawn by a Knoxville firm of architects and work will soon begin. The house will cost between forty and fifty thousand dollars. The house now in use, though not old, is too small, and otherwise unsuited to the present congregation.



Rev. H. C. Edmondson, of Tocopola Circuit, has just closed a gracious meeting at "Old Midway," a church famous as the home of Uncle Billy Foust, an earnest and efficient exhorter in the middle of the last century. He got his start in life (and a good one, it was) by making and selling tar. It was a matter of principle with him to pay his church out in full. If he did not have the money he offered tar. If the preacher could not use tar, or make it available, he lost the balance of what Midway owed. The Rev. Enos B. Foust, who labored and died in Louisiana, was his son.

REVIVAL AT ARKABUTLA, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just closed our revival meeting at this place and the Lord has so wonderfully blessed us that I must tell you about it. We had the world, the flesh and the devil arrayed against us, but God, in mighty power, broke down every barrier and brushed away all obstacles.

It was the greatest revival in the history of the church, an old-time Methodist meeting—preaching, altar work, shouting, and all the rest. A goodly number were added to the Methodist and several to the Baptist Church.

Rev. R. N. Ireland, of Meridian, did the preaching, and he is a man full of the Holy Ghost and of the Faith. Under his pleading the hardest hearts were melted and yielded to God. There were scores of conversions, several entirely sanctified, and hundreds pledged themselves to live better lives. Methodists shouted, Baptists shouted, Campbellites shouted, Catholics were filled with the Spirit and joined our Church, children were happy, young men and women praised God, while the old gray-headed soldiers of the cross fell into each others arms and praised God, and wept for joy unspeakable, as the Holy Ghost fell in great power, and men threw away their tobacco and women threw away their snuff boxes, and declared to live pure and clean lives for God. What a pity that our preachers wont quit using tobacco and riding on Sunday trains, and come out for God and get where God can use them as he is using Brother Ireland.

Yours fraternally,
WM. G. MOSIER.

CENTENARY AGAIN.

It seems that some have supposed that the session to begin September 12 was to run only up to Conference, and the last sentence in my communication in the ADVOCATE of July 12 may have led them into that error. The session will run its usual length; and, by reason of the excellent faculty secured and the encouragement with which President Miller is meeting, we are expecting a very successful session to be had, ending in a glorious commencement the last of May or first of June.

C. MCDONALD.

The principle of sacrifice stands at the very threshold of the fascinating study of life, and is found at every turn of the bewildering maze which marks life's upward pathway of struggle and survival. In the vital functions of vegetable and animal life there are clear foreshadowings of the part which sacrifice plays in the great tragedy of existence. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me."

LONGTOWN CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: The third Quarterly Conference for Longtown Charge was held at Davis Chapel July 14-15. The attendance was only fairly good, owing to rainy weather and muddy roads. The finances, though not in full to date, were above the average for a summer quarterly meeting, and the charge in a general way is in good condition. Brother Gaines is magnifying the office of presiding elder. My revivals will soon begin, and I am expecting a great victory.

Mrs. Langford is at Yazoo City, under the treatment of a specialist, and, for the third time within eight months, submitted to his knife two days ago. I am thankful to state that she was doing really well yesterday. Her afflictions have been a great trial to us this year, and a hindrance to me in my work. The prayers of the brethren are asked in our behalf.

You missed a treat by not being with us in our District Conference at Hernando last week.

I appreciate the good paper you are now giving us, and am going to try to get up a club in connection with my revival work. Fraternally,

E. E. LANGFORD.

JONATHAN RIGDON'S MONUMENT.

"Jonathan Rigdon died very poor, didn't he?" I said.

"Yes, they buried him in a pauper's grave. Poor Rigdon! And he had a big heart," said the deacon. "He spent his whole life and a big fortune building a monument to another man."

"Was the monument ever finished, Deacon?"

"Yes, and Jonathan did it."

"How?"

"Well," said the deacon, sadly, "Jonathan commenced it early. He commenced putting money into the monument at seventeen and finished it at fifty."

"And he gave his whole time to it?"

"Yes, he worked night and day, often all night long, and on the Sabbath. He seemed to be in a hurry to get it done. He put all the money he earned upon it—some say $500,000. Then he borrowed all he could; and when no one would loan him any more he would take his wife's dresses and bedclothes and many other valuable things in his home and sell them to get more money to finish the monument."

"How self-sacrificing."

"Yes, Jonathan sacrificed everything for this monument," said the deacon. "He came home one day and was about to take the blankets that lay over his sleeping baby, and his wife tried to stop him; but he drew back his fist and knocked her down, and went away with the blankets and never brought them back, and the poor baby sickened and died from exposure. At last there was nothing left in the house. The poor heart-broken wife soon followed the baby to the grave. Yet Jonathan kept working all the more at the monument. I saw him when he was about fifty years old. The monument was nearly done; but he had worked so at it that I hardly knew him, he was so worn; his clothes were all in tatters, his face and nose were terribly swollen. And the wretched man had been so little in good society all the while he was building that he had almost forgotten how to use the English language; his tongue had somehow become very thick, and when he tried to speak out would come an oath."

"But the good man did finally accomplish the work?" I said.

"Yes, he finished it," said the deacon, his eyes moistening with tears.

"Oh, I should like to see it," I said.

"Come with me," said my informant, sadly, "and I will show it to you. It stands in a beautiful part of the city where five streets meet. Most men put such things in a cemetery. But John had his own way and put it in one of the finest lots to be found."

"Does it look like Grant's monument?"

"Yes, it is a good deal like Grant's monument. It is a grand house. There it is—look at it!" said the deacon, pointing to a beautiful mansion. "See! it is high and large, with great walls and fire places and such velvet carpets and, oh, what mirrors! Isn't it rich and grand?"

"And who lives in it, deacon?"

"Why, the man who sold Jonathan Rigdon nearly all the whisky he drank. He lives there with his family, and they wear the richest, finest clothes, and—"

"And poor Jonathan?"

"Why, he's in the pauper's graveyard. Alas!" sighed the deacon, "the world is full of such monuments, built by poor drunkards who broke the hearts of devoted wives and starved sweet children to do it."—The Zion's Watchman.

ROLAND LEE ALLEN was released from his bodily suffering on the afternoon of July 11, 1906, at 2 o'clock, and admitted into the kingdom above from his mother's home, on Main Street, Hattiesburg, Miss. For twelve years of his life he was afflicted with progressive paralysis, which was gradually encroaching upon his entire body. He was not known to complain of his physical disability, and was a source of much comfort to his widowed mother, his father having died on the 27th of June, 1905. On the 11th of March of this year he united with the Church, and the formal dedication of his life to the Lord and His Church was not a perfunctory service. He lived too far away to attend the services of his own church, but attended regularly the services of the Columbia Street Baptist Church, and was president of a children's society of that church. While his work was done in the Baptist Church, he was a thorough Methodist, and regretted his inability to attend his own church. He was not quite 15 years of age, and yet he was an enthusiastic student of the Bible, intelligently marking many passages that were helpful to him. He was an unusually bright boy, and was always of a happy disposition. His influence in the community was very marked, and he proved himself to be a safe leader of scores of little people. His character will be reproduced in the lives of others. His pastor, ROBT SELBY.

J. E. WHITTINGTON was born April 3, 1874; was married to Alice Ferrill Feb. 16, 1896, and died of pneumonia July 6, 1906. He leaves a wife and four little children to mourn their loss. He was sick more than eight weeks—was very sick from the start. When first taken he told his father-in-law that he was ready to go if the Lord called him. He lived his religion every day; carried it into his home, business and everywhere he went. He loved the Sunday-school, prayer-meeting and church service. He was devoted to his church and always ready to do his part. He had a happy home and was trying to bring his children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. He was ready and willing to die. He said there was not a shadow between him and his Lord. He talked to his wife, when he found he was dying, about his business, and told her to do what she thought best; bade his children and loved ones all good-by. He was perfectly happy in Jesus, and went to his heavenly home to live forever. We shall miss this man of God. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

W. D. DOMINICK, Pastor.

MILDRED TERRELL, daughter of Cate and Scottie Terrell, died at their home, after being sick about ten days with flux. Mildred had lived only about 19 months, but was the ideal of parents and grandparents. A beautiful child, winsome and happy, but she has gone to unfold more beautifully in her heavenly Father's home. She is now their sweet Mildred in the beautiful beyond.

W. D. DOMINICK, Pastor.

WILLIAM LEWIS RIDGEWAY was born in Kemper County, Miss., and died July 9, 1906, at his home in Binnsville at 12:30 p.m., aged 47 years, 6 months and 20 days. He was the oldest son of Sephalon and Martha Ridgeway, who preceded him to the kingdom some years since. His father had been married twice; of the first marriage there were three children; of the second there were nine. Two of the first family are dead. Of the second family five are still living. Brother Ridgeway was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1887, and since that time has been faithful to his vows. He was at Sunday-school and preaching yesterday (July 8), but on returning home was taken suddenly ill, and in twenty-four hours from the time he left the church he was a corpse. He leaves six brothers and sisters and a host of friends to mourn his death. He was loved by all who knew him, as he had no enemies. We shall miss him around the hearthstone, in the Sabbath-school, in the public sanctuary, and as a citizen. To the relatives and friends we would say, Weep not, for his work and trials are ended, and he now rests and enjoys his reward. Let us take fresh courage and strive that we may also enter the pearly gate beyond the swelling tide.

A. C. FLOWERS.

MRS. G. W. WHITAKER, nee Douglas, was born at Olive Branch, in East Feliciana Parish, La., October, 1870, and died at Slaughter, La., June 21, 1906. Sister Whitaker was converted at the age of 15, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Olive Branch, of which she remained a consistent member until God called her from the toils of earth to the rest of his home above. For many years she was a great sufferer—in fact, nearly all life was a life of affliction, but her sufferings are over, and God has called her to that bright home where she will never say "I am sick" again. In her last hours she expressed herself as willing that God's will be done. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband and five children, a mother, brothers and sisters. But they "sorrow not as those who have no hope." They expect to meet her again, where they will not see her suffer as she did here. May God bless the little ones left behind.

R. O. WIER.

WILLYE A. COLLINS was born Nov. 19, 1866, and departed this life from her home near Holloway's Prairie, June 13, 1906. Between these dates was lived an humble, useful life, whose record is written in the minds and hearts of those who knew and loved her, and more fully in the book of God's remembrance; and while we will cherish the memory of her life, and love may keep it fresh and green, yet we will never know its full beauty until we meet again in the light by which we may know, even as we are known. She was twice married—first to Leslie DeClark, to whom she bore a son and daughter, when he was taken away by death. She remained a widow for six or seven years. In November, 1895, she was married to Isaac C. Price, with whom she lived very happily until her death. A son and two daughters were born to them, and are left a precious charge on the father's hands and heart. Sister Price was converted about fourteen years ago, and from that time until the day of her death she was faithful to God in all things. Her religion was not a hope, but a conscious reality in her daily experience, and a positive force in her daily life. She talked calmly of her departure, and, leaving some last directions, calmly fell asleep.

I have made a chemical analysis of a sample of COCA-COLA SYRUP, which I procured myself from an original parcel in the stock of the Powers-Taylor Drug Company.

The analysis was made expressly to ascertain if the syrup contains cocaine, and after a painstaking search, I have not found any indication of it.

LESSON FOR AUG. 12, 1906.

THE PARABLE OF THE TWO SONS.

Luke xv. 11-32.

Golden Text—Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord. Malachi iii. 7.

To increase the interest in our study of the Master's work in the last year of his earthly ministry, let us preserve the connection of one incident with another as far as practicable; then, when the year's study is ended, we will be both able to review in our own minds the places where and the people whom he taught.

It seems that after Jesus had left the Pharisee's house, where he had been dining, he was journeying afoot through the land of Perea, beyond the river Jordan. He taught as he went along, and it seems that, to impress a point in his teaching, he would stop and turn around, facing his followers. He told them that unless he had the love of their whole heart, they could not be his disciples. They must take up their cross after weighing well the task ahead of them.

In the throng that followed him were many publicans and sinners; so prominent was this class that the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying: "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." The world rejoices to-day in the truth of this statement. The Master then began to speake in parables. He told of the lost sheep, and the rejoicing after it was found; and likewise the lost coin; and, following each of these parables in turn, he assured them of the rejoicing in heaven over the repentant sinner. To impress them more with the love of God as a kind and loving Father, he related to them the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which has been the powerful means of calling so many sinners to repentance in all countries and in all ages.

Let us enter the study of this parable to-day more prayerfully than ever before. It is old to us, for we have known it since mother told it to us, almost before we could read it for ourselves; yet it is ever new, for it tells us over and over of the great love of the Heavenly Father, and how he is ever willing to receive us again after we have wandered away.

The poor boy, who became dissatisfied with home, and wanted to get away from restraint, will be taught and thought about and found as attractive as it has always been, and its meaning will never lose its effect on the heart of him who seeks joy and peace in believing. There is also a lesson to be learned and taught from the father and from the older son. Jesus holds this father up before us as a perfect parent. We must infer that he had done all to make home attractive to his boy. Have we tried all means to keep the boy at home? Are we intimate with our son? Do we have confidential talks with him about things in which he is interested? Have we studied his comfort in setting aside a room that we call his room? Let us show him, in every way we can, how important we think his presence at home is. If we treat him in this way, he will come and consult us in everything that concerns him, and we can have him so that he will never say, "Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me." How beautiful is the sight of the father and son in prayer together! This pleasure is possible to any who begin early enough, both in age and experience. God gave us our sons to show his love for, as we love our sons, so does he love us—only more tender and strong is the Heavenly Father's love.

The older brother did not think of leaving home; he did not have time; he was in the field when his brother came back home — perhaps he was there when he went away. His was a life of duty, stern duty. He thought of his relation to his father as a commodity, making calculations as to results in the same line as to how much can be produced from a certain kind of seed grain. His condition must have caused the father as much pain as did the younger brother when he left home. We must not be too hard on the older son, because there are so many of his kind in the world. Many gobler sons are in the church now, and they keep many of the younger brothers out of the church. This older brother had not learned a truth that the younger one was taught while he was a keeper of swine—that the love of the Father was broad enough to cover all who sought it.

While Jesus may have meant to represent the Pharisees and scribes by the older son, and the publicans and sinners by the younger; yet we are privileged to apply the lesson to present conditions; and we think the work of grace is easier in the case of the prodigal than in him who has advocated duty so sternly as to cause a drought of the milk of human kindness in his heart.

Let us pray that we be delivered from the sin of the elder brother, and that we put no hindrance to the return of the prodigal by act, word or even expression of countenance, for it is our Father in heaven that says, "Return unto me and I will return unto you," always remembering that there is joy in heaven over repentant sinners.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

LAKE CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: We held our Carrs Church protracted meeting from the 15th to the 17th inst. Dr. Weems was my helper and he did all the preaching, which was in great power. An interesting feature in the meeting was the patriarch of this section, the father of Dr. Weems, who attended every service, and yet he is in his 92d year. This is Brother Weem's old home, the Church of his childhood, and from which he entered the ministry.

There were three accessions to the Church and two applicants and three infants baptized, besides a fine revival spirit pervading. Brother Weems preached to a large number of kindred and many friends who knew him from boyhood. We closed one day sooner than we expected on account of the rains.

We had an unpleasant experience lately. A preacher came in the most remote portion of the circuit and held a meeting without my knowledge or consent. It was not a brother pastor, for his gentlemanly principles would not let him, but it was a local preacher of our Church. C. McDONALD.

We Are Specialists

In the treatment of Chronic Diseases of men and women. Having devoted over 20 years to their study and treatment, built up a practice which we believe is second to none in this country, and from the many letters of endorsement received from people we have cured, we feel that we offer every chance possible of a cure. Our methods are all modern and up-to-date—absolutely the best medical science affords. We hold diplomas from the leading medical colleges of America.

Our practice is conducted on the highest ethical basis. We make no wild, extravagant statements that we can cure every disease mankind is subject to, make promises we cannot fulfill, deceptive propositions, misleading statements, etc. Our reputation and standing, both professionally and financially, is of the very highest, and firmly established.

If you have any disease of a chronic nature, consult us. We will give you our expert opinion of your case free and tell you frankly just what we can do for you. We especially solicit severe and difficult cases. WE DO NOT DEAL IN PATENT MEDICINES, but prepare in our own private laboratory special treatment to suit the conditions of each case. Our recent publication on Nervous Diseases and "Health" free on application, also examination blank. "A" for men and "B" for women. We always advise a personal examination. FROM SAUCIER, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We began a protracted meeting at Lyman, Miss., June 25, and closed out July 2. This meeting was of great interest. Rev. C. H. Ellis, of New Augusta, was with us, and did all the preaching. He rendered faithful service. His messages were rich and sweet, for the Lord was with him, and the Word of God fell from his lips with power. Surely we had a glorious time.

In the ordinary way of reckoning conversions and reclamations, there were about twenty. One little boy was received into the Church and two infants were baptized.

The Lord bless you, and, with favor, compass you as a shield.

ANOTHER KIND OF GOSSIP.

Gossip isn't always disagreeable. Two pleasant-faced women rode in on a suburban train the other morning. One sat behind the other, and all the way into town they kept up a running comment of personalties something like this:

"Elsie is a dear little thing, isn't she?"

"Indeed she is—one of the sweetest young girls I know?"

"They say she was quite the belle of the ball at the party last night."

"Was she? She didn't seem to think so at all. She has such a sweet personality, neither bashful nor forward. She speaks so nicely of her stepmother."

"I never heard her speak unkindly of any one."

"No, that's true," said the other warmly. "And she always has a great deal of good to say about every one."

The women continued to speak affectionately of Elsie, until the listener felt a warm interest in this fresh, charming, modest young girl. It was clear she was all that.

Then the talk turned on two girls evidently visiting at the home of one.

"It's a pleasure to have them. They are such bright, merry girls, and so careful not to disturb our routine in the least detail. They would be really distressed if they were half a minute late to meals."

"I've heard their mother talking to them," smiled the other. "They have had the best of training."

"One would easily know that."

And then, while one wished one might know these two model young guests, the conversation touched on a masculine mutual acquaintance and his daughter.

"I felt sorry for her. She wished so much to visit them. But her father—well, you know. He will not permit."

There was silence for a momennt; then, not a fusillade of criticism against the harsh parents, but this:

"John will see more clearly after a while," said one in a quite tone. "He is a good man, and his motives are high. When he sees his mistake, he will rectify it."

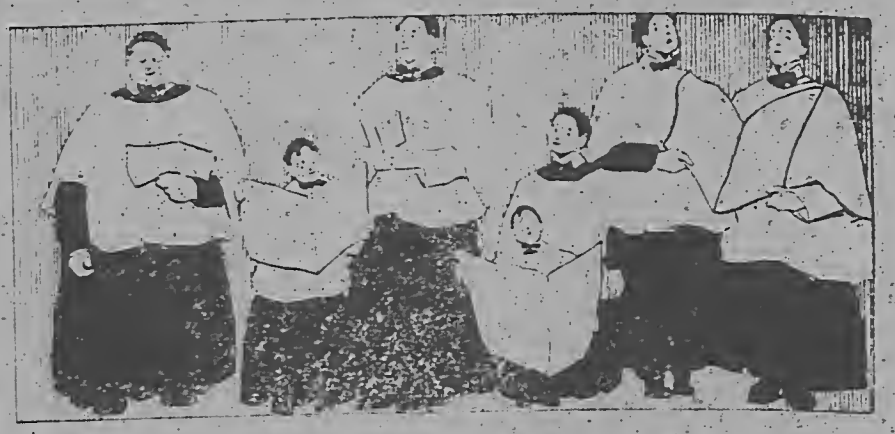
Upon this they heartily agreed, and before long a married friend was the subject of the pleasant low-voiced duet.

"What lovely children she has!" said one. "She is so exquisitely gentle with them."

"Her husband is one of the finest men I know," said the other and she told a little anecdote which was like a peep into a happy and exceptional family life.

Before the train ran into the city sheds, the interested eaves-dropper was introduced to quite a little circle of the mutual friends of these two excellent ladies. They were all such kindly, agreeable people that one's only regret was not to be able to make their actual acquaintance.

Were they all really so delightful? one wondered. Or was it that these hearts would think ill of none, and these silvery tongues speak only good?



It was a kind of gossip that did no harm. It made you feel that the world must be rather a pleasant place, with so many nice people living in it.—Bulletin.

Glances at the World.

As far back, almost, as this writer can remember, there was great fear of immigration, and a great outcry against permitting so many foreigners to land upon our shores. But, without cessation the stream has continued to pour in upon us—sometimes large in volume, and sometimes small. To-day it is overwhelming. The year ending June, 1905, was a record-breaker, showing an importation of 1,026,499 foreigners, but 1906 exceeded those figures by 73,574. The bad feature in this influx is the fact that the class of immigrants is not so high as in many previous years, most of them coming from Austria, Hungary, Russia and Italy. Fewer come from England, Scotland, France and Germany than for a good many years past. What to do with these foreigners is a question that grows in magnitude day by day. We can find them homes, but how provide for their moral welfare is a puzzling question to every lover of mankind. They must be Americanized, else they will Europeanize America.

During the time the denatured alcohol bill was pending its friends persuaded the people to believe that alcohol rendered unfit for drinking and made duty-free could be produced from almost any kind of farm refuse, and at a trifling. This, it was argued, would be money to the farmers, and would greatly reduce expenses for lighting and running machinery, and all other things where alcohol can be used except for drinking purposes. The government chemist, Dr. Wiley, has issued a bulletin (or will soon) in which he dispels this idea. In this bulletin Dr. Wiley "shows what are the prospects for the manufacture of alcohol by farmers and reaches conclusions unfavorable to the popular idea that under the new law farmers will be able to make alcohol out of refuse and on a small scale. Dr. Wiley thinks the only materials that can well be used for the product will be corn, molasses, beets and potatoes, and some of these probably only to a restricted extent. The reason Germany is able to make alcohol on farms is the existence of a practically prohibitive tariff on alcohol imported into the country. The cost of distilling and preparing denatured alcohol for our market is estimated at 40 to 45 cents per gallon, wholesale. The contents of the bulletin will probably prove a disagreeable surprise to some of those who have been booming the free alcohol plan as a special benefit to farmers."

In addition to the biggest wheat and corn crops ever produced in the country, there is at this time the prospect of a fine cotton crop. In some of the cotton growing regions too much rain fell during the early part of July and the plant was injured, but favorable weather during the last days of the month enabled the plant to recover and, without disaster in the future, the crop will be at least an average one. The prospect is particularly good in Texas, which is the largest grower of cotton of any of the states. The Daily Picayune, referring to the cotton crop, says: "Within a few days the Agricultural Department, at Washington, will issue a report showing the average condition of the cotton crop in each state and the general average of condition for the entire Cotton Belt, based upon returns of an average date of July 25. Naturally much interest attaches to the average the Government will issue, not because anyone has any very implicit confidence in the accuracy of the Government reports, but because an official opinion always carries more or less weight with it, and naturally forms a basis for calculations and predictions which no private report, no matter how reliable and reputable, can furnish." The rice crop, which is now being gathered, is good and the sugar fields promise an abundant harvest. The whole country is greatly blessed.

The following paragraph in reference to the trade of the United States, we take from the Times-Democrat: "The statistics of the foreign business of the country show that the year just closed was a record-breaker, especially in the matter of exports. Despite the fact that imports increased enormously, there was a balance of trade in our favor of something over five hundred million dollars. That this business did much to maintain the value of securities in the past year is not a matter of doubt, for it prevented the depletion of the stock of "real money," which conditions across the waters would have caused were our sales abroad not so enormous. The figures covering imports and exports for the twelve months ended with June are: Exports, $1,743,864,500; imports, $1,226,563,843; total, $2,970,428,343. This total, it is said, represents a sum greater than the cost of the Civil War, though that statement is misleading, no figures of the actual cost of the civil war being obtainable. This enormous foreign trade of the country is computed to represent but 10 per cent of its aggregate trade, the greater portion necessarily being domestic. With this percentage as a basis, it is readily seen that the total commerce of the country was about thirty billions of dollars, or about $350 per capita for the population of the community. No other country on earth can make such a showing, but, on the other hand, no other people showed such lavish expenditure during the years as the Americans."

According to a report sent out by the New York Tribune a new political party is soon to be launched. An upheaval in national politics, such as has not been seen since 1856, when the Republican party was organized, is imminent. It appears that the matter has been worked up quietly, but thoroughly, as already it numbers a million men, and is rapidly growing. Those engaged in the movement are not members of any one party, but of all the parties, the chief ones being Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin, George Fred Williams of Massachusetts, Wm. R. Hearst of New York, Hoke Smith of Georgia, Tom Watson of Georgia, Gov. Folk, of Missouri, Gov. Hanly of Indiana, Gov. Cummins of Iowa, and probably Mr. Bryan and Senator Tillman. Some of these men are leaders in the Democratic party, and some in the Republican. The leading features of the new party are "government ownership of monopolies, and reform of the tariff." There is too much of all this to be true. Just at the time the Democrats are expressing great hope of success, and are, doubtless, planning to nominate Mr. Bryan for the presidency, it hardly stands to reason that he would lend his influence to such a movement. And it is hardly probable that Gov. Folk, a Democrat, and Gov. Hanly, a staunch Republican, will give their aid. As for Mr. Bryan, he is too shrewd to give countenance to it, unless assured that in the national campaign the party would merge with the regular Democratic party in opposition to the Republicans. If there is any truth in the report, it is an indication that the Democratic party, as now constituted, has but little hope of success in the next election.

ARCADIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Your scribe thinks it was, in some respects, a record-breaker. Every preacher-in-charge was present except one of our supplies, who was kept away by sickness. Three of our superannuated brethren were with us. Seven members of the Louisiana Conference and one of the Arkansas Conference favored us by their visits. The attendance of local preachers and lay delegates was above the average.

A better series of sermons is rarely, if ever, heard continuously at a District Conference in Louisiana than were those to which we listened. We had a Bishop, and two presiding elders.

Winnfield, a few years ago, was a scattered settlement, twenty-five miles from navigation, and forty miles from the railroad. Now they talk of three thousand inhabitants, show you banks, hotels, spacious residences, mills, etc. One primitive log house remains near the center of the town, a reminder of the former days. They have three railroads and expect more, and are planning for a street car line out to the prospective oil well.

Brother Holloway, under whose pastorate Winnfield Station has flourished, made a fine host, and his good people entertained royally.

No Bishop, white or black, had ever been in Winnfield before, and Bishop Ward's visit was quite an event. The Arcadia District gave him a hearty welcome. His presiding over the Conference was highly satisfactory and helpful, and his sermon on "The Sonship of Believers" was strong and edifying.

The Conference broke the record in the brevity and fewness of its resolutions, for which the secretary was thankful.

One fine young man, G. E. Glassaul, of Homer, was licensed to preach and recommended for admission into the Annual Conference. He intends to go to Vanderbilt next session. During the next few weeks he will probably be employed to canvass for Mansfield College, according to a recent arrangement of the trustees. He is the first person to receive license to preach in this district for a number of years.

T. W. Vaughan, local preacher, was recommended for Deacon's Orders.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: Dr. R. Roberts, of Ruston; W. J. Reames, of Minden; R. P. McClendon, of Lisbon, and Rev. W. L. Hamil, of Homer. The alternates are: W. P. Theus, of Arcadia, and J. T. Cooper, of Bernice.

The reports from charges concerning the various interests of the church show the district to be in a prosperous condition for the most part, and Presiding Elder Carter is hopeful of a splendid showing at the Annual Conference. The next District Conference will be held at Bernice.

R. H. Wyers, Secretary.

BOONEVILLE METHODISM.

It is with some hesitancy that I enter into an extended account of our work at Booneville, since I have been using the columns of the ADVOCATE rather freely. Yet, it seems that the picture of a church at work in the truest sense of the word might be helpful to the readers of the ADVOCATE. Necessarily the sketch must be incomplete and imperfect; it will be more a detail of organizations than anything else,—the heart, the soul of the work cannot be set forth.

We started in with the determination to have a Methodist church with all the details of organization that the Discipline and the customs of the church provide for. If, after we had achieved this, we had time for further work, we determined to take that on, too. Under the stress of this effort, our working force has grown and included more and more of our membership, until it is possible that the time may come when every member of the church will be actively pushing some phase of our work.

We begin with the cradle roll. This beautiful work, under the direction of a conscientious manager, has been a blessing to our church and Sunday-school. We have a very pretty roll to hang in the Sunday-school room, and a sweet method of marking the disposition of the little ones on the roll. If the family removes, a little train of cars is pasted opposite the name of the little one. If the baby grows up and is transferred to the primary department, a rose is attached by the name. When the little one dies an angel's face marks the fact that this one has been taken off our cradle roll and promoted to the cradle roll the Father has above. Beginning with the primary department, we have attempted grading the Sunday-school. The grades are, primary, junior, intermediate, senior and Bible grades. There are classes for boys and girls, or men and women, in each grade except the primary. We have introduced a simple plan of supplemental work into the primary and junior gardes. In passing through these grades a pupil, in addition to the regular lessons, is expected to learn several Psalms and hymns, the Lord's prayer, the Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, the books of the Bible, the names of the apostles, and the names of the patriarchs. We have a well-organized teachers' meeting, which, in addition to the study of the lesson and of methods of work adapted to present needs in our school, is taking extra work in fields of information closely connected with the course of lessons for the present year. Our main school has an enrollment of 225 (church membership 315); adding to this 14 officers and teachers, our enrollment for the main school is 239. We have a most efficient home department. This department has its own superintendent, ten visitors, and something near one hundred members. Its organization is not completed. When it is, it will enroll fourteen visitors and considerably more than a hundred members. The total enrollment of our Sunday-school is between 300 and 400.

We have both Senior and Junior Epworth Leagues. Our Senior League has been a great help to the pastor and a spiritual force among the young people of the church. Its prayer-meetings are wonderfully helpful. We take twelve sets of the reading course and have monthly literary meetings, at which a certain portion of one of the books furnishes a basis for the programme. The department of Charity and Help monthly reports scores of visits made, lunches taken to the sick, flowers carried, and other items of help and blessing. This department, in conjunction with the W. H. M. S., is organizing for Bible readings at the Poorhouse and with invalids and convalescents.

The Junior League is doing faithful work. It has undertaken the support of a scholarship in our Brazil mission field. The little folks in this organization are also members of the Juvenile Missionary Society, one meeting a month being given up to this work.

We have both women's societies, and they are both doing good work. The W. H. M. S. has added considerably to the comfort of the parsonage during the year, and is planning larger things for the Lord's work, both in our local field, and in the broad home field.

Altogether, we have not a better organized church in Mississippi than our church at Booneville. I mention with considerable pride the fact that we have a Church Conference Secretary who fills his office in exactly the fashion the Discipline says he should. His reports of additions, removals, and infant baptisms are handed in at the Quarterly Conference as supplemental to the pastor's written report on the state of the church. They are models of neatness and accuracy.

We have a splendid body of men in the Board of Stewards. Most of them have family altars, attend Sunday-school, and pray in public. They are conscientious in looking after their pastor's financial needs. The preacher at Booneville needs to spend but little time in thinking of his salary. It has never been behind during all this year, and more than once there has been something ahead.

Of course, there are difficulties. If there were not, the church would need very little of a preacher. But we are cheerful, we love each other, and we believe in God. And it is our opinion that a long pull and a strong pull and a pull altogether will overcome all the difficulties and enable us to make new conquests for our Lord.

WALTER G. HARRIS.

EPWORTH LEAGUE IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

It is said that "figures do not lie," and yet there is no more misleading fact as a rule than the statistical tables. Figures ought to tell the truth, but they are frequently unreliable. Take, for example, the reports of the preachers-in-charge on the Epworth League, and they never correspond with the figures in the Nashville office. Now, the purpose of this article is to call attention more fully to the work among the young people in our Conference, to provide for its enlargement and efficiency, and to secure reliable statistics at Conference.

To this end I ask: First—That the preachers-in-charge organize Leagues wherever practicable. Some pastors feel called upon to organize a Sunday-school, but the absence of the League causes them no concern. Brethren, call your young people together, give them something to do—either paint the parsonage, raise the collections, visit the sick, hold a prayer meeting, read a book—anything that will help.

These brethren will please push the League interests in the respective districts, and aid in the collection of correct statistics. The Discipline provides that the Sunday school statistics shall show the number of scholars enrolled during the whole year, and I see no reason why the same rule should not apply to the Epworth League. If the League existed at any time during the year the pastor's report should show it. His report is not expected to show what it [illegible] at the time of Conference exercises, but what it has been doing the whole year.

THE RESOLUTION.

Dear Doctor:—When the Re-state ment of the Doctrines of World-wide Methodism was proposed at the last General Conference, I felt afraid and was disposed to be laying hands upon the Articles of Faith, thinking that they contained all that was needed in the way of statement of our doctrines, and fearing that it might mean the introduction of some so-called advanced thought or "higher criticism."

But I could hardly believe that any such thought could be in the mind of the originator of the Resolution.

I turned to the Discipline and read the Articles again, and was impressed that they needed to be made clearer.

Many of the laity could not form an intelligent idea of the Doctrines of our church from these Articles, and it would take a wise interpreter to render them intelligible to the masses.

I have just finished reading Dr. Tillett's paper in the July number of the Methodist Review on "A Statement of the Faith of World-wide Methodism," which has fully convinced me that we need a re-statement of the Doctrines.

Let all the preachers and laymen read this most able article, and I feel sure they will no longer fear that any harm will come to our beloved Methodism from its author.

Sometimes a mere sentiment hinders our doing the right thing. The old church-house should be torn away, a new one built to meet the demands of the times, or moved to the center of the community, but the enterprise is defeated, because mother and father formerly worshiped there, or their loved ones are buried in the cemetery, and thus the cause of Christ is greatly hindered.

We should think whether this is righteous.

I think Brother J. R. Bingham is capable of taking care of himself, but wish to say that the brethren in this week's ADVOCATE, in my opinion, misunderstood his protest against Brother Blank's article. He, nor anyone else, can object to a manly, fair and friendly discussion of this question. Yours fraternally,

J. H. MITCHELL.

[illegible] eight or [illegible] the presiding [illegible] preach a [illegible] Sunday. I [illegible] present to you, Miss. There was no Veranda there then. Your father [illegible] gig [illegible] that could travel [illegible] equal to any horse. He wore a long broadcloth [illegible] coat, [illegible] quite common among [illegible] that day and time. Overcoats were not common then. A large shawl or a blanket thrown over the shoulders, or with a hole in the center of it for the head to go through, served the purpose of an overcoat.

On one of his trips he brought you along with him, and I remember how you sat in the old box pulpit with him. Our acquaintance and friendship began with that quarterly meeting. We were boys about the same age—though, likely, you will deny being anywhere near as old as I am. Any way, I entered the ministry in 1858, and you in 1859. I was in my twentieth year, and you were older or younger when you entered. On Sunday of that quarterly meeting your father and my mother allowed us to go down in the woods, back of the church, to hear Bro. T. J. Lowery preach to the negroes. They had a great meeting—the negroes always had when brother Lowery preached.

He understood them and they knew and loved him. The white people were very particular about providing the means of grace for their slaves. Brother Lowery, himself a well-to-do man in the world and owner of slaves, spent many years in preaching the gospel to the negroes. Many of the redeemed among the black people will rise up and called him blessed in that day. Sam Justice, a coal-black, flat-nosed, thick-lipped, big-footed, squatty African negro, was the attraction to us that day. He was brought to this country from Africa when he was about sixteen years old. This was the greatest blessing that ever happened to Sam. He came here an ignorant beast, almost a brute, and he made an humble, devout Christian and man of God. He never learned much, was always ignorant, but he did learn how to pray and to be an honest, honorable man. The people, both white and black, had confidence in Sam's piety, his honesty and his fidelity to God. He was devout and enthusiastic. He entered into a religious meeting with all his soul. For the time being he was oblivious to everything but the worship of God. He cried, sang, prayed and shouted throughout the entire service. He sat in front of the preacher and divided out the preaching as the minister proceeded. "Mary, dats you, and Tom, dats you, or, brudder Lowery, dats me, and I'se de meanest nigger in dis house." He divided unto each his portion in due season, rather on all occasions. Sam's English was powerfully broken, but somehow the people understood him. In prayer he always addressed the Lord as "O Lord, Massa God," and in a sing-song tone. His prayers were long and wonderfully inclusive. He took everything, even the smallest items, to God in prayer. He prayed for himself, for his wife and children, for his master and mistress, and for their children by name; prayed for the preacher, the class leader, the members, prayed for rain or sunshine, as might be needed, for the cotton, corn, wheat and oats, and prayed for the horses, mules and cows, and the dogs [illegible] praying [illegible] word of [illegible] Father and Master [illegible] and everything [illegible] and heaven [illegible] old, but he grew in grace [illegible] the world [illegible] years of his [illegible] something [illegible] gers and [illegible] he could not walk, but [illegible] his cabin and prayed and hummed the songs of Zion and shouted all day long. His constant prayer was, "O Lawd, Massa God, please come an' take old Sam home, de got there—don't you forget it. O Sam got there. The end came in December. The hands were in the field picking cotton. Sam's cabin caught fire and burned down and Sam was burned to a crisp. Master, mistress and the hands got there in time to hear Sam praying, singing, shouting and blessing God that he was going home to "heben." Kidnaped in Africa, imported to America, doomed to a life of slavery under a Christian master, he was arrested by Christ, washed in his blood, became a free-born son of God, and is now a joint heir with Christ in the kingdom of glory. This was a strange route, but it led to a kingdom and a crown.

When I get home I will be glad to meet old Sam. We will stroll together under the trees that line the bank of the river and sit down on some grassy knoll and talk for hours about the good times we used to have at old Smyrna church. Yours,

GILDEROY.

Lula, Miss.

THE EDEN OF LOVE.

How sweet to reflect on those joys that await me
In yon blissful region, the haven of rest,
Where glorified spirits with welcome shall greet me,
And lead me to mansions prepared for the blest.

Encircled in light, and with glory enshrouded,
My happiness perfect, my mind's sky unclouded,
I'll bathe in the ocean of pleasure unbounded
And range with delight through the Eden of Love.

While legions of angels, with harps tuned celestial,
Harmoniously join in the concert of praise,
The saints as they flock from the regions terrestrial,
In loud hallelujahs their voices will raise;
The song of redemption shall echo through heaven,
My soul will respond to Immanuel be given
All glory, all honor, all might and dominion,
Who brought us, through grace, to the Eden of Love.

Hail, blessed estate! Hail, ye songsters of glory!
Ye harpers of bliss, soon I'll meet you above,
And join your full choir in rehearsing the story,
"Salvation from sorrow, through Jesus' love."
Though prison'd in earth, yet by anticipation,
Already my soul feels a sweet exhilaration
Of joy that awaits me when freed from temptation,
My heart's now in heaven, the Eden of Love.

Mr. Editor: The above was composed by W. C. Tilson, a long time ago. My thoughts to-day have been much about God and heaven and about the "Eden of Love." In looking through an old copy of "Songs of Zion," my eyes rested on the song headed, "The Eden of Love." I read it with interest and profit. I thought likely some [illegible] was worn [illegible] like [illegible] who feeds his or [illegible] race is nearly run, [illegible] reading it. [illegible] I send it to you for [illegible] tion. My [illegible] recently [illegible] father has been [illegible] for the [illegible] few days. He [illegible] last Sunday at [illegible] Flow [illegible] to fill the [illegible] Lord's day. [illegible] preached [illegible] I wish you [illegible] would come over to town and preach a real good, [illegible] old-time gospel sermon. Our preacher is a good man and preacher, but is not spiritual, and he reads his sermon. [illegible] great Dr. Linfield, late of the Mississippi Conference, used to read his sermons. He was [illegible] he read well; but when he got so [illegible] he no longer used to read, he preached with [illegible] more power than he did when he was [illegible] dependent on his manuscript.

Some one said once, "a man ought to have his sermon in his head and in his heart. Then, if possible, have in his closet and he can go into the pulpit in the unity and strength of Christ, and hide behind the cross, [illegible] Jesus Christ and him crucified, keeping himself hid all the while. That may be a little hard for some, but it is the best way.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

At the recent [illegible] of the Vicksburg District Conference the subject of Christian Education was given quite a prominent place. In the course of the discussion some remarks were made which, in the estimation of this scribe at least, are worthy of a wider circulation. Among those who participated were several of the faculty of Millsaps College. In his speech one of them made the assertion that for the average student the smaller college was the more desirable. This is not because Millsaps was not prepared to care for young men by the thousand, but because of the good that comes to the student from personal contact with his instructors. This is only a statement in the interest of the young men committed to the faculty of an institution in keeping with the broad principle inaugurated by the Master, that we are the salt of the earth, and further in keeping with the idea embraced in the obligation, "Will you visit from house to house?" This is the idea which differentiates Christian education as supported by these churches from education as supported by the State, namely, to care for the proficient in their branches as instructors, but men who will also help such a student for the religious life of the [illegible] from under their hands without having been impressed for the [illegible] as for the more intellectual pursuits. VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Vicksburg District Conference was held in the Methodist chapel of the Methodist Congregation, at Hermanville, Miss., July 4-6, 1906, with Bishop Seth Ward as the presiding officer.

All the pastors were present except one, who was kept away on account of sickness. The attendance of the lay representation was rather small.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. M. B. Scarbrough, and was thoroughly scriptural and made a very forcible impression upon the audience.

Wednesday morning, July 4, the Conference was called to order in its first business session by Bishop Ward, who conducted the devotional services in a most impressive manner.

Throughout the entire Conference there was a spirit of harmony and Christian love prevailing among the brethren, and a sense of the Divine Presence was felt.

The reports from the various pastoral charges, while not as satisfactory in some particulars as could be desired, indicated some decided progress and steady development in the work of the church within the bounds of this district, especially in the matter of finances. All the pastors were planning for revival meetings, and it is to be hoped that these men, called of God to preach his everlasting gospel, were so infused with a new inspiration from on high that the influence of this Conference will be felt throughout the bounds of the Vicksburg District. May there be a large ingathering of souls into the kingdom of Christ.

The Conference was honored with the presence of several visitors, representing various church work.

Rev. H. T. Carley, Epworth League Organizer for the Mississippi Conference, addressed the District Conference on this important work. His was a very stirring appeal to marshall the forces of the young life of the church into more aggressive work for God and humanity.

Rev. O. A. Oats, Manager and Agent for the Orphans' Home, made a strong appeal for this noble institution.

Professors Rickets and Wambsley, of Millsaps College, spoke to the Conference on the great work this flourishing institution of learning is accomplishing for God, the church and the State.

Dr. Albert L. Orr, Superintendent of the Crawford St. Sunday-school, was present and treated the Conference with a splendid address on "Modern Sunday-school Methods." His address was well received.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, presiding elder of the Jackson District, was also present and added to the interest of our body with his wise words of counsel and encouragement.

Mrs. A. F. Watkins, Corresponding Secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Annual Conference, was present, and we do not think there was a more inspiring feature of the entire Conference than was the stirring address of this noble woman engaged in this noble and great work.

There was scarcely a heart that was not touched, moved and stirred by her thrilling words of encouragement. Her address was so well received and made such a favorable impression that the Conference adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we have heard with great appreciation the address of Mrs. A. F. Watkins, and that we pledge ourselves to the best of our ability and opportunity to aid the noble work which she so nobly and worthily represents."

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are as follows: Principals—R. L. Creek, C. Price, W. L. Short and D. N. Brown. Alternates—J. W. Strong and G. M. Hunter.

The Licensing Committee, nominated by the presiding elder and confirmed by the Conference consists of the following: T. B. Holloman, J. T. Leggett, W. J. Ferguson, W. T. Griffin, M. B. Scarbrough and W. H. Lewis.

The Rev. W. H. Huntley, the faithful and beloved presiding elder of the district, is closing out his term of four years, and, as a token of the love and esteem the brethren have for him, resolutions of appreciation were offered and unanimously adopted by the Conference with a rising vote.

H. H. Griffin was recommended for admission on trial into the Annual Conference.

Resolutions of thanks to Brother Foreman, the faithful and beloved pastor at Hermanville, were adopted, and similar expressions of appreciation for the generous hospitality of the people of Hermanville dispensed to the Conference. Every brother said he had the best home in Hermanville. May the great Head of the Church pour out abundantly of his spiritual blessings upon this people.

Washington St. Church, Vicksburg, was chosen as the place for the next District Conference.

The presence and presidency of Bishop Ward was especially appreciated. The entire Conference fell in love with him. His sermons were of the very highest grade and impressed the congregations favorably. As a presiding officer he was painstaking, inquiring very minutely into the different branches of church work. Above all, his Christly and brotherly spirit was especially commented upon and the brethren of the Vicksburg District feel that no mistake was made by the General Conference in electing this refined Christian gentleman to the highest office in the church.

With a brotherly love and sympathy for one another, the District Conference for the Vicksburg District went into history for the year 1906 on Friday morning, July 6.

F. B. ORMOND, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

ADOPTED BY A UNANIMOUS RISING VOTE.

Whereas, under the laws of our Church, our beloved presiding elder, Bro. W. H. Huntley, cannot be appointed again to the district, we, the pastors of the district and members of the District Conference, take this opportunity to express our high appreciation of his fraternal care for the pastors and the welfare of the Church within our bounds; therefore, be it resolved,

First—That we extend to him our grateful appreciation, and that we shall recall with pleasure his zeal and constant thought for the district, and his loving sympathy for those over whom he has had charge.

Resolved further, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this body, and that the Secretary be instructed to furnish a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Signed by: T. B. Holloman, W. H. Lewis, H. G. Hawkins, W. T. Griffin, J. H. Foreman, F. B. Ormond, W. J. Ferguson, W. A. Perry, G. A. Guice, H. H. Griffin, J. W. Campbell, J. T. Leggett and J. M. Lewis.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

The Corresponding Secretary responded to a call from the Presiding Elder, Rev. C. W. Hill, and the pastor, Rev. W. P. Buckner, Joplin, Mo., to assist them in providing funds for the completion of a magnificent new $40,000 stone church.

Rev. D. H. Tuttle, Chairman of the North Carolina Board of Church Extension, has a stirring note on the subject of "Church Extension" in a recent issue of the Raleigh Christian Advocate. The facts and figures given will challenge attention and do good. The Elizabeth City District should not stand alone in meeting the assessment this Conference year.

Rev. John H. McLean, D.D., Presiding Elder of the Bonham District, of the North Texas Conference, writes of a storm which badly wrecked our church, valued at $2,000, at Petty, Texas. The congregation is greatly in need of $250 or $300 to assist them in reconstruction. The presiding elder inquires if we have an emergency fund on hand. We have not. There should be one to adjust such losses as this. This is an opportunity for a use of the Lord's money. Who will respond?

YOU OWE THIS TO YOUR MOTHER.

To consult her and ask her advice in regard to whatever you are about to do, even though you have no doubt as to what your course should be; to be on the lookout for every opportunity to make whatever return you can for her years of sacrifice and planning for your happiness and well-doing; to defer her opinions and treat her with respect, even if they seem antiquated to you in the smart up-to-dateness of your college education; to enlist her sympathies in your projects, hopes, and plans, so that she may carry her own youth into old age; to talk to her about your work, your studies, your friends, your amusements, the books you read, the places you visit, for everything that concerns you is of interest to her.

If she is no longer able to take her accustomed part in the household duties, not to let her feel that she is superannuated or has lost any of her importance as the central factor in the family. The boy who endeavors to play back his mother with a frisk, and the baby's cross with her teeth, is the one who will be most sought after by the people who are worth while, and by and by the most successful.

SUMMER VISITS.

This is the time of the year when the country people are more or less taxed by their friends and relatives' visits. Wealthy people who entertain on a large scale do not hesitate in fact they find it necessary to distinctly state the length of time the guest is invited to stay. But often those of us who are obliged to be burdened find that their friends extend their visits far beyond the expected limit.

It is always best to get a definite idea about invitation and if you are a guest do not let the polite invitation of your hostess overmuch longer dissuade you from taking your departure. It adds much to the charm of a visit to have the guest leave with dispatch while his presence is appreciated.

As it rained a little Mrs. Blank responded very cordially: "I hope you are not obliged to go, for you will stay until to-morrow morning, and be rested no further urging. This was all Mrs. Blank detected signs which led her to suppose the good man might think of staying another day. And agreeable as it promised to be, the greeted him at the Tuesday breakfast table with the remark, "It is a very fine day to travel." Mr. — — was obliged to agree with her, and left, a reluctant, good-by. Southern Christian Advocate.

WHERE THE SHINE COMES FROM.

"Well, grandma," said a little boy, resting his elbow on the old lady's stuffed arm-chair, "what do you suppose the sun shines for?"

"Why, to make it light, of course," answered the dear old grandma, putting her arm around this little speck of sunshine. "That's God's reason for things: they are because somebody needs them." Shine on, little sun: there couldn't be a better reason for shining than because it is dark at home.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A GUEST'S APPRECIATION.

Miss Sexton, with a discouraged look on her face, was coming from the railway station when Leila Miner met her in the fresh early morning.

Leila stopped her laughing. "I can tell just what is the matter," she said. "Your face tells that you were expecting visitors on the train. You were all ready for them, and they have gone, and you are disappointed, aren't you?"

"No, not exactly," answered Miss Sexton, shaking her head. "You'd never guess. I have just spected a departing guest."

"Not entertaining?" asked Leila.

"No, it isn't that," was the answer. "I ought to take her cheerfully, and give her every pleasure I could think of." She turned and fell into step with Leila. "I'll walk a way with you.

"It's just the way," she continued, "in all the seven weeks she was here she never said

Leila started.

"Miss Sexton, that from you! She surely has had enough to make a saint. Perhaps she is reserved and not given to expressing herself."

"I suppose she is; but almost anyone would

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1906.

Said a discriminating lady in defining the difference between two leading preachers: "Dr. Walker is a better preacher than Dr. Mathews, but Dr. Mathews preaches better than Dr. Walker." Do you see the difference?

More than twenty-five years ago Bishop Pierce, in one of his inimitable sermons before the Annual Conference, said: "Some preachers deal altogether in glittering generalities. They aim at nothing, and hit it with magnificent precision." There are a few such preachers still among us.

We cannot find it in our heart to blame a man who takes an uncompromising stand against what he believes to be an error. For this reason we sympathize with the Cumberland Presbyterian loyalists in their struggle against a majority who would force them into union with a church whose doctrines they do not believe.

It is not a little strange that so many brethren above the average in intelligence, have discovered since the General Conference that our Articles of Religion are hard to be understood, and need to be put in simpler language, or, as urged by one, "to be put in the language of to-day." If there is more than one word in the twenty-five articles calculated to mislead the unlearned, we do not call it to mind. That word any preacher can easily explain. If there are others besides the word "preventing" in Article viii, we would be pleased to have them pointed out.

We have heard much of late of "drinking" and the "increase of drinking among women," but it was never our misfortune to witness the tippling of women until a few days since. Going up the Illinois Central Railroad from New Orleans a man of middle age, and rather portly, and two young women, the elder a beautiful girl, apparently about twenty years old, engaged in drinking red liquor from a big, black quart bottle. They poured it into the public drinking tumbler (which was not the politest thing to do), and took it straight. They were evidently accustomed to it. Judging by the number of bundles they had in hand, they had been shopping in the city. Where they lived, whether in Louisiana or Mississippi, we do not know. They were still on the train when we got off at Hammond. They lived further up the road. The sight of beautiful young women, apparently members of good society, drinking whisky in public was shocking.

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.

It is hardly the polite thing to talk about depravity these days. In characterizing the moral condition of sinners, especially those who outrage decency, and "count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing," it is more acceptable to the ear to say, they are abnormal—out of the regular order. This coincides with the view of those who reject the doctrine of innate depravity of human nature as expressed in our Seventh Article of Religion, which article so clearly agrees with the teachings of the Scriptures.

How widespread is the opinion that human nature retains its original purity, and corruption is only by education and contact with abnormal characters, we have no means of knowing. But we do know that the natural depravity of man is denied, and that other means of accounting for wickedness and all ungodliness are set forth, rather than "the corruption of every man that is naturally engendered of the offsprings of Adam."

What the old-time theologians diagnosed as a moral malady, resulting in sin and death has by some modern writers been diagnosed as a physical defect. In some persons, owing to the lack of proper surrounding and teaching, the effect of the disease, whatever it is, is manifested at a very early period of life, and our cities are cursed with a juvenile class of offenders, who in due time develop into thieves, burglars and murderers. The state in dealing with such characters, proposes no theory, but acts on the presumption that they are responsible for their crimes, and punishes them accordingly. True this in itself is a recognition of the idea that the culprits are depraved, and that proper punishment will serve, at least in part, as a corrective. This idea has been acted upon by humane judges, especially by Judge Lindsey, of Denver, and instead of inflicting punishment by imprisonment at labor, or otherwise, the offenders have been appealed to as moral beings capable of being good, and put on a kind of probation. This method of Judge Lindsey has been wonderfully effective in developing in little criminals a manhood that never could have been discovered by treating them as physically diseased.

If modern theorists who propose to deal with the criminal classes as though they were only physically defective are correct as to the seat of the disease, there is no necessity for further moralizing on the subject, and the church would save trouble and expense by turning over the work of the world's betterment to specialists. Suppose what we call depravity is not a moral than a derangement of the nerves in the lower part of the human anatomy, and hunger in the fed individual with strong and healthy nerves would be free from all forms of crime, and it be true that any specific defect of the body can be the cause of all wickedness, and that it can be healed and remedied by an operation, as proposed by certain physicians, "to prevent a criminal career," what is the use of preaching repentance and regeneration as the only requisites to correct moral life? All that is necessary is to examine incorrigibles to find the scrutiny and skill.

Now, if the defect called depravity is to be attributed to physical defects, or degeneration, or if it be true that only the will of man is perverse, their the teaching of the Scriptures, on which we build our doctrine of original depravity, are words with no meaning, and St. Paul's characterization of human nature in its original state must be put in simpler language, or, as urged by one, "to be put in the language of to-day." If there is more than one word in the twenty-five articles calculated to mislead the unlearned, we do not call it to mind. That word any preacher can easily explain. If there are others besides the word "preventing" in Article viii, we would be pleased to have them pointed out.

The doctrine of depravity is not only set forth in our Seventh Article of Religion, which article so clearly agrees with Methodist, should repudiate it, or seek in any wise to undermine it, and certainly no Methodist is justified in talking of the moral state of wicked characters as abnormal. That is carrying it too far. We have no means of knowing. But we do know that the natural depravity of man is denied, and that other means of accounting for wickedness and all ungodliness are set forth, rather than "the corruption of every man that is naturally engendered of the offsprings of Adam."

FORMS OF TRADITIONALISM.

A beautiful illustration of traditionalism is found in the closing sentence of the editorial in the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of some "Frank Criticisms of the Clerical System." In the discussion Dr. Smith says: "It is assumed that [illegible] and those that are criticised, not because they enter the ministry [illegible] official and the work [illegible] it is said that [illegible] is the established [illegible] and jejune. He is dead to the traditions. These graduates and others will adhere to the simple gospel and preach it in the forms of traditionalism.

[illegible] are the men who do things. They are God's evangels, carrying the light of the gospel wherever they go. They are the principal instruments in God's hands of saving sinners. The orthodoxy and spirituality of the church could not be maintained a quarter of a century without them. We would not undertake to say that a man coming out of a well-equipped, up-to-date university, painted with the idea of [illegible] is not [illegible] and polished [illegible] honest and [illegible] do say that if he starts out [illegible] with a view to [illegible] sinners by must [illegible] other sort will [illegible] preach the traditions [illegible] preaching may [illegible] but can never exhibit [illegible] to the hearts of [illegible] raised [illegible] which set forth [illegible] but the seeds are every Sundays [illegible] happy on the world's [illegible] hundreds [illegible] brought to [illegible] the preacher [illegible] Thank the [illegible] our ranks are yet supplied with such fogies [illegible] and more are coming on.

PERSONALS.

Rev. T. J. Warwick, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, is on a visit this week to Minden, La., his former charge.

Rev. Theo. England, of Range Memorial Church, is somewhere up in Mississippi helping in a camp meeting. He is a good hand at such work.

Bishop Ward, in the District Conferences in Mississippi and Louisiana, by his preaching and addresses and kindly manner of presiding, has mightily pleased the brethren.

Rev. M. B. Shurbrough, of Jackson, Miss., is working up a club of twenty subscribers and has nearly completed the list. Brother Shurbrough has our hearty thanks.

Rev. W. W. Hall, of Ocean Springs, who attended the Epworth League Assembly at Seashore Camp-ground, speaks in the highest terms of the preaching and the devotional exercises of the Assembly. Several souls were converted during the meeting.

Rev. R. E. Noleu, of the Fronton Circuit, Mississippi Conference, is still ahead in the number of subscribers sent to this office. He has secured one hundred and twelve. This is fine work. He is now in the midst of his protracted meetings, and the Lord is blessing his people.

Rev. W. H. Watkins sends us through a slip clipped from a newspaper and forwarded to us, has been engaged in quite a successful revival. Sixteen persons united with the church. Where the meeting was held the correspondent of the newspaper does not tell.

Rev. C. McLeod, of Lake Circuit, reports a meeting at Lawrence, one of his churches, in which he was assisted by Rev. T. J. O'Neil, "a good talent, earnest, and spiritual preacher, a good helper in a protracted meeting." The membership was revived, and seven souls added to the church.

Rev. R. H. Wyatt, of Ridge, favors us with this interesting personal note: "I enjoyed the great pleasure of assisting Rev. Robert Randle in a protracted meeting at Douglas Church during the week following the third Sunday in July, the result of which was many accessions to the Church and a great revival of spiritual interest in the membership. Presiding Elder Carter was with us two days, and preached two strong sermons."

The tireless bookseller, Rev. G. W. Bachman, is always ready to help the brethren. He has recently helped in the South Cape Camp-meeting which was largely attended and was fruitful—thirteen persons having been received into the Church. Here there was an unique sight—the baptism of infants, one pair of twins and a set of triplets. Brother Bachman also aided in a meeting at Mathist, and is at this time engaged with the brethren at Independence, Miss.

Ex-Governor A. H. Shands, of Mississippi, who has long held the position of Dean of the Law Faculty of the State University, has resigned the place. In connection with the report of the resignation it is said that he will become the head of the Law Department of the University of Louisiana. Judge Shands is a strong man and would be a great acquisition to the ranks in Louisiana.

ADOLPHUS ROUSSEAU.

Adolphus Rousseau was born Feb. 6, 1828, and died at his home in Hammond, La., on the morning of Aug. 5, 1906. He was taken sick about the 1st of July, but, after a few days of prostration, he rallied, and it was thought he would recover. Signs of failing again appeared on Saturday, the 28th of July, and on Sunday morning he was unable to rise. From then on for a week the outer man perished day by day, and it was not, for God took him.

The exact date of Brother Rousseau's conversion we do not know, but it occurred after he had reached manhood and experienced much of the world. His conversion was complete and thorough, his after life an example and inspiration to all who knew him. Soon after his conversion he united with a Baptist church. Not finding it a congenial home, he did not remain very long. He cast his lot with the Methodists, and for thirty-five years or more he was ardent in his attachment, and lived constantly in the enjoyment of religion. For many years he was an official member, at the time of his death being a trustee, a steward and Sunday school superintendent of the Church at Hammond. A more conscientious and faithful office-bearer the Church never had.

Brother Rousseau was my neighbor at Hammond. He was a neighbor, indeed. He gave the writer of this his fullest confidence, and the writer fully trusted him. In fact, we formed a warm attachment for each other, and enjoyed many happy hours together. He was always cheerful and hopeful. Religion was uppermost in his mind, and he was always ready to express his feelings. He loved the Church, and, old as he was, he never missed an opportunity to attend services, day or night. Whether the service was for preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday school, or Epworth League, he was always on hand. What the little Church at Hammond will do now that he is gone, the good Lord only knows. He was its main support.

In his sickness, the last week of which was characterized by extreme weakness, his left side having been paralyzed, he had the patient and untiring attention of his entire family. The wife of his youth, with whom he had lived more than fifty years, was constantly at his side. Three affectionate daughters were always watching and waiting. The strong arm of a dutiful son—as kind and gentle as a woman—never tired in lifting his body and ministering to his wants. Loving grandchildren, too, were attentive, and did what they could to relieve him in his weakness.

Brother Rousseau quietly passed into rest. Helpless and scarcely able to speak, his last words were, "Rest! Lord Jesus, give me rest." A good husband, a good father, a good citizen and a good Christian has gone to reap the reward of the faithful.

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

MORE TRUE MEN NEEDED.

This is an age of commercialism, not only in the sense of the most successful business methods, but also in the sense of one's preferring his own success in emoluments to that of another. It is not only so in all lines of secular business, but it is true in religious work, and even in the ministry. It is so much so now in the ministry that one frequently hears it said: "You have to look out for yourself; if you do not, no one will look out for you," and in some cases it is said, "looking out for yourself does not remedy your condition, if you are not in the 'swim,' and to be 'in the swim' is to have a commanding appointment and a comfortable emolument, or to be in with the controlling spirits, or both.

This state of things cannot be defended on the ground that money matters are too neglected, for more is being paid the ministry than ever was before, as a rule, and independent of the State.

Indeed, the ministry ought to be so free from such a state of things as to give it no existence whatever. Men who have in their power the placing of ministers should be so free from selfish considerations and so consecrated to God and the cause of Christ, and, too, so endowed with good, common sense, as to be equal to the task of not only adapting ministers and charges according to equipment and needs, but especially as to financial strength and needs.

It does seem that a very ordinary mind could apprehend the lack of wisdom and economy in placing ministers with large families in charges where the pastor is not only cramped and hampered in his Lord's work himself, but also the people, when such a state of things could be avoided—such as assigning a minister, with a large family, to a charge with a small parsonage, that would be comfortable to one with a small family and to charges with small salaries, when one with a small family could live comfortably on it; assigning ministers in order to afflict them or the people, or both; placing men in the presiding eldership because they were unsuited for any single charge, or because of special friendship for them, or for any other reason than that of preaching and executive ability, and especially that most essential of all qualifications, deep piety.

We need more true men in the ministry at large, who will not hesitate to preach against all sins, and most especially those that are the most popular and most common, and, too, in such a simple, forcible and Christly style as to allow the Holy Ghost the greatest freedom in accompanying it to the hearts of the people for good—men who are satisfied with a comfortable living, and not straining and embarrassing the people with a mastering greed for the almighty dollar; men above that littleness of covetousness that will not plead poverty when they have money invested in order to increase their quarterage; men in all lines of life who would rather die than to do wrong.

BERNICE CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just closed our third meeting on the Bernice Circuit. We have had a great revival at each place. Rev. J. H. Williams, of Florance, Ala., did the preaching. He is a young man; came to our church from the Missionary Baptist Church a few years ago. His preching is Scriptural and clear. He talks with the young people very readily. We held our first meeting at Dubach, where we have just finished a beautiful new church—a place where there had never before been a church. Everyone that had ever preached there preached in a school-house. The Baptists have bought the old schoolhouse and are repairing it and fitting it up for a house of worship. We had forty-three added to the church at that place and nineteen by baptism.

At Bernice we had forty-one to join, seventeen by baptism. Many grown people and four Missionary Baptists joined our church, and four Cumberland Presbyterians.

At Harmony Chapel we had twenty-four to join our church. We have as faithful set of laymen as I ever labored with to sing, to pray, and any work they can do, they do it heartily and cheerfully.

We have had to join by Baptism this year fifty-six, by profession of faith thirty-seven, by certificate fourteen. We have raised in actual cash and subscriptions this year on the work for all purposes $1,345. Unless some great disaster, we will have everything full at Conference. Pray for us. Yours truly,

W. T. WOODWARD, P. C.

WRINKLES AND CHARMS.

"It really is so foolish," said a woman of experience as she made out her list for a bridge luncheon, "to spend much time on beauty hints and hair tonics and massage for wrinkles and all that, when you know that everybody knows that by the time a woman begins to have wrinkles and needs rejuvenating processes she has made her place in the world independent of her looks. Here I am, for instance, making out my list, and the one woman I especially want is Mrs. L., whose face looks like a railroad map, and who hasn't a single first-rate feature. But she is the most popular woman I know, adored by her husband and children and sought after by everybody. She is a good comrade all through, always—up to everything, full of vitality and sympathy and intelligence. That's what has made her wrinkles. She has used her face, and living has put the lines there. Mrs. H., her neighbor, is absolutely well-preserved—not a wrinkle either in her face or her tailor-made suit. But who wants to invite Mrs. H.? or who cares, except herself, whether she has one wrinkle or twenty? With a girl beauty counts—it is an introduction, a pedestal on which her personality is shown. But when once the personality is known—when the woman has matured and taken her place—she is foolish to think she can hold friends or love by keeping her hair and complexion youthful-looking. Of course, being fastidious and well-groomed and moderately well-dressed is a woman's business at any age. But personality is the test of charm. 'To be or not to be,' not 'to wrinkle or not to wrinkle,' is the essential thing at forty, whatever else may have been at twenty-five."

A woman revisiting her native town after twenty years said lately that the most interesting thing there was to see how the girls she used to know had taken their places. "I think a great deal of looks," she confessed, but the world doesn't seem to, somehow, unless other things go along with them; and in that case, when the looks drop off, it's no matter. The women of charm and of importance were none of them a bit better looking than the rest of us. I remember some of them as rather pretty and some as homely ones—certainly not an acknowledged beauty among them. I wonder if most that we say about beauty isn't nonsense, anyway? It's a beginning, and that's all—like getting, by sheer good luck, one fine drive from the tee, and then having to do the rest for one's self. I begin to feel that I've wasted a lot of valuable time fussing over wrinkles. Instead of making myself independent of them."

Her words may rouse a responsive echo in some troubled feminine hearts. The loss of beauty is a crisis in many women's lives. But why should it be, after all? True love, true friendship, true usefulness and attractiveness were never yet held by a single hair, or lost in the furrow of a wrinkle.—Priscilla Leonard, in the Interior.

WILLIE McLAURIN, born May 10, 1862, died May 21, 1906, aged 44 years and 11 days. Our friend, Willie McLaurin, was born and reared near Bethel Church, Caseyville, Lincoln County, Miss. His father and mother were true and loyal people. He descended from the old McLaurin stock from some of the best blood in Mississippi. His McLaurin ancestors were Presbyterians, but he was raised up in the M. E. Church, South. He became a member of this church in boyhood days and professed faith and hope in Christ. In young manhood he was united in marriage with Miss Bettie Caldwell, the daughter of Rev. H. R. Caldwell, who for a number of years ministered faithfully to the Scotland Circuit. Willie and his loyal wife lived in holy wedlock for many years, during which time they became the parents of six children, Mary, Rodney, Walter, Neill, Chalmers and Lucy. All these children are living to-day, heirs of the name and traditions of their father and mother. During the early years of the young family they lived at their country home on the McLaurin hill, overlooking Cedar Creek. Their land was fertile, they made a good living and were trusted and valued members of our social life. For reasons deemed good, they moved to Brookhaven and in 1904 suffered a great loss in the death of the dear wife and mother. The husband was bowed down with grief. He was suffering from a sore bodily affliction and his health constantly declined. His trials were very great, but he bore them all with meekness and patience. In the strength and maturity of manhood, with a world full of promise and success stretched out before him, he was called away. We can never understand why God allots to some men so full a cup of earthly suffering. One thing we know is that in this way God mellows his people. A large congregation attended the burial service at Bethel Church. Everyone showed deep sympathy, and amidst the general grief, with every mark of tender respect, the body of our friend was laid to rest. We pray that his young sons may inherit all that is good in their ancestral line, and, by lives of genuine worth, add new lustre to the honored name. C. W. GRAFTON.

STEPHEN P. JONES was born in Natchez, Miss., Dec. 8, 1845, and died in Baton Rouge, La., July 7, 1906. He was born and reared in an atmosphere of Christian culture. His father was Rev. Benjamin Jones, of Mississippi, and his uncle was Dr. Nathan Bangs. Under such religious influences he consecrated himself to God in early youth. He grew steadily in grace and in the knowledge of his Lord and Savior, and for a number of years before his death the Christian graces were beautifully exemplified in him. His face, his phraseology and his manner demonstrated the grace of God in his heart. A practical and successful business man, he preached by his life a practical Christianity—"Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

The last two years of his life were filled with suffering, of which he never spoke unless questioned, and then spoke briefly. He passed his closing days in retirement from the activities of business. Conscious that the powers of his physical frame were giving away, that the silver cord would soon be loosed and the pitcher broken at the fountain, death had no terrors. Like St. Paul, on his heaviest burden he wrote the word, "Light," and on his most permanent afflictions, "But for a moment," and across them all he lay the promise, "Shall work out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

On Sunday morning, July 8, his pastor conducted his funeral. Hundreds gathered at his home to pay their homage—old soldiers with whom he had fought in the war; the poor, whose rent he had paid and whose hunger he had fed; men of affairs among whom he had walked a strong man, successful, prosperous, honored; the entire membership of the First Methodist Church, which he had served for years in the office of steward and trustee; and ministers of religion with whom he had sat in council and planned the advancement of the church of God. With the burial ceremony of his beloved church he was laid to rest in Magnolia Cemetery. The noon hour of his burial was very appropriate, for eternity is but another name for the day that has no sunrise, and no sunset, no dial-plate marks its passing hours and no night proclaims its close.

Mr. N. H. Jones, of Chicago, is his only living brother. He leaves a wife and three sons and three daughters. To his children he leaves the priceless inheritance of his Christian life and example. One daughter he has given to the church of God, Minnie, wife of Dr. F. N. Parker. He was a good man. The ship of his life has floated safely out of the muddy river of existence, and its prow has cut the crystal billows of the sea of eternity. In its wake a path of foam gleams with the splendors of kindness done, rolls with tears wiped away, dashes with congratulations at the happy close of a useful career and clear out to the horizon of our vision billows the flashing phosphorescence of a Christian life. "He maketh a path to shine after him." E. K. MEANS.

On the 10th of July, 1906, Mrs. MATTIE ALFORD was promoted from the limitations of the kingdom on earth to her place in the kingdom above. Forty-seven years she had lived in this probationary state. The Master was satisfied and said, "It is enough; come up higher." The Methodist Church and the community of Fannin, Miss., was the scene of most of her earthly life. Here she was known and loved as a woman of deep personal piety and untiring faithfulness in the service of God. Gently, quietly she fell on sleep as the day darkened into night, but the fragrance of her Christian life lingers with us still. The aged father, Brother Moore, and the three daughters who mourn because of her going away, are not alone in their sense of bereavement. In our sorrow we thank God that the veil that separates the temporal from the eternal has been rent by Christ and the Christian faith is permitted to look beyond and see a kingdom of glory, an eternal life awaiting those that love God. Hither the loved ones are gone; there we will meet again.

H. J. MOORE.

Mrs. CARRIE FARNANDIS CHRISTIAN, daughter of Henry and Mary Farnandis, was born on her father's plantation in LeFlore County, Miss., being the youngest of seven children. From young girlhood she lived in Grenada, Miss., where she united with the Methodist Church when about seventeen years old. She sought the fellowship of the people of God to assist her in working out the salvation of her soul. Thus in the line of duty and service she sought and soon found Christ in conscious salvation, "the sweet peace, the gift of God's love." A great sufferer for many years, she constantly said: "God's will be done," and patiently endured. She was apprised of approaching death, and, with the trustfulness of a child, the unwavering faith of a martyr, and joy of a triumphant soul committed all to her dear Savior, saying: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness." She entered into rest Sunday, July 15, 1906, at 9:15 a. m. On the following day at her church, led by her pastor, and attended by the many friends, was held the burial service of song, scripture reading, and prayer, according to her direction; then her body was tenderly laid to rest in an evergreen-lined grave, which was covered with flowers, symbolizing faith in immortality and hope of eternal life.

LESSON FOR AUG. 19, 1906.

THE JUDGE, THE PHARISEE, AND THE PUBLICAN.

Luke xviii, 1 to 14.

Golden Text: "God be merciful to me, a sinner." (Luke xviii, 13.)

St. Paul says in his Epistle to the Romans: "None of us liveth to himself. * * whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's;" and as the Savior said, "Without me ye can do nothing," so it is natural that we should be continually asking the guidance of a kind Providence. In the days of our study in the life of the Master, it seems that events and lessons were crowding one behind the other in rapid occurrence, and in the audiences that assembled to learn from the great Teacher there were always one or more of the Pharisees. To these, Jesus was ever ready to direct part of his discourse. One of them asked when the kingdom of God should come. His reply was for all who had ears to hear: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation, for behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Then, turning to his disciples, he told them that there would come a time when they would wish for one of the days they were then passing through under his tutelage and protecting presence, a time of trouble was before them, and whether the siege and destruction of Jerusalem or the end of the world were alluded to, prayer was the necessary means of preparation. Then the Master taught by a parable that "Men ought always to pray and not to faint," Paul says, "Pray without ceasing."

The first parable is that of the selfish judge that complied with the widow's pleading to keep from being bothered. She, being a widow, should have been helped at once. Distress and bereavement was the widow of Nain's plea, and not a word was spoken — yet Jesus answered her prayer, even so reversing a natural law. Persistent prayer is the very best evidence of faith, and that may be why Jesus tells us to continue in prayer. Deferred answer to prayer should not discourage us, for we often have seen that it was best for us that our prayer should not be answered at once. Let us have the faith to say, "Lord, I know that thou wilt answer my prayer, only give me patience to await thine own good time." Mother prayed many years for the conversion of her son, but the grass had grown long over her grave before the prayer was answered. When it was answered her joy was unalloyed, for she was among the angels that rejoice over the repentant sinner. Let us pray always, and it may be our privilege to see the Father unfolding his blessings to us day by day, and the answer to our prayer coming naturally along, as if it was one of the events of our life that we never prayed for. Sometimes we whisper to him: "Father, I know that it is for my good that thou dost veil mine eyes from thy mysterious ways, but, O Father, I see, I see through the veil; thou hast heard me, and even now thou are blessing me"—then the tears of joy so blind us that we can see no more.

The next parable the Master's ... was directed to the self-righteous. Two men, a Pharisee and a publican, went up to the temple to pray. The Pharisee thanked God for being so good, and told God what good things he was doing. He was so good he did not need anything, so his prayer had no petition in it. Let us give praise to the Pharisee for being so good, and thanks for pointing us to the needy publican, whose prayer is so suitable to the most of us. The Pharisee was so satisfied with his own condition that it never occurred to him that he could learn to his advantage from the prayer of the publican. The most dangerous condition for the Christian is when he is not at all uneasy about the welfare of his own soul. Can we be at ease in the life we have to lead, knowing beforehand that it is a perpetual warfare? If we are not troubled by visits from Satan, it is because he considers us an easy prey. After Paul had been in the service of the Master for long, he said of his own case, "I, myself, be a castaway." Jesus made more direct appeals to the Pharisees than to any other class, and his appeals were always made in words of wisdom and logic, suited to their trained and cultivated minds. They never listened to him with the same eager acquiescence as did those who seemed to the Lord as sheep having no shepherd. As the publican prayed, standing afar off, so conscious of his need of pardon and of his great offense, he would not lift his eyes to heaven, but we know as he prayed "God be merciful to me, a sinner," the great Father of Mercies both saw and heard him. Jesus says he was justified. "Justified freely by his grace." The spirit of the publican's prayer pervades the supplication of every humble Christian. Come to that room in the home of the trusting follower of Christ, that quiet room—he is alone there with his God—and in secret he lays bare every sin to the eyes of him with whom we have to do." He does not so much as look to heaven, but he knows that his Father hears and answers; and, being "justified by faith, he has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." In our prayers, let us have the poor widow's persistency and the publican's humility, and our prayers will ascend to the throne of grace.

Paul tells us to come boldly to the throne of grace and find grace to help in time of need. Our Father knows what we have need of before we ask him, but Jesus has told us to ask and we shall receive; seek and we shall find, and knock and it shall be opened unto us."

Dear Doctor: On July 8, at 11 a. m., we began a meeting at Keithville, La., which resulted in a revival within the church and several conversions and accessions to the church.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, our popular pastor, at Morgan City, La., did the preaching, and did it well. Our people are delighted with him. July 15 we began at Stonewall, La., and were assisted by Revs. H. G. Davis, presiding elder of our district, and H. J. Bolts, of Keachie, La. These brethren did us fine service, and our church was strengthened as a result of the meeting. Brother R. V. Jeffrey, of Los Angeles, Cal., led the singing in our meetings, and he is indeed a pastor's helper, a fine singer, and a good personal worker. A. W. TURNER, P. C.

LETTER FROM SISTER PHILLIPS.

Dr. Boswell: I will tell you how I use my Advocates. We read them at home, then send them to my widowed sister. She and one of her neighbors read them and then send them to an old mother of Israel, a way out in the country, and the old soul enjoys them at her leisure. I send every one, so they will not miss connections. I see some of the preachers' families make waste paper of the Advocate, when there is worthy poor on their work that would be delighted to have them to read and much good could be done in that way, and many would become subscribers if a few copies were put into the hands of the members that are not taking it. They would become more interested in it. I am delighted with it and think it grows better all the time. Your friend,

CALLED TO BE SAINTS.

What is it to be called a saint? Not many of us would like to wear the aureole of sainthood about our own heads, and to do so would be anything else rather than saintly. Called to be saints, simply means called to be holy, and whoever is holy is consecrated not in part, but altogether and entirely to the loving service of Jesus Christ. In a world full of temptation, yet full of opportunity, those who have confessed Christ are to testify to His goodness and His love and His work in them, by blameless lives. They are to be sweet of nature, sunny of temper, joyous of mood, let the days be dark or bright. They are to bear affliction without protest, letting it do upon them its beneficent work.

There is a pretty story about the gravel walk and the mignonette:

"How fragrant are you this morning," said the gravel walk.

"Yes," said the mignonette, "I have been trodden upon and bruised, and it has brought forth all my sweetness."

"But," said the gravel walk, "I am trodden on every day, and only grow harder."

Which shall we be like? If we are called to be saints, surely we shall be like the mignonette, sweeter for every footfall of Providence that seems to trample us down.

Among my friends there is a young woman who has never once thought herself a saint. Her life is unspeakably hard, with no high lights of joy. She is caretaker of age and feebleness. She struggles with small means. She works in every interval of her time at an exhausting profession. She is never other than tired, and gets no outings. In summer and winter alike her tasks are laid upon her, and uncomplainingly borne. But so brave is she, so cheery, so little given to self-pity, and so nobly does she show forth the beauty of Christ that I never see her without the thought, here is one who has been called to be a saint, and who fulfills her calling.—Christian Intelligencer.

MAKES LIFE BARE AND BLEAK.

What makes life bare and bleak to Christ is our cold-blooded, careless attitude towards His public and private mercies, for these are taken and enjoyed, and often that is the end of it. There is no pondering. Their weight is not suffered to fall upon the conscience. Who, to see many of us, would gather what He has been doing in us and for us? Forgiveness has issued in so little humanity and ardor. Help has drawn out so scanty a measure of surrender amid our self-esteem. Enlightenment has so seldom quickened the will to obedience and the conscience to a devout attentiveness. Any deliverance of life is a crucial test. Yet, after such, how have we borne ourselves? Is not God's charge against many of us, in the Church and in our private lives, God's charge against us and our charge—in moments of self-scrutiny—against ourselves, a charge of love unrequited, of benefits forgotten, of lessons unlearned, and of trust unanswered? How often has the Christ had to wait for moral surrender from those whom He has aided, rarely to find it, sadly to miss it, till over our relations with Him it must be written—and it was winter!

"You must find that impediment in your speech rather inconvonient, Mr. Briggs?" "Oh, n-no; everyhody has his little peculiarity. Stammering is m-m-mine; what is y-yours?" "Well, really, I am not aware that I have any." "D-do you stir y-your tea with your right hand?" "Why, yes, of course." Glances at the World.

The railroad authorities of the country are arranging to test the soundness of the "Rate Bill" enacted by the last Congress. They fully believe that the law is vulnerable, and will break it if they can. Representatives of various lines have been in conference, and a line of action marked out. They will attack the law at three points. They are: "First—That the receiving common carrier shall be held liable for loss or damage on through shipments carried by it or by any connection, irrespective of contract to the contrary. Second—That the Commission may determine just and reasonable charge or allowance for service rendered by the owners of property transported, or for any instrumentality furnished by such owner and used on such transportation. Third—The court review." We are not sufficiently versed in the merits of the question involved to express an opinion, we give the points as we find them printed in the press dispatches.

We see it stated in some of the papers that the leading members of the Democratic party—members of the National Committee, we suppose,—are being urged from many sections of the country to displace the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Thomas Taggart—or Tom Taggart, as he is familiarly called. The reason for the demand is based on the alleged connection of Mr. Taggart with the gambling establishment at French Lick Springs of Indiana, which the Governor of the State recently ordered the authorities to close. Mr. Taggart may or may not have anything to do with the gambling institution, but as it is in connection with the French Lick hotel which Mr. Taggart manages, the presumption is that he knows more or less about the gambling. The Democratic National Committee would do well to find another Chairman, for there can be no doubt that the party will be greatly burdened in the next election if Mr. Taggart is retained as Chairman. It is said that Mr. Taggart, believing that the Governor of Indiana is determined in his course, will remove from the State, and locate, either in Missouri or Mississippi. What comfort he will find in Missouri with Gov. Folk in the saddle, we do not know. What Mississippi has done to attract Mr. Taggart does not appear. At what point in the State he could locate and build up a Monte Carlo, with any feeling of security, is more than we can tell. We hope the rumors are without foundation.

One of the saddest signs of the time is the moral decline of the rich. Certainly all the rich men and women are not corrupt, but there is vastly more corruption among them in proportion to numbers than among any other class of citizens. And, sad to say, one form of demoralization, not to say of corruption, is looked upon by a very large class of people, if not with approval, at least without protest. We allude to the general disregard and abuse of family life. A divorce, without cause, and re-marriage almost immediately, is a thing of weekly occurrence. Extravagance in living is another evidence of moral degeneracy. Of course, rich people are expected to live high and dress well. They are able to do so. But costly dinings, accompanied by the finest wines and liquors, which the women as well as the men are expected to drink, are nothing short of Belshazzar feasts—provided, not to satisfy nature's wants, or, to manifest a social disposition, but to minister to the flesh and to out-do someone else. The same may be said of the spending of $100,000 annually on dress. And there are other forms of corruption among the rich, too hideous to mention. The corruption is becoming notorious, and is a matter for serious thought. And vast wealth seems to generate and stimulate corruption, for it is not always the man that is born to riches that is corrupt, but poor men who succeed sometimes fall victims to the power of money, which not only corrupts their morals, but renders them heartless. The majority of us ought to be glad that we are not rich.

Several times during the past month prominent citizens have been victimized by thieves, commonly known as "confidence men." It is a weekly occurrence for men and women of the town to take in and rob unsuspecting persons from the country who put themselves in the way by trying to "see the city." In the cases alluded to out-of-town persons played their games on city men—prominent and intelligent. One victim was a lawyer, who, by an ingenious trick of a swindler, was touched for more than fifteen hundred dollars. That was more than two weeks since, and the swindler is still abroad, nor is it known exactly how he obtained possession of the paper by which he secured the victim's money. In the other case, the victim was a merchant, and a well-dressed, refined-looking woman led in the swindling scheme. She called at a store, and, after looking at some goods, pretended that she had dropped a costly ring, valued at $450. The merchant and clerks instituted a search, and failing to find the ring, the woman left with the merchant's promise to restore the ring if found—she promising a reward of $50 for its return. Later in the day, a man came in, and, after getting what he called for, stooped down and picked up a ring—just such a ring as the woman said she had lost. After parleying a while, the merchant paid the man the $50 reward, and he left the store to be seen no more. The fellow had dropped the ring himself—a fine-looking ring, but an imitation that could be bought for $12 a gross. The merchant lost $50—a good price to pay for a bit of experience.

General News

A small race riot was reported from Delaware, growing out of an assault made by a negro on a white man. Race instincts and rights have ceased to be sectional.

There was a three-inch rainfall in Meridian, Miss., on Sunday last. It was accompanied by wind and lightning, killing one person and injuring a small amount of property.

Grain exports through the Gulf ports are increasing. The shipment through New Orleans during July amounted in value to $12,518,180, being exceeded by only two ports—New York and Baltimore.

Bales of new cotton have been received at several points in Louisiana and Mississippi—all several days in advance of last year. All the first bales were sold for handsome prices, with several premiums to the farmers.

The railroad rate bill is unsatisfactory and hard to be understood. The lawyers are preparing to carry certain points into court. Of course, they expect to reap a large harvest. Just now, the grain rates to the Gulf are being considered.

Governor Blanchard, of Louisiana, again seems to be in "hot water" on account of taking an active part in local politics. He has written letters in favor of one candidate for Congress, rather than another. The unfavored candidate does not like it.

The political fight is waxing warm in New York. Both the great parties are divided into factions. The fight is interesting to the whole country, because it is said that the next Governor of New York will be the next President of the United States. Who will win, nobody can tell.

King Edward, of England, and Emperor William, of Germany, arranged for a meeting on the 15th of August, when, it is supposed, they discussed the situation in Russia. It is further reported that the Czar has sought advice from the King of England. The Czar is in trouble, and needs help.

Japanese poaching schooners were fired on last week by United States officers and several Japanese were killed. The poachers were caught making a raid on the islands in Alaskan waters, and had killed as many as two hundred seals before discovered. It is thought that there will be no reason for international complications, as the raiders were within the three-mile limit.

Mr. Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, and Mr. Shonts, head of the Panama Canal Commission, are at loggerheads. Mr. Gompers wants to control certain matters in the canal construction, and Mr. Shonts, who has charge of the business, feels that he is more competent to attend to it than is Mr. Gompers.

LETTER FROM REV. TILLERY LEWIS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Your editorials on "The Teaching Preacher" and "Inspiring Contempt for Law," in the ADVOCATE of the 2nd inst., were both read with pleasure. You are right in both cases.

As I see it, too great stress is being put on the education and development of the mind. The idea that seems to be prevalent with many of our educators is that intellectual development fits a person for all things here, and hereafter. I fear that the mind of man, in this generation, is being looked after, to the neglect of the soul. Of course, no sane man can object to education, however high, that better fits the subject for more useful service to God and man. Education of this nature is a blessing to the world, and may God give us more of that sort! But that education that leaves the subject with the idea that intellectual development is the thing, and the only thing, and causes the party thus educated, to look with contempt upon those who have not been so fortunate, is a positive curse to the person thus educated, and a yet greater curse to the poor souls who must put up with the egotistical, self-inflated, educated fool. From all such may God please to deliver us!

Your editorial on "Inspiring Contempt for Law," is both good and timely. This "Inspiring Contempt for Law" is indulged in on every hand. A few days ago a man was arrested in one of our towns for selling "blind tiger" whisky. This same fellow has been in the courts several times on the same charge, and when he was arrested the last time some of the citizens began to cry, "persecution;" thus breeding contempt for the law and the officers. On Thursday, Aug. 2, the mayor of Durant, Miss., arrested a barrel of intoxicants as it was passing through the streets. As soon as it was known, one fellow went to the mayor and said: "You had a regular walkover for re-election as mayor, but such as this will cause you to be defeated." The mayor replied: "If the citizens of Durant don't want to vote for me because I discharge my duty as mayor, then I do not want the office." Hurrah! Yea, thrice hurrah for a man like that! We need just such officers all over the country. If we had them, there would be less "contempt for law." As I see it, these law-breakers should leave the United States, and go to some island of the sea where they could shoot, drink, curse, sell whisky or do anything else that is contrary to civilized law; if they will not leave us, then they should be made to obey the law or suffer the limit of the law for disobedience to its mandates. I am sorry for any fellow who breaks the law, but I am not in the least sorry because he must pay the penalty for violated law. He does not deserve any sympathy. Another great evil of our country is "petitions for pardon." Without proper consideration, I once signed a "petition for pardon." God has graciously forgiven me for that sin, and, with his help, I will never do that way again. If our people knew there was no way to avoid paying the penalty for violated law, there would be few among us who would dare to violate the law. Hence, we should never sign a "petition for pardon" unless we know that an innocent person is being punished for what another fellow did.

TILLERY LEWIS.

Durant, Miss.

"THE SLOUCH HAT."

If one person, more than another, deserves contempt for a senseless sin, it is the person who unkindly criticises and discourteously treats those who are most inconvenienced by poverty, especially if they be children who have no responsibility for their unfortunate circumstances. While some poverty is caused by sin, where blame is attached, either immediate or remote, some wealth likewise is the result of sin. But where neither the one nor the other is the result of unrighteousness, both parties are equally honored by genteel people, and the kind-hearted people are more kind and thoughtful to the poor by virtue of their more needy circumstances. There is no doubt a class, who, puppy-like, turn up their noses at unfortunately-poor people, but, when the truth is known, they most likely have been poorer than they until some change in circumstances brought them more money without increasing their sense or character. So they, themselves, become the objects of contempt to cultured Christian people, who judge others by their worth and not by the grade of cloth they may perchance be able to put on their backs. Character and intelligence are the marks of real worth and are the grounds of good people's estimation.

This does not mean that honorable wealth might not give an advantage in attaining knowledge and a higher grade of culture that would, in a sense, separate the two social classes, though both are equally honorable, where more real congeniality is found in the one or the other. But this does not reflect on the real worth of either, and it is more than likely that the poor child will apply himself to duty, that his more wealthy companion will not, hence outstrip him in the race of life, and the poor boy of this generation becomes the rich man of the next. "Watch the boy with the slouch hat" was the advice of a Bishop to the preachers. He will soon be filling the place from which the boy of wealth has fallen by self-indulgence and reckless living. Treat him kindly; he may some day be your master. Get him into the Sunday-school; he will, by and by, do your teaching, make your laws and loan you your money. Give him a chance; there is power pent up in his heart and mind that is coming to the front. And, above all, don't show your own low breeding and lack of sense by "snubbing" him. It will not hurt him, but will bring just contempt upon you. Edison, the inventor of the telephone, first entered Boston wearing yellow linen breeches, but he has done more for the world than a forty-acre herd of the "snubbing" sort. So has Abraham Lincoln, whose early home was a log cabin, and Shakespeare, whose father could not write his name.—

P. O. Lowery.

Melville, La.

Paul the aged, at the close of his life, triumphantly said to Timothy, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Every man of Pauline spirit who determines to do one thing, and steadily adheres to the purpose, can exult as triumphantly as did Paul, even though he be in sight of a martyr's death.

STATEMENT AND RESTATEMENT.

My interest in the "restatement" is small. I am perfectly content with the present "statement" for do not terms "present truth." I even decline to tremble because "the New York Advocate, of which Dr. J. M. Buckley is editor, has taken no notice of the proposition. Poor us to be ignored by Dr. J. M. Buckley, of the New York Christian Advocate. Our "faith is restated" weekly in thousands of pulpits. Had not we better quit preaching and simply read to the people sermons printed [illegible] years ago? I believe a "restatement" of what world-wide Methodism believes—has always believed—can be reduced to writing that will be helpful to our people. That is what was proposed by the recent General Conference. When the matter was introduced I was surprised, and was opposed to it; but I did not get excited, listened with care to all the speeches, and was forced to admit that the propositions had the best of the argument. Also, I observed that in fairness of statement, in freedom from prejudice and in the manifestation of the Christian spirit, they did not suffer by comparison. Hence, I voted for the appointment of the commission.

What I have read and observed since has confirmed me that I made no mistake in that vote. I have not uttered a word nor written a line in opposition to discussion, and also not object to the fullest and freest discussion. I did object to, and do oppose, the publication of articles whose only effect can be to arouse prejudice. Assurances are not wanting that I am alone in this position. I attempt no discussion of the main question, because I am not capable of doing so to edification, though I have no doubt of my ability to "shed as much darkness" on the subject as do some of the articles which are courteously and charitably called "discussion" by brethren who differ from me.

I am in perfect agreement with these words of a leading doctor of divinity: "The Church in every age is bound by all considerations to do its own thinking. To go on indefinitely accepting and repeating the formulæ of the fathers as if they possessed some magical virtue, and were too sacred to be touched and handled in any way, is to commit an act of supreme folly. Everybody who has an outlook upon the course of history is aware of that inevitable process by which words that originally incarnate and represent a living truth have a natural tendency to harden and crystallize into the expression of a dead dogma. I have sometimes thought that if Mr. Wesley could only know the extent to which many of his followers have fallen into the habit of repeating the ipsissima verba of his teachings, as if they were a final and conclusive statement of the truth, he would turn over in his grave and groan; for he himself, far from being the slave of traditions, was the freest and boldest mind of his generation. He made diligent use of all material from every source; but he called no man master, and played the parrot to no school of critics or theologians. Holding fast the form of sound words does not mean the abdication of the personal right to consider, to weigh, to sift, to reconstruct, or to reject. The ultimate problems of religion are eternal. They are always emerging with fresh aspects, and calling for a new hearing. . . . Is it too harsh a judgment to affirm that the greatest enemies of a conservative orthodoxy are those bigoted dogmatists who still cling to the very letter of the creeds and symbols of other days? The Methodist who insist on measuring everything in heaven and earth by Watson's Institutes or Wesley's Sermons are pestilent breeders of heresy."

Is that treason?

The General Conference did not purpose to go beyond what is contained in the above extract, and did not express itself in terms anything like as radical as that.

THE RESTATEMENT OF METHODIST DOCTRINE.

THE QUESTION NOT SIMPLE.

A friend who heard the debates on this important issue at the Birmingham Conference, and who has pronounced views on that side of the question to which he adheres, writes as though the matter were quite elemental in its one-sided simplicity. Those whose articles for or against the action of the majority have thus far appeared in the columns of the several ADVOCATES that come to my table seem to see in the question little or no complexity. It seems quite clear to all who have so far written or spoken that one side or the other is very right or very wrong, as the case may be. There is something remarkable, but little short of wonderful in fact, in the startling rapidity with which opinions have congealed into views, views hardened into attitudes, and attitudes crystallized into inflexible positions. And there has certainly been little time, and a not very healthful atmosphere, for clarifying thinking or penetrating consideration.

Certainly the question of whether or not we ought to restate, and how we ought to restate, and what, is no simple one. It seems rather to be complex. It assuredly is two-sided. Here is a question upon which, as a man of honest mind, and as a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ, called to that high vocation by the Spirit of the Most High, one must take a position sooner or later. For it is a question which concerns not only vital interests of the church, but the very fundamentals of individual faith. He pauses to consider and to choose his ground with care. On the one hand are those ready to reproach him as a "Reactionary" and a "Bourbon;" on the other are those quite as ready to brand him "Radical," or "Revolutionist." Tempted, as one might well be, to turn away in dismay from these two hot contenders for what each seems to consider the faith once delivered, he is yet under obligation to himself, to his relation to the church, and to his final responsibility to God to examine the claims of either side.

There are two sides to the question of restatement; for, at the least, there are two sides to every question. Nor are they necessarily the right side and the wrong side only. This can be true of the ultimate right alone, of the ultimate wisdom which no man, perhaps, shall ever know. In the wisdom of the wisest is mixed folly; in the attitude of those who are nearest right the mistaken and the wrong inheres. One feels no small impatience towards the man who demands that one shall accept, without consideration or question, the views of a human thinker on a question vital as this is to the soul's deepest interests.

Viewed from the personal side, this question is not one-sided. The resolution committing the church to the action was not passed by an overwhelming majority. Able men arrayed themselves on either side during the long debate and in the final vote. Since then articles have been printed in church papers for and against the measure, written by men whose integrity, scholarship, faithfulness to the interests of the church, and devotion to God and mankind are beyond question. Noting carefully the attitudes of leading men in place and thought, one cannot hide from himself that there are two sides that have each in them so much that is right, that they attract so much that seems to be wrong, that they repel the ablest minds, longest used to pass in the discrimination.

The unusual actions of the legislative session and subsequent to the discussion of the resolution presented at the Birmingham Conference should assuredly give us pause before we arrive at himself on either side. First of all, Bishops took part in General Conference debates, solicited to such conduct by delegates. Certainly in a matter which called for this session unusual grave complications must have been foreseen by its friends as well as by those who opposed it.

Following this, the unprecedented conduct of the Bishops in appointing a committee to carry out the will of the majority composed of three who had spoken or voted in the minority out of five members on the committee shows how very evident to the selected leaders of the church was the fact that the matter had two sides. And this conception of the possibilities of the action of the Conference impelled them to a caution so unusual that they violated established parliamentary procedure in order to safeguard the church against hasty or inconsiderate action.

The facts that General Conferences, however wise, are not infallible; that their deliverances are authoritative, within limits, but not ex cathedra; and that this action was not of the General Conference, of a majority of that Conference, but of a plurality only, dispose one to pause before accepting or rejecting bodily the unprecedented actions of the General Conference. Then there was legislation on the part of this same General Conference which was discussed with care and passed with deliberation, which is not applicable throughout our territory on account of legal complications, and which, the editor of our general organ has already pointed out, places us in an awkwardly anomalous attitude in regard to our doctrine of orders. There is some likelihood that the Conference might have been as inaccurate in its survey of the field in which its restatement resolution would operate. There was possibility of vision that did not sweep the whole horizon, of insight into future complications obscured by the smoke of heated debate, of individual opinions overridden by personal admirations, or adherances, of unformed unrest and doubt at the hearts of delegates crystallizing, under spoken and unusual stress, into action of which they did not stop to count the cost because of the glowing promise of relief held out.

There is strong argument brought forward already on either side of the question. Despite the usual claims of either side that the premises of the other are false and the conclusions untrue, an unprejudiced reader can perceive the logic of either position, provided the premises are secure. And that is just the question at issue.

The question has two sides; to me it seems to be many-sided. It should have full discussion. Somewhat in the manner of articles may be distasteful, the matter even may be objectionable. Personally, I think that "Interested Methodist" argues from premises not furnished by the action of the General Conference; but it seems to be just as true that the fact that Gilderoy has restated the articles for the benefit of young preachers furnishes no valid reason why a General Conference should undertake a similar action for the benefit of world-wide Methodism. But, however short of the ideal individual articles may fall, it would certainly be more objectionable that discussion should be limited, except within [illegible] and ordinary courtesy. The articles that have appeared in [illegible] transgress [illegible] and [illegible] very important subject [illegible] their minds, because of [illegible] of attitudes of those persons spoken of, must have prejudice [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] careful search [illegible] arguments to [illegible] prejudices. The question is not only [illegible] one side, but it is of transcendant importance, and we have plenty of time. In twelve years one might complete a course in several kinds of [illegible]. Every position taken be won by [illegible] then we shall not have the humiliation of confessing to ourselves that we are defending ground that we should never have occupied had we thought a little longer. If conclusions be reached by honest, deliberate thought, personally we shall be much benefited, and we shall become able, too, to benefit others. Those who seek for truth have the rich promise of that wisdom, far above rubies in price, who reveals herself to those who seek her early, and with honest hearts, committed fully to the glorious quest.

WALTER G. HARRIS.

MADISON STATION.

Dear Doctor Boswell: The fourth Sunday in July I began a meeting at Madison Station for my fellow laborer, Rev. J. R. Jones. The weather for the first day or two was not at all favorable, but from the first service the Lord was with us in convicting and converting power. The people came to church in increasing numbers and listened with an attention that would inspire any preacher to do his very best.

The meeting lasted five days, and some of the visible results were eleven accessions on profession of faith, and the church moved to a more serious consideration of spiritual things. God only knows what a harvest may yet be garnered as the result of that meeting, for there were others "almost persuaded" and still others who declared a preference for some other branch of the Christian Church.

Brother Jones is a fine man; is held in very high esteem by his own people, and enjoys the perfect confidence of all others. It is not strange that this should be so when we know that Brother Jones is a man with a mission. He will surely be able to give a good account of Madison Station and its cordial and cultured people at the next session of our Annual Conference.

May God abundantly bless the efforts of this good man as he labors with such an appreciative people. Fraternally, J. W. CAMPBELL.

A PLEA FOR HOME MISSIONS.

"God has packed his American storehouse with riches of righteousness for every one of his foreign children, but a home missionary carries the key."

The need of the future of home missions is trained workers. Since the creation of the Order of Deaconesses by the General Conference a quadrennium ago twenty-four young women have been set apart and trained for this office. The deaconess is the only female office-bearer in the church as provided by the Constitution.

There is a demand for trained workers in the home churches; they are needed as pastors' assistants. They should have settled religious views.

The hungry world needs Christian workers, who are anchored in the faith, who believe in the Bible and in the Christ as the only Savior. They should possess that strong and perfect self-control which springs from the realized presence of God. For the great underlying principles of character they have the privilege of drawing for sustenance and inspiration from God himself.

The great obstacle of growth in home missions is the ever-increasing disinclination of women to holding office. Some societies have been disbanded because no women could be found who would fill the official positions. This is owing to the feeling of responsibility in holding church offices.

We need to send our young women to training schools, where they can be prepared to perform every religious duty and become so familiar with the practical performance of same that they can train and instruct others.

There is, as yet, only one training school in Southern Methodism—the Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, Mo. In it provision is made for the training of both home and foreign missionaries.

Every Conference should own a scholarship in this school for the training of its workers, both home and connectional,—that is, for those who are willing to work in the schools, rescue and mission homes, and as city missionaries and deaconesses, under the control of the Woman's Board. Also, when there is no applicant to these positions some girl, who wishes, can have it for training for work in the home church.

When a scholarship has been awarded and another desires training, the means can be raised by appealing to the auxiliaries to raise the amount necessary, $180, to pay tuition, board and incidental expenses.

More and better equipped schools are also a demand of the work. There are so many beneficiaries for the amount raised annually to be distributed, that there is not much room for extension or expansion. Every Conference should have its school and its preventive and rescue home.

In these schools provision should be made for the education of the foreign masses, who are literally swarming on our shores in an invasion, which, if not met with adequate resistance, will in a few years be as disastrous to American institutions and policy of government as was the invasion of Goths and Vandals in its effect upon the history of other nations in the past. The great question of the day, the burning question of child labor in its effect in adjusting the relative positions of two alien races, occupying the same territory and contending not alone for equal rights, but for supremacy, must be faced and dealt with. As women are more vitally concerned in the issue, as being mothers of the race, they must devise ways and means for its adjudication.

Women are not to be lawmakers, though to a large extent, the moulders of popular opinion. It is their's, also, to work upon the sympathies of men's natures, and through this influence and protest the "cry of children" must be hushed.

There are 900,000 women and girls in Southern Methodism. Should this large number unite in organized effort, their onset against the glaring evils of the day would be well-nigh invincible, for organized effort is an important factor in both social and religious economics.

Centralizing their forces on these three strategic points, viz., the education and Americanization of the foreign masses; the preservation of the purity of womanhood and the rescue of down-trodden childhood, we may hope to bestow the peaceable fruits of righteousness on the foreign-born children of our Father from his storehouse, the key to which is held by the home missionary.

MRS. A. C. YEAGER.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

Brethren—At the recent session of our League Conference at McComb City it was unanimously decided not to attempt anything in the way of special work in the missionary department for this year; but rather that each pastor should use his League as he thinks best, and that if they collect any for missions, it shall be used on the regular collections of the church for missions. However, each League is to be credited with whatever amount it pays, and it is expected that this amount shall be an excess above the amount that has been assessed by the District Stewards for that church.

I was requested to notify the pastors of the action taken by the Conference, and urge them to use their Leagues in the furtherance of the mission cause. I would suggest that you organize your League (at least as many of them as you can) into a mission study class, that they may learn the needs in the foreign field, and when they have a knowledge of the need, they will cheerfully help supply the need. For the information necessary to the successful operation of this department, would refer you to Rev. W. A. Terry, Fourth Vice President, Vicksburg, Miss.

Some of our pastors have objected to the special work the League has been doing, and thought that their efforts should have been directed through the regular channels of the church, and now as the change has been made, I wish to urge all pastors that they be sure to let their Leagues have a part in collecting some of the assessments, either for foreign or home missions or Conference claimants; but remember that the most important thing to be done is to stress the educational feature through the study-class and the monthly missionary meeting, that we may have the next generation of Methodists fully informed as to the needs of the foreign field and what our church, through her missionaries, is doing.

Hoping to hear good reports at the Conference at Laurel with reference to the good work done by all the Leagues in this department, through the wise leadership of their pastors, I am sincerely and fraternally yours,

W. D. HAWKINS,
President Mississippi Conf. Epworth League

SECOND CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS.

My Dear Dr. Boswell: Our Second Methodist Church has never been dedicated because of debt. At the beginning of this year we owed $1,100 on the church and parsonage, but we have been able to provide for this entire indebtedness, and Bishop Hendrix is coming to dedicate the church on Sunday, Nov. 25. We expect this to be a great day for Columbus Methodism. We would be glad to have you with us, Doctor. We invite all preachers of the Conference, especially pastors of Second [illegible] and presiding elders. Fraternally,

C. CLARK.

SOUTH CHERRY GROVE.

[illegible] just closed a revival at Cherry Grove [illegible]. We began [illegible] and closed Aug. [illegible] Ellis came on Monday. He did [illegible] work. His preaching was with great power. The house was filled to overflowing at most [illegible] services. We had the very best of attention [illegible] through the meeting. Some were added to the church; others set forth new resolutions that they would live closer to God than ever before. The church seems to be wonderfully built up in the most holy faith. Brother Ellis met [illegible] some of his old friends and co-workers who used to preach with him quite a young man.

We have also held our regular services at Lindsay's Chapel. We were going [illegible] to have Rev. J. M. Morse, our beloved presiding elder, with us on Sunday. Rev. H. McDaniel came to us on Tuesday, and rendered us valuable service. The Lord blessed us in [illegible] as in good meetings. There was one accession to the church. Pray for us. Your brother in the work,

J. O. WARE, P. C.

THE SITUATION DISCLOSED.

I have tried [illegible] situation of this vision question [illegible] impartial fairness to both sides, and to [illegible] conclusions as to what has been done [illegible] what has to be done. It is my judgment [illegible] action of our General Conference in the M. E. Church, South that the resolution authorizing the commission conferred upon these five men plenary power to act for, and [illegible] question for our Church. And this opinion is endorsed by the report of the committee [illegible] whom the originating resolution was referred.

The language [illegible] follows: "This commission shall report [illegible] General Conference four years hence." [illegible] their labors." What is the word "finality" intended to [illegible] that of "finality" in this report? [illegible] in the Christian vocabulary? This General Conference will not be in session four years hence. And [illegible] it not be in order for a majority [illegible] General Conference to determine [illegible] meeting of the next General Conference [illegible] the work of this commission final?

And does not [illegible] report of the committee of three make the work of the commission final? They are to report [illegible] result of their labors. Does this not [illegible] completed work? A work done for, and [illegible] name of the whole church? And that it is [illegible] as an action finished for and [illegible] either accept or reject? I read what has [illegible] and if Bristow will be most grateful [illegible].

But where is [illegible] revision? Dr. Tillett puts [illegible] and says to [illegible] as to [illegible] there is [illegible] Methodist theological school in the world [illegible] twenty-five. Are [illegible] teaching of [illegible] and [illegible] by scolding [illegible] the times in which we live. This is a strong statement, and it [illegible] reveals Methodism in a most impotent state.

But what [illegible] of the days that make the Twenty-five [illegible] so embarrassing to our great teachers [illegible]? Will they strengthen or will they weaken [illegible]? Will they dissipate [illegible]? Will they increase or will [illegible] people's reverence for [illegible] Book? Will they make it easier [illegible] and influence the masses for Christ, or will they make it more difficult? If all these [illegible] could be answered to the satisfaction [illegible] I do not think anyone would be [illegible] seriously oppose revision.

But we [illegible] good [illegible] and we think [illegible] are evil [illegible] tives and [illegible] The book [illegible] The first is by Dr. [illegible] author [illegible] note [illegible] charge [illegible] Sunday-school [illegible] teachers [illegible] the ministry and [illegible] Sunday-school [illegible] know [illegible] the cards [illegible] the Bible is [illegible] Christian [illegible] believers.

In choosing [illegible] I am taking issue [illegible] Nevertheless [illegible] and hold [illegible] it is neither [illegible] living [illegible] human [illegible] and did not [illegible] divine [illegible] inspired writers [illegible] the Bible is [illegible] the larger portion [illegible] I fully agree with [illegible] that the theological schools in the world [illegible] twenty-five. Are [illegible] the basis for [illegible] such criticisms as this.

Speaking [illegible] inspired writers on page 10, he says: "[illegible] special influence of the Holy Spirit upon [illegible] Biblical writers was designed to [illegible] them [illegible] mistakes in [illegible] [illegible] The other [illegible] in a [illegible] sense that [illegible] Christians are God's workmanship, and in [illegible] must sense that the Bible [illegible] is God's book. [illegible] little rat of hope on page 17, [illegible] words [illegible] the Ten Commandments were the very words of God." But the Baptists have [illegible] these, and hope for the Book [illegible] finally discarded. But Dr. Tillett gives his [illegible] to this emergency on page 19, where he says: "Christianity could live without the Book, but it could not live, indeed, it could not be at all without the Person of Christ."

It is to be hoped that the Methodist theological schools of the world will not demand a revision of the Person of Christ, when they are revising with the Bible, as is now being done in Germany. If they do, and should get authority [illegible] by a mere majority vote of some future General Conference, we will have an irresistible force coming in contact with an immovable object, and the last thought of Methodism will be [illegible] of being.

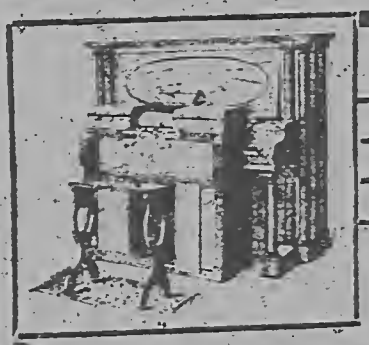
"Yes, in all good conscience, before God and man, the church should either put an end to such teaching, or else conform her creed to it. If we insist on conformity in our schools and colleges to our doctrines and laws, we have no right to insist upon it in the new; the home and the church." I speak with fearful fore God, and with [illegible] regard for the [illegible] This issue was not raised by the church. It has been forced upon her under a most solemn protest. But it will not [illegible] cease now, until [illegible] or the other side is crushed and driven [illegible] the field. It is now a life or death struggle, for the orthodoxy that has made Methodism, and for the orthodoxy that has made Methodism, and that saved our fathers, and has given us a good hope.

JAS. M. WELMS.

No man works greater harm to his country than he [illegible] who, though he may not violate the law himself, inspires contempt for the law in others. Contempt will breed disobedience, and a whole crop of lawless hoodlums will be the outcome.

[illegible] M. W. WOODWARD.

[illegible] I left [illegible] Conference [illegible] and friends and [illegible] [illegible] Holly Grove with [illegible] [illegible] Dr. [illegible] for [illegible] Wesleyan. We had a delightful [illegible] and I [illegible] profitable [illegible] to Scott, and was [illegible] start to [illegible] the pastorate in [illegible] John L. Lee. His [illegible] during the Conference was [illegible] positive. I desire [illegible] of ruling. I [illegible] giving [illegible] satisfaction in our Annual Conference in December.



[illegible] district is in a pretty [illegible] condition [illegible] a whole. The note of progress was sounded along several lines. Church building and good collections seem to be the order of the day. There was reported 300 additions up to now. All our preachers were present but the Cotton Valley man, and [illegible] were [illegible] or thirty four of the laymen were present. We had a goodly number of visiting brethren. The beloved from the Monroe District was with us, and, by the way, preached us a fine sermon Thursday at 11 o'clock. Brother N. E. Jeter, Conference Secretary of Missions preached an able sermon Friday night to a very appreciative audience. Besides these two named we had Drs. W. B. Boggs, of Shreveport; J. A. Parker, of Dallas, and C. C. Miller, of Centenary College. We also had Rev. J. E. Denson, of Crowley District, and Brother Hart, of Shreveport District. Prof. E. S. Sligh and wife were here in the interest of Mansfield College.

The preaching was ripe of the Spirit and with power. The following brethren did the preaching: Revs. S. J. Davis, J. M. Henry, N. E. Jeter, J. R. Moore, C. W. Carter, Bishop Ward and W. E. Boggs.

Winnfield is an ideal place to hold a conference, with a high class of people, refined and cultured. Benice Ltd. gets the next Conference. We extend an invitation to the Editor to come and be with us. Yours truly,

W. T. WOODWARD.

With "fear and trembling" we come before the women of Louisiana as their new Press Superintendent, while in deep humility we implore Divine guidance. Methodists ought to be used to changes; but to those of you who cannot "straightway desire the new," feeling that "the old is better," we say, "wait a little while" and we shall be the "old broom" that knows about the unswept corners. We have not been able to obtain a correct, or, rather, revised list of auxiliary superintendents, and urge each auxiliary corresponding secretary to notify us of any change of officers for the present year. If you have a regular Press Superintendent let us know about it, and if your Corresponding Secretary is acting in this capacity also, be sure that we have her name and that she uses the Bulletin as directed in the leaflet, "Our Press Department," sent out this month with the Bulletin. We have a large supply of these leaflets, and for fear you did not give it a careful reading we shall send each of you another copy next month (D. V.).

We greatly deplore the fact that some, yea, too many of our church women who belong to the "King's Daughters," "Mother's Unions," and other orders, are losing interest in our missionary societies. Beware, lest the Master say unto you, "These things ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone!" The devil is not dead, and if he can get us to excuse ourselves from an important duty by engaging our attention with a less important one, he will delight in doing so. It behooves us to be careful to know that we are not only busy, but busy about our "Master's business," and doing the very best things. If the missionary societies were patronized by all our women there would be no need for any other society, as all work of charity, local, connectional and foreign, are carefully provided for. The trouble is, we are trying to do too many things. Our enemy, beholding our works, saw that it was good, and so to hinder the work, he has introduced division and rivalry. Even some pastors stand so much in their own light as to discourage the connectional features of our work. Whenever we hear of any Christian doing or saying anything against missions, we can almost hear our Savior's dying prayer: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," repeated on behalf of the offenders.

If you have done, or are doing anything that will help another, "pass it on." We shall be glad to get short, pointed paragraphs from all over the State. Dr. Torre says, "the Christian may go where he please, if only he goes on his knees." Sisters, let's be much in prayer that the Holy Spirit may be poured out in large measure.

MRS. ALICE CARY MCKINNEY.

Ruston, La.

REV. J. B. PORTER.

Rev. Jesse Bell Porter, son of A. B. and Esther Porter, was born in Roberson County, Tenn., May 21, 1820. In January, 1839, he moved with his parents to Panola County, Miss., and in November of the same year settled in the town of Panola. On June 10, 1842, he was married the first time to Mrs. Sarah E. Wood, who preceded him to the good world January 4, 1881, leaving him with five children, three of whom still survive him. His second marriage was to Mrs. Sallie A. Armstrong, June 15, 1886, who died Aug. 29, 1905. Brother Porter professed religion under the ministry of Rev. Walker, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in September, 1842, in the town of Panola, which church then belonged to the Oxford Circuit, Tennessee Conf. He was useful from the very beginning of his religious life; was received into the church on Sunday and appointed class leader of the society by his pastor on the following Monday. Thus we see that he spent more than sixty-four long years as an official member of his church.

Brother Porter was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Coffeeville Circuit at Goshen Church in the year 1851, under the presiding eldership of Rev. R. L. Andrews; was ordained deacon by Bishop Kavanaugh at Memphis, Tenn., some time between the years 1855 and 1860, and was ordained elder by Bishop Galloway in Holly Springs, Miss., Dec. 8, 1881. He never was a member of the traveling connection, but was used as a supply on several charges. The first appointment he ever received was that of missionary to the negroes on the Grenada Circuit. The difficulties of the work were so great that his presiding elder indirectly ordered him not to serve it; but he went and served it for a portion of the year. He was kindly advised to become a member of the Annual Conference, but he never offered himself, as he no doubt felt that he could do better and more efficient work in the local ranks. He served several hard and trying fields of labor as a supply, led sinners to Christ, built houses of worship, organized and reorganized churches, and thus, in the Master's name, did a great and lasting work as one of the pioneers of Methodism in the territory of the North Mississippi Conference.

As a preacher, Brother Porter was unassuming, plain and practical, and held the highest esteem and unabated confidence of his brethren in the ministry to the end. As a citizen, he was upright and patriotic. As a husband, he was kind; as a father, he was intelligent, painstaking and affectionate. As a member of the Methodist Church, he was orthodox, loyal and liberal. He believed, preached and lived as he believed the Bible to teach; yet he did not deny the same right to other people. The Methodist Church to him was the real church of God, having a liberal share of the divine commission, and he took great pleasure in availing himself of every opportunity to declare the saving power of God to needy and dying men. The religion which he professed and possessed was to him a real God-given principle, nourished and cherished by a living faith in Christ, and not a barren creed gotten up by and propagated by the mere fancies of men. To him Christ was a personal Savior and daily companion, who walked with him through the trials and difficulties of life, thus making plain the divine promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end."

Brother Porter was a man in whom the people had confidence. He held some public office most all of his life. He was a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. He was persuaded that the Lord was able to keep that which he had committed to him against that day. He looked down into his grave with an implicit faith in God, on whose laws he had meditated all the days of his life. He could say, with the Apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; I am ready to be offered, hence there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me."

A man with a clearer vision of his home in the skies could not be found. He talked as intelligently about departing and being with his Lord as if the Lord had told him, as he did his disciples, that he would come and receive him unto himself. By faith, heaven had become a real city, whose builder and maker is God, and life was a real journey that he was making to that city. Nothing to him was a greater consolation than to hear of the success of the Church, and it thrilled his soul with joy and gladness to see sinners converted.

A good man is gone to his reward, and we laid his body away to await the great day of the Lord. His voice is hushed, his chair is empty, his work is over, and father and grandfather will be seen no more in this life, but we are looking forward to the great day of the resurrection, when we hope to meet him in the beautiful fields of Eden, and separate no more forever.

J. H. BASS,
His pastor.

SOMETHINGS LEARNED FROM A PILE OF WOOD.

When I was a boy father sometimes bought four-foot wood for the kitchen stove, and it was my task to saw it into eleven cuts to the stick. My tools were not the best, the pile would appear very large, and my back was not shaped just right for sawing wood anyway, so I did not address myself to the task with much enthusiasm, and it dragged heavily.

Finally I got the idea that I did not have to do the job all at once, but on each day that one day's part of the whole. I decided on eleven sticks as my stint. I would first take the eleven off the pile, exercising judgment to discriminate in favor of small sticks, and put them by themselves. I would then seat myself down to the eleven sticks, and in a short time they would be handsomely cleared away. Behind me not done much, but it was a complete achievement so far as it went, and I left the task full of courage. I gave my time to observation of the big pile, confining my attention to the lowly eleven sticks, for I argued if I attended faithfully to these, the big pile would take care of itself. And sure enough, two or three weeks of eleven-sticks application left the big pile—nowhere.

After growing up I had to undertake the study of a very, very difficult language. English is a less than a hundred written characters, but this language has seemed thousands. It is truly a pile tactics on it. I never dared to think what a very formidable task I had undertaken. I would have despaired of it at once but that each day I was responsible for only that little stint which I could reasonably be expected to do in that one day. I argued that I must get up and kept at it day after days enough, so studying would surely have to the language. So I have been saved from anxiety and despair, and the pile of language has disappeared quite rapidly, as my friends experience in view of my intellectual backwardness. But I have been satisfied with.

To go back to the wood pile, the split wood often had to be carried in and piled. At first I would pick a little here and a little there, but the pile seemed to absolutely refuse to dwindle. Finally I learned to settle down to one spot, taking only [illegible] how that one little spot was being cleared under my hands, till at last I could see that this method persevered in was changing the aspect of the whole pile.

I have applied the same principle successfully to many different things since. Instead of trying to learn that whole [illegible] I will learn about three hundred strange words written with about one thousand different characters. I do not look at the task as a whole, but some of the words begin with an "s" sound, and I have collected them up; others begin with a "g" sound, and I have got the best of them; I fight the words by detachments and while the army as a whole might get the best of me, I know I can whip every separate detachment—and there will the army be.

Sometimes I have to walk a very hard, slippery country road at night. It is then I have found there is always danger of coming down flat in a puddle. I step through a hundred yards of the muddiest, and from the further side say: "That much of the journey is now finished for good and all." I plod on the further side of half a mile of the slippiest and say: "There is so much to come, but this stretch is completed behind my back—and none of it on my back." And so the muddy, slippery parts past become a strong foundation of courage from which to face the rest.

I have seen boys look with despair at a big geography, but when big geographies need be studied a page at a time. I have seen boys shed tears over a page of examples in arithmetic, but it is surprising how courage grows when tackling them one at a time in order, rather than looking at the whole page, picking out an easy one here and there. And an example done is done for good and all. It is behind our back. A week or grade passed is passed forever, no matter how hard the branches may have been.

To-day has about all of life's experiences that we can successfully meet in twenty-four hours. But a boy, a youth or a man can turn down his days happily and well if he takes them in order, just one full day at a time.—H. W. S. PERRY, in Christian Intelligencer.

TOWSER'S FAILING.

"The poor dog is tired out," said Mary, as the wagon drove into the yard, and Towser, covered with the dust of the road, dropped lolling and panting upon the grass.

"'Tisn't the journey he had to take that's tired him," laughed the farmer; "he's used himself up zigzagging from one side of the road to the other and tending to everything that didn't concern him. He couldn't pass a gate without running through it to see what was on the other side, or see a hen anywhere along the road without being called up to chase her. Every dog that he met he started 'im to barkin', and everything that moved he kept out of the way to find out what it was and where it was goin'. No wonder he's tired!

"But you'll find plenty of human beings that are traveling their lives through in just the same way. They aren't satisfied with the road marked out for them, but watch their neighbors goin's and do-ings and take charge of no end of things they can't help or hinder. They are like old Towser—it wears 'em out. If they would follow straight after the Master and not invent so many extra cares for themselves the road wouldn't be nigh so long nor hard."—Selected.

THE SMOOTHERS OF THE WAY.

She always made things easier," was a tribute given a little while ago to a quiet woman not known outside the four walls of her home, but who yet left an impress behind her when she passed on into the larger life. No one who knew her could help recognizing the simple completeness of the statement, and to her household, from husband to hired man, she left his or her daily way smoothed and straightened by her tact and system and gentleness. She was a living example of George Eliot's saying: "What do we live for if it is not to make life less difficult to one another?"

To some girls and women, perhaps, this seems a small end to live for. Yet that it is so often approached makes the hope and happiness of many homes. Life is increasingly difficult, increasingly complex, in many communities to-day. The hasty, the careless, the inconsiderate, the thoughtless, the [illegible] make it harder for those who are trying to live their lives well in its midst. Every one who makes it better worth living, who helps to smooth the way, however slightly, for the burdened, who lightens the load of a single fellow-traveler, is a benefactor of the race. Her work is worth living. She is truly a smoother of the way.—The Standard.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Centenary College will open on the 12th of September, with a competent faculty. Good moral tone and excellent class-work are guaranteed from the student body. Session, ten scholastic months. REV. C. C. MILLER, Pres.

Notwithstanding all the defects and inconsistencies in our ritual, as pointed out by some of the brethren, we have managed as a Church to get along fairly well. Now that our people are contented, and far better informed than ever, we see no necessity for change just to meet the objections of those who have no sympathy with Methodism. Were we to employ our enemies to expurgate our ritual, and fix it to suit themselves, they would then have more sympathy with us than they have now.

What is called firmness may not always be the result of intelligent conviction. What looks like firmness is sometimes nothing more than stubbornness.

Some preachers have the happy art of putting a vast deal of vim in forceless words. As quaint old Arthur Davis was wont to say, "they belong to that class of men who try to bore big holes with small augers."

In an article from Rev. T. L. Mellen, printed a few weeks since occurred several typographical errors, one rather serious. Brother Mellen quoted a Campbellite preacher as saying "the Lord's prayer is the most 'insipid' thing" he ever read. The printer made it read: "the Lord's prayer is the most 'inspired' thing he ever read. Quite a difference. We beg Brother Mellen's pardon, but he testifies himself "that none except an educated man can read his writing."

In a letter from a wide-awake presiding elder, who sends us a subscription, occurs this sentence: "My observation is that no man is an intelligent steward who does not take his Church paper and read it. And no other steward does the Church any good." Apropos is the following from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate: "A member of the Baptist Church said in our presence the other day: 'I could not keep up with the Baptist Church in Georgia if I did not take The Index.' True. Nor can a Methodist keep up with his Church in Georgia without the Wesleyan. Are we willing for the Baptists to go ahead of us?"

Some of the papers are using for "all they are worth" copious extracts from the essay of Dr. H. H. Hoss (now Bishop Hoss) before the last ecumenical Methodist Conference in London. Zion's Herald, of Boston, fished out the extracts and started them on the circuit. At least, one editor declared "they are the strongest deliverances yet made in favor of the 'restatement' of Methodist doctrines." The evident object is to make it appear that Dr. Hoss' essay in London, and Bishop Hoss' speech in the General Conference at Birmingham, and his letter in Zion's Herald are irreconcilable. Bishop Hoss is well able to take care of himself, and when he returns from Brazil, we dare say he will look after those who have undertaken to show him up.

SAVING THE WORLD.

John the Baptist came preaching. Jesus went about preaching. When he sent out his disciples, he said, "Go, and as ye go, preach." John stood face to face with the people. So did Jesus, and so did the apostles. This is the divine method of saving men through the Gospel. Every great religious awakening that has blessed the world was effected through preaching. Why should Christians undertake other methods? Is it because the Gospel has lost its power, or because men have lost faith in the Church? If either, then no method can avail.

During recent years the Church has concerned itself greatly in behalf of the destitute and neglected classes, and many Christians, especially in the cities, have been impressed with the idea that the temporal condition of the poor is to be bettered before they can be induced to put themselves in direct contact with the means of grace. Accordingly, "social settlements," the nature and workings of which we do not fully understand, and "institutional churches," where the poor are fed, and those who will are instructed in some useful branch of the domestic life, etc., are inaugurated. But, after what may be called a fair test, these expedients, though successful as eating places and places for social enjoyment, and for teaching small arts, have not been successful as evangelizing agencies. The crowds of the people who were so bountifully fed by our Lord is sufficient to show that such expedients are not sufficient to attach sensual beings to Christ, or his Church. A crowd will always gather where there is anything to be given away, especially anything to eat, if it is nothing more than a soda cracker and a thin slice of Bologna sausage. Our Lord worked a miracle to feed a hungry multitude. That was enough. The crowd came again, "not for the miracle, but for the loaves and fishes." So it has ever been, and so it is. One who worked in this way, and witnessed the failure of his efforts, has said laconically, "soup will not save a soul."

Everything set forth as the duty of Christians to the poor, to feed and clothe, and otherwise minister to their wants, is admitted. The Master taught the duty in unmistakable terms. But after all, it remains true that public institutions operated for the business, whether in disguise, or for the avowed purpose of bringing men to the Church and to Christ, do not accomplish the work. Men and women are not to be caught that way.

It is affirmed "that the people are shy of that which comes to them under the auspices of a Church, and will not willingly put themselves where they are likely to be entreated by the representatives of a Church." This is quoted by the Baptist Standard, of Chicago, from one who is conversant with institutional or settlement work. It is further stated by the Standard that Hull House, Chicago, "could not have gained its strong hold upon the people of that neighborhood had not those in charge systematically ignored religion in its ecclesiastical expression." This was Dr. Rainsford's idea when he invited working men to come to a series of lectures with the promise that there would be no religious service. Besides, there was the offer of the unrestricted freedom—the freedom of a clubroom. This policy as a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ, was likewise a failure.

An English pastor, who has labored more than twenty-five years in one of the poorest sections of London "declared in a recent address that few of those whose hunger and wretchedness have been relieved by his church ever attend its services or show any interest in religious matters." This suggests that, if the institutional work of churches fails in its principal aim, instead of systematically ignoring religion and the church there should be direct and energetic work of a purely evangelical character. That done, the responsibility would fall directly on those to whom the offer of salvation is made. Under the practice of systematically ignoring religion, the responsibility rests on those who fail to make the appeal. If the object is to save souls, preaching and personal teaching will do far more than baiting the people, as the Standard says, "with food and old clothes."

If organized agencies are necessary to the betterment of human conditions, then the more agencies put in operation the better, but let them stand on their merits as such. To organize them with the ultimate object of saving souls, and yet systematically ignore religion and the church, will surely impress the beneficiaries that those who conduct them are ashamed of Jesus and his cause. If this is the effect we do not wonder that such institutions are failures as evangelizing agencies.

The Church can never gain any advantage over the world by departing from the Gospel methods of saving souls. It is necessary to feed the hungry and clothe the naked—but these are fruits of the Spirit; not the agencies of conversion. The poor may thus be made comfortable in body, but nothing save the Gospel message from a loving heart by a living tongue poured into the ear of listening men, can bring them to repentance.

RESTRICTING THE LIBERTY OF TEACHERS.

A recent issue of the Christian Science Sentinel, as quoted in one of our exchanges, is responsible for the following item, showing that Christian Science teachers are not at full liberty. The item is in the form of an order or prohibition: "Neither the Pastor Emeritus of The Mother Church, nor Christian Scientists shall teach or treat Roman Catholics except with the written consent of the authorities of the church. Teaching and healing are separate departments. One cannot heal without teaching said patients. I refrain from doing either." We infer that the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church have been after the Christian Scientists with "a sharp stick," otherwise we cannot understand why members of the Roman Catholic Church are to be treated with such consideration. Why should an Eddyite have the "written consent" of the priest or Bishop to treat and teach Roman Catholics in religion, and have full leave to carry on the work among other Christians? Have Roman Catholics peculiar rights that the disciples of Mrs. Eddy are bound to respect? And why Christian Scientists are forbidden to attend Scientist Sunday-schools with their children, as the congregationalist declares we do, not understand.

Time is short; our obligations are infinite.

PERSONAL.

Rev. Thos. Copeland left the city on Monday morning to attend the funeral of his father-in-law, Col. H. Phillips, who died Sunday at his home in Athens, Ala. We tender our sympathies to the family who are thus bereaved.

We had the pleasure of a call on Monday last from Rev. F. K. Warlick, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, who had just returned from the northern part of the State where he went to rest for a few days. He was in good health and spirits.

Rev. W. G. Burks, in sending remittance for two subscribers from Ripley, Miss., says: "These are intelligent men, and I want you to know that they both voluntarily spoke to me in high praise of your paper. We think these men for their good opinion."

Rev. W. T. Ward writes that his church at Duluth, which was blown off its pillars, has been replaced. He says also that the report of the blowing down of the Baptist Church at Weldon at the same time was a mistake. This report he gladly corrects.

Brother C. C. Weir, the live agent of the Louisiana Orphanage, is constantly adding to his receipts. Since last report he has received from Zachary $50.50, and from Slaughter $22.50, which added to $10,507.40 previously reported, makes a total of $10,580.40.

Rev. F. X. Sweeney, of Pinehat, passed through the city on Monday en route home from Indian Bayou Circuit, where he had been assisting Rev. J. D. Nesom in a meeting at one of his churches. He reported overflowing congregations and successful services.

We have received a fine report of the work of Rev. J. R. Moore, at Minden, La. He is preaching with great acceptableness, and exercising a fine influence over the young people, among whom he is remarkably popular. We trust his ministry may be abundantly blessed.

We sympathize with our brother, Rev. Wilson Moore, of Pike, Ark., who, with his wife, has been called to mourn the death of their fourteen-year-old daughter, who passed away on the eleventh of August. They are in great sorrow and ask the prayers of their brethren. It is well with the child.

Rev. M. L. White, writing from Walnut Grove, Miss., says: "I have just closed a meeting at our new church, Zion. Dr. P. W. Cooper helped us three days. It was a great and good meeting, resulting in twenty-four accessions. Here we have a beautiful church-house, just painted. The church here is twelve months old, with membership of seventy. Our local preachers are giving us good service."

Our venerable brother, L. N. Dantzler, of Moss Point, Miss., we regret to learn is not in the best of health. He has long been a leading and useful member of our church, a man of means, and has used his wealth wisely and well. He has recently given $10,000 to the public school and $10,000 to our Church at Moss Point. The gift to the Church is to be invested, the proceeds only to be used in support of the Church. Brother Dantzler will also bless the Church after his departure. May it be long before his going away!

A RESTATEMENT WE ENDORSE.

My dear Brother: Since a word about the restatement of the interests of Grenada College. The thorough manner in which we do the high class of work repels some pupils. It is because [illegible] regret that many people prefer short methods to substantial results. We cannot in conscience do less thorough work than we are doing. The trustees are doing all they can to bring desired success. Individually, they have this year invested five thousand dollars in the school. They want you to do three things:

1. Read and ponder Dr. Barton's card and do as he asks you.

2. Direct the attention of the people to the card as it will read in your pulpit.

3. Help us to secure pupils for the coming session. Your influence in every department, in particular, to the people who desire best results in every department. Help us here. Yours truly,

J. R. Nelson,
President Board of Trustees.

REV. GEO. JACKSON.

On Aug. 6, 1824, the Rev. George Jackson was born at Holywell, Huntingdonshire, England. He landed at New Orleans on Good Friday in 1854, and in 1857, at Brighton, Miss., he was licensed to preach, having been previously an exhorter. He was ordained deacon in 1859 by Bishop Andrew, in Franklin, La., and at Canton, Miss., in 1861, he was ordained elder by Bishop Robert Paine. He has gone in and out before Louisiana Methodists for many years, preaching God's Word and winning souls, than which there is nothing better for any man. He is now filling out the few months left of this Conference year as preacher in charge of the Pollock Circuit. Though for some years an honored veteran in the ranks of the superannuates, he has embraced every opportunity to preach that has come his way.

For years at the Rapides Camp Meeting Brother Jackson has been appointed to preach the opening sermon, and so he preached it this year. On Thursday last, Aug. 9, that day being his birthday, he was selected as the preacher for the 3430 time, he [illegible] ground very beautifully decorated with ferns and other green things and with lovely flowers all the pulpit, platform and posts, and tastefully [illegible] delicate lace over and around the pulpit. They also placed an elegant rug for the feet of this grand old boy to stand upon to preach his sermon. A large congregation of his brethren and friends assembled under the tabernacle, and, after the singing of old-time hymns and prayer by the presiding elder, Brother Jackson announced his text as follows, from Philippians i. 11: "Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory of God." His style was his own, and his sermon was a most excellent one. Rev. B. H. Sheppard, preacher in charge, closed with a warm and touching prayer.

There are few men better loved than Brother Jackson, and the occasion of his 82d birthday and Rapides Camp Meeting [illegible] an honor was an [illegible] event in the history of the [illegible].

A CAMPAIGN FOR CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

There are stirring times ahead for us in Mississippi. Active months of candidature, campaigning and civic enthusiasm. A half dozen candidates for Governor will stump the state, seeking support. A study of the platforms of the various candidates discloses the fact that the leading theme for discussion will be "Education." No more popular slogan could be chosen. The people are interested, the public ear will be alert, the public mind impressible. State institutions will be magnified, state school systems praised, and state colleges advertised.

Every Methodist preacher and layman should begin a campaign to-day for our schools. Millsaps and Grenada colleges should be named, their merits proclaimed, their facilities advertised, their needs emphasized from every pulpit in the North Mississippi Conference. Brethren, to the work! To the work to-day! To the work for Christian education!

A GLANCE AT SOME CLAIMS OF EPISCOPALIANISM.

Rev. R. E. L. Craig, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and archdeacon of the diocese of Mississippi, held a "mission" recently in the town of Summit. He is an interesting speaker, and holds the attention of his hearers from the beginning to the close of his services. In his treatment of ministers of other denominations he was, in some respects, unusually liberal and courteous. He not only called upon the writer to pray in the Episcopal house of worship, but being called off to attend a funeral, had him occupy the pulpit in his place. At the same time, he is a zealous advocate of the peculiar claims of the Episcopal Church. He said many things that contradict the established views of other denominations, and some of it sounded unnecessarily harsh. He preached a sermon on Christian unity, in which he unchurched all denominations that are not governed by succession Bishops.

A question box was placed at the door of the church, and the people were invited to deposit therein any question they might wish the archdeacon to answer. The following questions were propounded and answered, seemingly to his entire satisfaction:

1. Does not the Protestant Episcopal Church teach that nothing is to be received as an article of faith that is not taught in the Bible?

The propriety of this question grew out of the fact that the preacher frequently stated that the Church was not founded upon the Bible. In making this statement his design seemed to be to open the way for believing some things that are taught by his church that are not supported by the Bible. His reply was: "Yes, as an article of faith." It could not be otherwise with article six in the Prayer-Book.

2. Would the ordination of a man to any order in the ministry be valid if the one ordained had never been baptized? If not, has the Protestant Episcopal Church a record of baptisms in all cases reaching back to the apostles?

His reply was that such an ordination would not be valid. He admitted that such a record of baptisms could not be produced, but contended that it was not necessary, that at no time could a man have entered into orders who had not been baptized on account of the watchfulness of church officials. He seemed to forget that present-day conditions have not always obtained. The irregularities and uncertainties of past ages have been such that monsters of wickedness entered the ministry, as every reader of church history knows. The absence of a record of baptisms must be forever an inseparable hindrance in the way of accepting the dogma of succession as held by the Episcopal Church.

3. Can you give a "Thus saith the Lord" for the belief that an unbroken line of ordinations from the apostles is essential to the validity or Scriptural authority of the church?

His answer was: "Yes." And what do you suppose it was? It was Matt. xxviii. 19-20: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." If the question had been something about baptismal regeneration, or the final perseverance of the saints, the answer would have been just as appropriate and just as conclusive. The passage quoted is invaluable for the purpose for which it was recorded in the New Testament; but, as an answer to the question propounded to Mr. Craig it has no more pertinency than it does to the hundreds of other theological questions. His reply was a signal failure. It was the best he could do, for there is no such "Thus saith the Lord" in the Bible.

4. If the doctrine of succession is a true and necessary doctrine of the church, is not the record of that succession just as essential in maintaining the authority of the church as any part of the Bible that sets forth the authority of the church? In other words, is not the record of ordinations elevated to the same rank as the Bible?

The reply to this was: "You must not put too much stress on records." Of course not, for thereby the foundation of untenable dogmas are shown to be sandy and unsafe. An affirmative answer to the above question would have been so antagonistic to the teachings of the Bible that it could not be given. And yet, if you accept the premises, the conclusion necessarily follows.

JOHN WESLEY PARKER was born Nov. 3, 1858, in Jackson county, Miss., and died at his home near Agricola, Miss., July 28, 1906. He was converted at the age of 15 years and joined the Methodist Church. He was married to Miss Annie E. Carter, who preceded him to the better world by four years, leaving him with four little girls to care for. He was a kind husband and father, and his children will miss his loving care. He was a member of the Methodist Church for 31 years, and was a faithful member to the end. He was sick only two weeks before his death. He had taken the disease that carried him off from his wife, who had died of it. He was buried in the cemetery at Agricola. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and was converted at Salem Church, Gulfport. When the time came for him to change worlds he left without a word of complaint. Now, children, papa and mamma are gone, but if you will give your hearts to God you will meet them by and by. May God bless the little ones.

Dr. V. MARCELLUS NEAL was born in Noxubee, Miss., Dec. 20, 1837, and died at his home in Hillsboro, Miss., Dec. 19, 1905. He was married at Auburn, Ala., and in 1857 began the study of medicine at Louisville, Ky. He graduated from Tulane University Medical Department in 1860. At the beginning of the war he enlisted as assistant surgeon in the 37th Alabama Volunteer Infantry, and at the close of the war returned to the profession in Louisville, Miss. He was very extensive in his practice. He was in high favor by all classes of the profession. He was a physician of the highest repute. Dr. Neal was twice married, his second wife being Miss Addie Clowe, of Hillsboro, Miss. He was a long time member of the Methodist church. He was born in a Methodist home, his father being a minister of the Alabama Conference. He loved the church and for many years was an official member, and was ever faithful in the discharge of his official duties. Holiness was his pastime for three years, during which time we were closely associated with each other. I learned to love him. He was one of the purest men it has ever been my pleasure to know. Peace be to his sacred dust. His life work is ended, but his works follow him.

His desire was to do good, and to make everyone happy. He endeared himself to all who knew him. Dr. Neal was a faithful friend, a good husband and a kind father. The Great National Temperance Beverage

Coca-Cola

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

CHEMICAL DEPARTMENT, SOUTH CAROLINA COLLEGE.
Columbia, S. C., Jan. 17, 1906.

Mr. H. D. Crosswell,
Care Columbia Coca-Cola Bottling Co.,
Columbia, S. C.

Dear Sir:

This is to certify that, pursuant to your request, I have bought in the open market from the Murray Drug Co. one original package of five gallons of Coca-Cola Syrup, bearing the label of "The Coca-Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga.," and have subjected the same to careful analysis.

The object of this investigation, being to establish the presence or absence of cocaine, and possibly of other injurious alkaloids. I operated on quantities of three to five times the amount contained in a bottle of the carbonated beverage. The extractions of the syrup were repeated until the alkaloids were entirely removed, and different immiscible solvents were used on different portions. The crystalline substance thus obtained was further separated by fractional extractions, after which it was concentrated and tested. Since this concentrated product, which would contain all of the cocaine, failed to respond to the tests for cocaine, it is clear that the alkaloid is absent, or if present at all, then in quantities too infinite to allow of detection.

The active constituent of Coca-Cola Syrup proved to be caffeine and in quantities seemingly less than in a cup of good coffee or tea.

There was no evidence of the presence of other alkaloids.

Yours Truly,

(Signed) W. B. BURNEY, Chemist.

LESSON FOR AUG. 26, 1906.

THE RICH YOUNG RULER.

(Matt. xix, 16-xx, 1-16.)

Golden Text: If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.—Matt. xvi, 24.

The Master was still on the eastern side of the River Jordan, and going by easy stages on his last journey to Jerusalem. The paragraph preceding our lesson tells in four verses the most touching and beautiful incident in the ministry of Jesus, and from our point of view must have been in an especially tender mood toward the young.

It appears that among the many who looked on this pleasing scene was a certain young man, who must have been deeply moved as he saw Jesus blessing little children and heard his gracious words concerning the kingdom of God. Soon after the Master turned away to resume his journey, this young man came running, and, kneeling, asked, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Now and then we read of incidents where the preaching and teaching of Jesus had aroused deep interest in the minds of the ruling class. This young man was impressed that there was something needed to complete his contentment, and which all of his wealth could not buy. He had to learn that God created the soul to be hungry until fed with living bread from heaven. The Master's reply was directed to him not as one who knew the Lord as the only perfect man. The thought is this: "Looking on me from your standpoint, there are some good motives even if they have kept the commandments from their youth up." When he told the Lord of how he had tried from his youth to be a good man, Jesus, beholding him, looked into the very depths of his soul, loved him and told him that there was one thing lacking in his make-up, that he must go and give to the poor, thus lending to the Lord, and when he should go to collect the loan he would find treasure waiting for him in heaven. When the young man heard this, his heart fell, he turned away sad and grieved, for he had great possessions.

The danger of riches in this our day and time has developed to an alarming extent. It is two-fold. First, there is a tendency—yes, a certainty—that, in acquiring wealth, every ennobling influence is "twice dead, plucked up by the roots." No time for God's service. So, after exercising the entire supply of energy in the getting of wealth, the love of the same naturally follows. The young ruler loved his riches better than the poor, who are God's children, and we are led to suppose that he never obeyed the command of the Master. Jesus then looked around and began to show that he keeps a man out of the kingdom of God, keep a man out of the kingdom of God. It was not so much the having of wealth as it was the trusting in it—but who can have money and not trust in the power of it. If every want is supplied, nothing is asked for. It is better that we be poor always than that we should never feel the flow and need of prayer. If we are diligently seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness, we will never need.

Peter must have been applying the Master's words to himself and to the other fishermen when he said, "Lo, we have left all and followed thee," and Matthew says he added the question, "What shall we have therefore?" They had left their ships and their fishing nets and followed the Lord as soon as they were called. Peter had left his family and home; James and John had left their mother, and the others may have severed similar ties to follow the Master. Matthew left his business, and that without any preparation. The Lord's reply suited them all, when he said: "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left these things for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive [illegible] now in this time and in the world to come eternal life." The [illegible] be last, and the last first. To the [illegible] of the vineyard [illegible] the first shall be last, and the last first. To the [illegible] children. It is much [illegible] than a man who has wealth. Jesus [illegible] rather after wealth. Jesus himself [illegible] up his cross. From what the Master says above we think it is [illegible] for us to have no heavier cross than [illegible] to suffer with that [illegible] on the world for us. If we [illegible] to possess the spirit of [illegible] we [illegible] this, however [illegible] between angels, all things work together for good for them that love him. BRAXTON CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I look back over the year's experience and see what good things the Lord hath done for us, I feel like singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Indeed, there is much to praise him for.

Braxton Circuit comprises four churches, three of which, Braxton, D'Lo, and Mendenhall, are on the G. & S. I. R. R. Bethany church is about three miles north of D'Lo. Although many people live throughout this country, yet the membership of these churches is rather small comparatively. Our Baptist brethren have a strong following in Simpson County. For a long while before the opening up of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad the Baptists were almost the only representatives of the Gospel.

When I came to this work the 1st of January, prospects for a good year seemed discouraging. At two of my Quarterly Confenences my report on "spiritual state of the church" was rather like the wail of the prophets, not, however, without some expressions of hope. That hope was in God, in his goodness to hear and answer fervent prayer, and in his power to awaken and save. Like Elijah's cloud, that sign of a blessing seemed small at first, but in the fulness of time the abundant shower came.

Our meeting at Mendenhall began the fourth Sunday in June, and continued through Friday. Rev. W. H. Lewis did some earnest, faithful, Holy Ghost preaching that did not fail to stir the heart and awaken many to a deeper spiritual life. It seemed a pity that we had to close just when so many were becoming deeply interested. Had there been more praying on the part of all church members, and less politics and picnics, we would have received a more abundant blessing.

About six weeks before our meeting at D'Lo, I had organized a prayer-meeting, in which I got some to begin to pray earnestly and work for the meeting. Our Baptist friends, too, cooperated with us in our prayers. Rev. B. W. Lewis came to us, and beginning with the second Sunday in July, preached in power the word of God. Every service was a revival service in which God's spirit was manifest in convicting and saving power. One result of that meeting did not please the pleasure-seekers of a Sunday afternoon. One good brother Thomas decided that the Sunday livery business was incompatible with the interest of his soul, and so he uncompromisingly keeps his stable closed on Sunday. At Braxton I had been telling my people of our great need of a revival, and several faithful brethren and sisters were praying earnestly for a genuine old-time revival. And they were expecting it, too. Why pray for great things and not expect them, especially since we know the thing prayed for is the great thing needed.

Brother E. W. Lipscomb came determined to put the "old-time methods" of salvation to the test. In our prayers and conversation we were of one mind, and our one object was to get men and women saved into the kingdom of God. Brother Lipscomb (may the Lord give us more like him) and I did not stop to consider whether or not we needed a "restatement of the faith," or what might be the outcome if such were done. Sin was held up as a great enemy to be hated and forsaken. The necessity of a "clean heart" before God was preached in power. Jesus Christ, as the Savior from sin, was held up before the awakened and penitent sinner. Righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost was stressed as being the religion needed.

The old-time method of inviting penitents to the altar was used. This phase was new to the Braxton people. The Holy Spirit came in power. Hearts were melted; many cried for mercy, as the prayers of God's people ascended. More than a score professed to have found the Savior and through him became reconciled to God. Baptists, as well as Methodists, were interested and blessed.

Braxton never saw such manifestations of Divine power. As a result the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting have taken on new life, and the people enjoy coming together to worship God.

Brother Marvin Bradley gave us the pure word of God at Bethany. There, too, God was with us and revived his faithful people of that place. Our Children's Day there was the best I have seen for years. Twenty-seven have been added to the church on profession of faith.

Brethren, pray for us. Satan yet has a stronghold in this country, and God is needed in so many homes. I thank God that so many are erecting family altars in their homes. There is no more beautiful or helpful worship than that of family worship. If we meet the conditions of a great sweeping revival now—prayer, faith, dependence on the Holy Spirit—God will send the blessing, and that right early.

OSMOND LEWIS.

5. Have not the claims of the church of England to an unbroken line of valid ordinations been investigated and repudiated by the highest authority in the Roman Catholic Church?

The reply was: "Yes, by the Pope, but he is just one man." His rejection of these claims was declared to be nothing more than their rejection by some Baptist preacher. Now, what are the facts? Pope Leo XIII appointed a committee of twelve learned men, who, under the presidency of one of the cardinals, investigated this matter from the foundation. The acts of this committee, with all documents bearing upon the question, were submitted to the cardinals, who re-examined the matter in the presence of the Pope. The conclusion reached was published in 1896 as follows: "Wherefore, strictly adhering in this matter to the decrees of the Pontiffs, our predecessors, and confirming them most fully, and as it were renewing them by our authority, of our own motion and certain knowledge, we pronounce and declare that ordinations carried out according to the Anglican rite have been and are absolutely null and utterly void." Roman Catholics and Anglicans were alike desirous of a favorable decision. But the facts could not be overcome, and hence the decision was adverse to their cherished desires. Be it known that this decision was not the opinion of just one man, but of twelve learned men first, then of all the cardinals, and then of the Pope. It hushed the mouths of high-church Anglicans, who were clamoring for recognition by the Pope, and quieted the unrest inside of the Roman Catholic Church. In spite of all this, high-church Episcopalians in this country demand that all other Christian people shall admit the validity of their pretensions and unite with them on the grounds that the orders of the denominations are null and void. Arrogancy, effrontery and bash!

6. Is it not true that the terms elder, or presbyter, and Bishop are used interchangably in the New Testament? In other words, did not the distinction between elders, or presbyters, and bishops grow up in the church after the days of the apostles?

To the first part of the question he answered: "Yes." To the last part he made no reply. His answer to the first part of this question could not be other than it was, for the proof of the identity of these two terms is overwhelming. See Acts xx, 17, 28; Titus i: 5, 7. But to break the force of this admission, Mr. Craig contended that Bishops are successors to the apostles.

The truth is, the apostles had no successors. The word apostle was applied to a few people in a subordinate, general sense, because the word was in common use. But twelve men were pre-eminently apostles. In Luke vi, 13, it is said that the Lord set apart twelve men "whom he named apostles." And in Rev. xxi, 14, we read; "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." So that as late as the production of that book it was understood that the number of apostles was limited to twelve. It will be said in reply to this that Matthias was appointed to fill the place of Judas, and that Paul was undoubtedly an apostle, and, therefore, the number of genuine apostles was at least thirteen. It cannot be denied that Paul was an apostle, but who was Matthias? By whom was he appointed to the apostleship? Not by the Lord, but by the disciples. He is never heard of any more, and the conclusion is accepted by many that the whole transaction of electing him to the apostleship was unauthorized and illegal. Paul was called of the Lord, and the number twelve was kept intact. By writers on this question, the following prerogatives, or characteristics, are enumerated as belonging exclusively to the apostles: 1. Immediate vocation. 2. Immediate revelation. 3. Infallibility as teachers. 4. A commission of universal authority. 5. The power of communicating miraculous powers to others. If this is correct, and the Scripture proof seems to be satisfactory, Matthias was not a real apostle, and the twelve had no successors.

7. Would it be consistent with the rules and regulations of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the ministers of said church to receive the holy communion under ordinary circumstances from the hands of ministers of other denominations, such as Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, etc? His reply was that they could not do this, because not being in the line of succession, other ministers have no right to administer this sacred ordinance.

The lines are drawn. The Protestant Episcopal Church in Mississippi has engaged in a system of propagandism that will have to be met. Our preachers had as well arm themselves and prepare for the assault of high-churchism. They are going to be made. We must contend for the "faith which was once delivered unto the saints," and "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

The Sweet-Toned Epworth Piano

Dr. WILLIAM WADE HINSHAW,
President Chicago Conservatory of Music.

"[illegible] the last ten years I have used in my [illegible] piano in my studio, and a portion of the time [illegible] my public work, where it was [illegible] severest practical test. Both these pianos stood the test in a surprising way. The Epworth is a grand and sympathetic, magnificent piano to sing with. I can vouch for the quality, sweetness of tone, and general excellence of these pianos, and I gladly give them my unqualified recommendation."

whose music is sung around the globe.

"The Epworth piano I bought of you for my home is a splendid instrument. There is a fullness, depth and [illegible] tone which is particularly pleasing. I can also recommend the Epworth to my friends."

Prof. CHARLES H. GABRIEL,
well known composer of Sunday School music.

"For years I have used the Epworth in my studio, and [illegible] they are excellent instruments. I feel that I can [illegible] these pianos because I know them to be good, and believe them to be the best obtainable [illegible]"

Prof. GEORGE D. ELDERKIN,
Publisher Sunday School song books.

"The Epworth is a splendid piano and I can say this without reserve, for I have used one in my studio for over three years. I can also recommend the Williams firm."

And no description can make clear to you the sweetness of the Epworth tone.

But place the Epworth in your home and the distinguished beauty of the design and the rich, mellow sweetness of the tone will not only delight you but will explain the popularity of the Epworth among musicians and music lovers.

It will pay you to read carefully every word of this advertisement, and then to send for our free Epworth piano book which tells how to get a satisfactory piano at a satisfactory price.

Our business was established in 1856 by our president, Mr. J. W. Williams, and we want to celebrate this, our fiftieth or Jubilee year by making and selling more Epworth pianos and organs than in any one previous year.

We own and operate two well equipped factories here in Chicago, one for making the artistic Epworth pianos, and the other for making the sweet-voiced Epworth organs.

We invite you to go through our factories so you can see the fine quality of the material we use and how our pianos and organs are made.

We think you understand that we do not sell our musical instruments through piano dealers or agents, but that we sell them all to homes and churches direct from our factory and at the factory price.

This direct-from-factory plan enables you to get a sweet-toned Epworth piano at a saving of about $100.00 and an Epworth organ at a saving of from $10.00 to $50.00.

Now, it is easy for us to make fine pianos, and it is easy to sell them, too, when we know who are wanting to buy, and to whom we ought to send our catalog.

It is still easier for us to sell an Epworth piano after we get a nice one in some home where we can refer to it as a sample of our work.

The Epworth is so beautiful in design and so sweet in tone that it sells itself—all it needs is an introduction to the prospective buyer.

There are people in every community who are thinking of buying pianos, but who, for both security and economy, prefer not to deal with middlemen, agents, dealers or supply-houses.

These people would be glad to see an Epworth in the home of some neighbor and to learn from him about the satisfaction and the saving in dealing direct with us, the makers.

Now, here is where you can help us and we can help you.

We can help you by giving you a special reduction on a fine Sample Epworth Piano for your home and to which we can refer prospective buyers.

You can help us by showing your beautiful Epworth piano to your friends and neighbors, and by sending us the names of those who would like to receive our catalogs.

Now, if you would like to know what we are willing to do to get a good fine Epworth piano as a sample of our work, fill out the coupon at bottom of this page and send it to us at once.

We will then send our beautiful piano book and our Special Sample Piano Offer.

If you like our generous offer then you may select one of our fine pianos and have it sent on trial.

When the piano arrives you can give it a thorough trial to see if we have made a happy selection and have sent you the very piano you yourself would have chosen. And if you wish, you may have your friends "take a hand" in helping you to decide the question.

Then, if after a good trial you find the beautiful sample piano to be a nicer, sweeter toned piano than you can possibly get anywhere else for one half more, you may buy the piano on your own terms.

You may pay monthly, quarterly, annually, part cash or all cash or on any other reasonable terms. We like to accommodate our customers, and especially those who help us introduce our pianos. After you become the owner of an Epworth piano, we will pay you generously for sending names of piano buyers.

Now, if you would like a free copy of our beautiful piano book, with factory prices and our Special Sample Piano Offer, fill out the coupon and send it to us at once. Do not write a letter, but send the coupon by next mail or as soon as you can.

A vast amount of ill-advised talk is being indulged in in regard to the will of the late Russell Sage, who was not the richest man in the United States, but who possessed the largest amount of cash of any of the rich men of the country. The complaint against Mr. Sage is that of all his millions, he never left anything to charity. All accounts agree that Mr. Sage was strictly honest; that his transactions were all perfectly legitimate—his coffers containing no tainted money. It is given out also that Mr. Sage's charities during his life were many and quietly bestowed, though in no instance on a scale commensurate with his wealth. That he left nothing to charity in his will was perhaps a wise thing, inasmuch as his wife has always been charitably inclined and will probably distribute the money to a better advantage than he could have done, besides honoring her with so great a mission. These are conjectures, but supposed to be well founded. If she carries out the ideas suggested she will not only honor herself, but add to the fame of her husband by showing his wisdom and caution. Should it turn out that Mrs. Sage is as close and saving as was her husband she will add nothing to the good name of either. It is too soon yet for anybody to pass judgment.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, who for several months has been traveling in the Old World, visiting nearly every country in Europe, and going through other parts of the world, will reach New York on his return home the last of August. The Democrats of New York have planned a reception in his honor at Madison Square Garden that will eclipse in magnitude anything of the kind ever seen in this country. Those in charge have corresponded fully with Bryan and the reception in its details will be in accordance with Mr. Bryan's wishes. He has discouraged everything like extravagance and advised that an exact account be taken of all receipts and expenditures, and that the name of every contributor of five dollars or more be duly recorded. Leading politicians in every State have been invited and urged to bring with them delegations of Democrats. The reception is intended as a formal presentation of Mr. Bryan as a candidate for the presidential nomination. Some State Legislatures and State Democratic conventions have prepared the way by indorsing Mr. Bryan and setting him forward as their candidate. In this movement many Gold-Democrats, who have heretofore opposed Mr. Bryan, have joined, and it seems certain at this time that he will be before the country in his third campaign to secure the presidency. But the time is long before the next National Convention and there is no telling what will transpire between now and then.

As we have heretofore called attention to the fact that the labor organizations have gone into politics with a view to controlling the elections in their favor wherever possible, it may not be amiss to print a passage from a Republican paper intended to call attention of the organizations to the risk they run in going against a man simply because he opposes them in one or two particulars. The Washington Star says: "Labor, it may be mentioned, has a good deal more to consider at this time than the eight-hour law and the anti-injunction bill. No candidates for Congress anywhere, with the smallest chance of success, are running on platforms exclusively for or against those propositions. General policies are at stake, and labor is interested in all of them. It is deeply interested in the tariff, and quite as much so in good money. It may very well ask itself, and ponder well the question, if it would pay in the long run to support a man who in addition to favoring the anti-injunction bill favors also free trade and free silver at sixteen to one. Such a man, if elected to Congress, will have to vote on a number of propositions, and as labor is inquisitive about it should interrogate candidates all along the line. For what would it profit labor if it secured its anti-injunction bill and the completest enforcement of the eight-hour law, if the country other issues antagonistic to its financial and commercial well-being? Labor very properly asks for a fair and sympathetic consideration of its interests at the hands of the electorate, but it is itself bound to give as fair and sympathetic consideration to the interests of others, and most especially as those interests are also its interests." In some sections of the country, especially in the South, it might be to the interests of the organizations to vote for a man for Congress, notwithstanding he opposes them in the two particulars named above. In their efforts it is possible for them to elect a demagogue instead of a pure, broad-minded statesman.

Northwestern farmers are having a hard time in getting hands to harvest their grain, as the following statements will show: "Not only are harvest hands as scarce as they were a year ago, but they are even harder to get; have advanced ideas as to wages and make the farmers agree to concessions that a few years ago would have created untold laughter. Good farm hands are getting as high as $1.50 a day within a few miles of Battle Creek, with board and lodgings thrown in, and in many cases the use of a horse and carriage. One farm hand demanded that his employer give him the use of his piano two hours every evening, and the demand was granted, the farmer's family vacating the parlor while the harvest guest practices. He is taking piano lessons in town, driving in with the farmer's horse. The trouble does not end with the inability to secure men to work for hire. Farmers' boys are still leaving the 50-a-week jobs on the farm, with good food and lodging, to come to town and work for less, live in cheap lodging-houses and eat poor food. The only available men we get at present," said a farmer, "are men from town, used to clerking or running street cars or such labor. A few days on the farm tires them all out and keeps us hiring new men. I suppose it will shock city folks to hear it, but the best work on many farms in Calhoun County this summer is now being done by women folks. The boys are anxious to go to town and 'throw on dog.' The girls are the most willing to help their farmer fathers in the fields. It doesn't sound nice, does it? But what are you going to do when men want $2 farm work out at $1.50 a day and free board?" We join the Daily Picayune in saying "the girls are grand."

General News

A rebellion has occurred in Cuba, but it is not regarded as serious. Another uprising is also reported in San Domingo.

The meeting between King Edward and Emperor William has resulted in more cordial relations between Great Britain and Germany.

The discovery has been made by James R. Dunn, Inspector in charge at St. Louis, of a wholesale smuggling of immigrants from Mexico into the United States.

An earthquake visited Chili last Thursday night and caused great destruction of life and property especially in the city of Valparaiso, where the loss of life is estimated at 5,000. Fire followed the cataclysm and completed the work of destruction. Santiago, the capital of Chili, was greatly damaged and a number of lives were lost, and several other towns near Valparaiso were destroyed.

Advices from the Islands of Hawaii, Mauri and Hilo report a tidal wave, the general height of which was 5 feet. In the inclosed Bay of Maalea, on the Island of Mauri, its height was estimated to be 12 feet, where it carried away a wharf and its superstructure. The tidal wave is attributed to the earthquake at Valparaiso. Thirty years ago an earthquake in South America produced similar effects there.

The St. Louis Republic says that startling figures are those which the Census Bureau publishes regarding the increase in the number of insane persons in the United States. The report covers only such cases as were under treatment in hospitals at the time of its compilation. Patients in hospitals in 1903 were in the ratio of 180.2 for each 100,000 population, against 148.2 in 1890. Of the patients in hospitals 41.0 per cent had been employed as laborers or servants, while 16 per cent had been engaged in agriculture, transportation and other pursuits, and a like percentage in industrial and mechanical capacities. This means that mental workers are but a portion of the remaining 33.4 per cent. Probably it is true of the brain as of other organs of the body and of mechanical appliances—disuse wears worse than use.

HOW CAN WE PROMOTE THE SPIRITUAL GROWTH OF OUR PEOPLE?

There can be no doubt in the mind of any practical observer of existing conditions in the Church that our people, as a rule, need to be led into a deeper religious experience, and into a higher state of zeal in their Christian life. And this need is felt by the great masses of church members who have any spiritual life in them at all. In the language of another, "there are tens of thousands of souls longing to know how to lead a better life. They find in God's Word promises of perfect peace, of a faith that overcomes the world, of a joy that is unspeakable, of a life of ever-abiding communion with Christ, hidden in the hollow of God's hand, and in the secret of his pavilion. But, alas, thousands say, they know not how to obtain it!"

These promises of God were not given to excite hopes, only to be disappointed, but "That by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

These promises express the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning the church, and indicate the possibilities of every truly regenerated soul. Christ gave himself for the church "That he might sanctify and cleanse it, * * * that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Is this a mere ideal state, impossible of attainment in this life? So Satan would have us believe, and many "turn back, and tempt God, and limit the Holy One of Israel." But Paul did not so learn Christ. Hence, his prayer for the church, "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe." And, "That he would grant unto you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all fullness of God." And then, as if to forever put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, our apostle adds: "Now, unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end."

Now, the question is pertinent: "Who are to point these feeble and fainting thousands to the true source of their spiritual refreshment and strength but those who are specially called to the work of the ministry?" And how can these ministers of God successfully lead hungry and thirsty souls into the green pastures and beside the still waters of salvation, unless they themselves have drunk at these waters and feasted in these pastures? No one can carry a soul by his teachings and on the wings of his prayers and faith further into the kingdom of grace than he himself has gone. The prophet Hosea settles this question: "And there shall be like people like priest."

It has been well said that the first duty of every minister is to beg of God, very humbly, and with great earnestness and strong faith, that all he wants to be done in his people may be truly and faithfully done in himself. We cannot give to others a more scriptural type of piety than we ourselves experience and practice. Hence, our Lord said to his disciples just before his ascension, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." And after "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," they constantly offered the people, in the name of Christ, not only the remission of their sins, but also the gift of the Spirit. Many thousands were brought into the church by their ministry, and the normal condition of Christian life among them was to "be filled with the Spirit."

Apollos was "an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures." He was "instructed in the way of the Lord;" he was "fervent in the Spirit," and he was diligent in his teachings of "the things of the Lord," as far as he knew. But when Aquila and Priscilla took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly, it goes without the saying, that his ministry was far more effective, and its results far more complete and satisfactory than it had been before.

The aim of every minister of the Lord Jesus is not only that sinners may be converted and brought into the church, but also "that the church shall be brought to the highest possible completeness in Christ, that all members of the mystical body shall become vigorous and healthy, and that the entire church shall be penetrated, and filled with the divine life to the utmost fullness." But how can such blessed results be realized unless we, their shepherds and leaders, shall go before them, and not only teach, but show them the way. A great revival of Scriptural holiness among our preachers would lead to a corresponding revival among our people. If we ministers could all be of one accord at this point, yielding ourselves utterly unto the Lord, and seeking to be filled with all the fullness of God, the people would "believe and enter in."

FROM THE YAZOO DELTA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Last December I was transferred from the Louisiana Conference to the Mississippi by Bishop Morrison. Whirling in the "wheel within a wheel" (see J. H. Nichols' pamphlet on "The Wheel") began to revolve, propelled by "the powers that be," the lighter material yielding to the forces of centrifugal power, I soon discovered that I was out of the Periphery. This is the most northern place in the Mississippi Conference. The North Mississippi brethren say this is their territory. Silver City is further north than Kosciusko or Durant. It was my privilege to attend the Durant District Conference, which met in Belzoni, just five miles above here.

When I learned that I was to serve Silver City this year, our Louisiana Conference being postponed a month, while still at Crystal Cane, I tried to locate my work. I could not find it on the maps. The post office authorities could not give me any information. None of the railroad officials had ever heard of such a place. I could find such a work mentioned in any of the back numbers of the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference. So I concluded the brethren felt sorry for me and were kind and considerate enough to "form" a new work for me. I could not learn whether I should change cars at Vicksburg or Jackson, even after I knew it was somewhere in the Yazoo Delta. So we came by faith and not by sight. Without any information or assurances as to support and at a cost of near one hundred dollars, which I had to borrow, and after traveling two nights and one day with three babies and a sick wife, we arrived here just at daybreak on the morning of January 10. It had been raining and we were met by what seemed to us a lake of water and mud. I had written to my stewards here before we started, so we might hear from them, to know what arrangements could be made for a house, but did not hear. I got here and informed the official board of the church that there was a letter for them in the post office from the pastor. The postmaster got the letter and put it in the "S" box, and as it happened no one thought to ask, "Is there a letter here for the stewards?" We went to the hotel for breakfast, and the host was very kind to us. He would not let us pay for our breakfast and dinner. In the afternoon the good people were informed that we were here, and at once arranged for our entertainment until the new parsonage was ready for occupancy. We were cared for a week at the home of that prince of good-natured fellows, R. E. Donoho. He and Sister Donoho made us feel like we were home again. Sisters Reed, Partee, Campbell, Lumkey and others soon convinced us that we were among friends.

"Doctor, you know that distance lends enchantment to the view." We dreaded to come into the Delta. I had been a sufferer from catarrh for several years, and the physicians said, "you had better keep out of that country." When we got here and our people learned that we were afraid to come on account of the health of the country, they said, "the idea of anyone who has lived in Louisiana dreading to come anywhere in Mississippi!" So I say they had the idea of Louisiana that we had of the Delta.

Well, we are here and have so far had a good year. The good ladies furnished the parsonage from parlor to kitchen, and also furnished good things to cook. We have not had anything like a "storm," but a gentle breeze has been blowing all the year. A good cow is furnished us. The preacher gets goods at cost, and favors in various other ways. The town is furnished with the best artesian water in the world. This well was brought in last fall. The doctor told me this morning that this year has been a record-breaker for good health. The parsonage is supplied with this water. Preparations are being made to put in an exchange to have a good telephone service. The pastor will have this service free.

We have recently seated our church with factory made pews, and beautified the church inside with a new coat of paint. We are now planning to build a church at another point. The stewards were kind enough to put the assessment for ministerial support at nine hundred dollars ($900). This amount is almost double the amount paid last year. We have held two very successful revivals. Bro. W. J. Ferguson did the preaching and did it well. Bro. Ferguson is not only a pleasing speaker, but very spiritual and sound in theology. Many were saved, and twenty-eight added to the church. We have taken in our church about forty during the year, which is considered a good showing for this river country. Last Sunday we organized an Epworth League with twenty members. I intend to make this profitable to the new converts. Early in the year we organized an excellent Woman's Home Mission Society.

This place has long been an old boat landing, and has been known as Home Park. When the new road was constructed from Yazoo City to Clarksdale they changed the name of the town. A new road is now being constructed from here to Vicksburg, a distance of about sixty miles. This will give us a direct route to New Orleans. We are nineteen miles from Yazoo City.

This country is fast developing. We are anxious to see the progress of the church commensurate with that of material things. New towns are building up on the line of this new road, and the people are calling for service. We must occupy the field.

This is the finest farming land in Mississippi. We have natural resources. People are moving in. What a great work we have to do! and what an opportunity we have! One man (a Presbyterian) offers us a lot and a hundred dollars if we will go in and build a Methodist church. Let us pray for the peace and prosperity of Zion!

Yours in the work.

REPLY TO BROTHER MOTT.

Dear Dr. Hoswell: With reference to the articles of Brother Mott that appeared in the ADVOCATE of July 26th and August 2d, concerning a resolution passed by the Epworth League Conference at McComb City, also the Meridian District Conference, to have a joint meeting of the Sunday School Institute, the Mid-year Missionary meeting and the Epworth League Conference, as the author of that resolution, I would like to explain the purpose of it and the benefits that would arise from the adoption of it. In the first place, let me say that as far as I know no one wishes the Sunday School Institutes discontinued; that they are very beneficial we all admit, especially to those who are in the habit of attending them, and the plan under discussion does not propose to do away with them at all; but as we have it now there are three Conference meetings that the pastors and laymen feel they ought to attend, but the loss of time and the expense prevent many from attending all these meetings. Many of the pastors and laymen (Bro. Mott included) have said to me that they just could not afford to attend the Conference they desired to, so I have seen that the purpose of all these meetings is defeated, since the people attend, and of course we reach them only in proportion to their attendance.

When this plan of having a joint meeting was suggested many of them were very much in favor of it.

We could have a Sunday evening, before the first Sunday in the second quarter, and commence through Monday being the pre-Conference day. At this time we have the best talent in these different departments that our church can furnish us; for instance, in the Sunday school department have the Sunday School Editor, Dr. Hamill and wife; for the League have Bishop Candler, Dr. DuBose and some of the department workers, and in the Missionary have Bishop Ward, Shackford and the Missionary Secretary. These are but suggestions, of course, this would be in the hands of a committee representing each of the departments participating; thus those attending would have the opportunity to hear the three departments represented by those who are specialists in that particular branch of the work of our church, and at the same time the expense would be no greater, and very little more time given. Even if some could not stay throughout the meeting they could leave before the meeting was over.

If from seventy to three hundred laymen would attend an institute to hear Dr. Hamill and wife, why would not as many attend an institute where they would not only have the pleasure of hearing them, but other leaders of our church as well? Bro. Mott need not worry about the attendance, unless it be too large. I cannot agree with Bro. Mott that the laymen are most in need of the Institute work, but rather think the pastors not only need it (for they are the leaders in their charges), but really appreciate it, and would very much favor the plan whereby they can hear all these leaders, and still not lose much time from their charges.

Our church needs workers (clerical and lay) who believe that all the machinery of our church is necessary to its successful operation, and are eager to prepare themselves mentally and spiritually for intelligent and loyal service in all its departments; and unto this end I say let's have our Sunday School Institute, Mid-year Missionary meeting and the Epworth League Conference together with the best talent our church can afford, to show us how to do successful work for the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ. Very sincerely yours in the cause.

W. D. HAWKINS.

DALEVILLE DEDICATION.

The first Methodist Church ever erected in this parish by its white citizens was dedicated Sunday, August 5, by Rev. Bishop Seth Ward.

The ceremonies were quite impressive and the hymns, songs and duets in praise of the event were gracefully rendered.

There was a large attendance and one of the most attentive audiences. The building could not be dedicated as a church until it was fully paid for. This has been accomplished. The membership here is quite small and had it not been for the liberal contributions from our friends, its Too much can not be said in praise of the pastor, Rev. R. C. Grace. He was like Hiram Abiff, a builder. It was a source of gratification to his numerous friends that the Conference returned him this year to this field, for he had the pleasure of seeing the efforts begun in 1905 consummated. His loyalty was crowned with success, and when in spirit the bishop placed the final arch and capstone on his noble efforts he was honored with another monument to his faithful work for the Master.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE—PAST, PRESENT, FUTURE.

Mr. Editor: May I use your columns for a few words about Whitworth College—that institution of learning which should be, and we believe is, so dear to the heart of every Methodist in the Mississippi Conference. Her past record is too well known to need mention even, for her daughters are scattered throughout this and other states, and everywhere present an admirable type of womanhood. In every gathering of representative Mississippi women, those who received their education at Whitworth are prominent. Were the college closed, the work already done would stand as a perpetual testimony to her usefulness.

But it is of the present that I wish to speak, for her work is not done. She abides among us as a fountain from which flows a broad stream of blessing for our daughters. Those of us who know both her past and present realize that her former glory is not diminished and believe that to-day is her best day thus far. She may not seem so conspicuous as in other days, for other institutions, with more liberal financial support, have arisen, but she has, notwithstanding many drawbacks, pressed steadily forward, and at present is in a most prosperous condition.

Primarily, a college is for mental training, and no matter what other advantages it may offer its students, must be counted a failure as a college, unless it furnishes a capable corps of instructors and a high curriculum. In this regard Whitworth can command the thorough respect of her patrons. Each department is under the charge of a competent specialist, and no pains are spared to enlist the best efforts of the students. The course of study as laid down in the catalogue fulfills the requirements of the Board of Education, and is most rigidly adhered to. The departments of Music, Expression, and Art are under the direction of Miss Elizabeth McVoy, daughter of the late Dr. A. D. McVoy, of the Louisiana Conference; Miss Lulah Ragsdale, of Brookhaven, and Miss Allene Hamilton, of Kentucky, respectively, each of whom is an artist, and the advantages offered in each of these departments are equal to those of any college in the State.

But the perfect woman which our Christian colleges seek to develop in her more than intellect and in her evolution must be other forces than class-room exercises and study hours, and to this fact the authorities at Whitworth are ever mindful. The general atmosphere of the college is wholesome, homelike and positively Christian. The campus is large and beautiful and affords abundant scope for out-door sports, such as basket games and athletic sports. The dormitories are comfortably furnished and every effort is made to minister to the happiness of the students in their dormitory life. The table is furnished with an abundance of wholesome food in such variety as the neighboring markets afford. No happier set of girls can be found anywhere than at Whitworth, and no mother has ever visited her daughter and seen the general conduct of the school who did not return to her home satisfied with her child's surroundings.

We believe that Whitworth can justly claim to be a Christian college. The daily religious exercises in the chapel and the usual Sunday-school and church services are made attractive and helpful. In addition to these, every encouragement is given the students to engage in such forms of Christian work as are offered by the Epworth League and Young Woman's Christian Association. A daily prayer service is held in the evening by the students in the room set apart for their own meetings. On Sunday night gospel service is held by them in the chapel, and this is often led by one of their own number. During each session a protracted meeting is conducted by some minister, and these meetings have been the means of bringing many girls to Christ and of deepening the spiritual life of the college. To our sorrow, some girls go away who are not Christians, but a prayerful effort is made to help every girl to become a Christian, and abundant opportunity is furnished for the cultivation of her spiritual nature.

Now, a word as to the future. There is every reason to believe that the prospects are very bright. Additional railroad facilities, and the increasing prosperity of our section, will work for the good of our college. The next session will open Sept. 26. Dr. I. W. Cooper, who has fully demonstrated himself to be a wise and able president, is busy during these vacation months improving the buildings, beautifying the grounds, and doing whatever else he can to secure to the students of next session the highest degree of comfort. All things considered, it does not seem presumptuous to recommend ourselves in every instance to the thoughtful consideration of those who desire superior educational advantages for their daughters. Moreover, as the patient of the Mississippi Conference, this institution expects a liberal support from all the Methodists within its bounds.

Thanking you for space in your columns, and with best wishes for the success of your sister,

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

[FROM THE SECRETARY.]

There are 2,770 Epworth Leagues in the M. E. Church, South. While there remains some work, being a part of our spiritual family without a league, the work of Church Extension is not finished.

The number of church buildings in the entire Church is 15,735. The Board of Church Extension has aided, by donation or loan, 3,370 of this number, or a little more than forty per cent of all our church buildings.

Mr. W. E. Barclay, who has been associated with the Board of Church Extension for [illegible] years, has resigned his position, to accept the General Agency for our Church of the National Mutual Church Insurance Company. His headquarters will remain in Louisville. Mr. Barclay has been retained by the Board of Church Extension as legal adviser. Rev. Arthur Mather, D. D., St. Louis Conference, and for the past four years pastor of Immanuel Church, St. Louis, has accepted a position with the Board and will begin work in September.

Church Extension is not a side issue. Foreign Missions, Home Missions and Church Extension stand side by side as parts of the great work of evangelization. One does not interfere with another, and neither can do without the other. The erection of a church building provides a place for preaching and teaching, and makes permanent the work of the [illegible]. Every new [illegible] strengthens the [illegible] of the Church. [illegible] Extension has been [illegible] and money for the extension of [illegible] lines.

LINTON CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I will send you a report of this work. This is my second year, and I am glad to say that we are making profitable progress. We have just closed a gracious and [illegible] meeting at Linton, where [illegible] and backsliders were reclaimed, and the whole church revived and quickened. We added five to our list, and many are to follow. Our membership is small there, but good. We held our own preaching, but had Rev. John Evans, from Lebanon, to sing for us. I suppose you remember him at the Lebanon Camp Meetings, in Marshall County, near Holly Springs. He is a blessing to any congregation. We saw the people leave the church rejoicing, and [illegible] their rejoicing in their homes. Bro. Evans is now training a class at Bennett Chapel, here at the edge of Yazoo City, and when he is through with [illegible] we will have a very fine choir at the Chapel. The class is composed mostly of cotton mill hands. They are bright, intelligent, and are anxious to take advantage of every opportunity for improvement. Of course, we can't say this of all mill hands, but this cannot be said of any set of people as a whole.

We are preparing to have some work done about the Chapel in supplying it with lights, chart-black boards, etc., to make it more instructive and entertaining. I am sure that it takes a great deal of patience to deal with this class of hands, but they deserve it, for they are a hard working class, and I am convinced, after working with and among them for a year and a half, that they deserve more attention and sympathy than they generally get. I hope all the preachers and people that have to work with and among [illegible] will [illegible] a special [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] it possible [illegible] them, we [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

UNANSWERED PRAYERS.

It is possible for men to work too much and to study too much, but it is hardly possible for one to pray too much. We do not pray as much as we ought. One reason why we do not pray more is because we are too busy. There are so many books and papers to read, so many people to see, so many places to go, so many lessons to learn, and so many calls to respond to, that we hardly have time to think clearly. We are never through with our work. We have to leave many things undone. Perhaps some of the things left undone are more important than many of those which we do. One of the things left undone is prayer, and it is far more important than many of the things that take so much of our time. It would be better if we should leave some of them undone and give the time to prayer.

Our Lord was a busy man, but he found time for prayer, for much prayer. He rose a great while before day, and went out into a mountain to pray. He spent whole nights in prayer. Sleep is sweet and necessary, but He found more pleasure and profit in communion with His heavenly Father than in sleep. His example and His teachings should impress the minds of men everywhere with the importance of prayer.

Another reason why men do not pray more is their prayers have not been successful. They have cried unto the Lord and their cry has not been rewarded with the answer they expected. They have heard of others whose prayers have been answered, but their own prayers have not been answered. Besides, multitudes of good men and women have prayed earnestly for specific objects, and have been disappointed. The disappointments have caused some to lose faith in prayer and cease to pray. Why are not all prayers answered?

It is impossible to explain everything, because we do not know everything. Our ignorance should not shake our faith in those things which commend themselves to our reason. We have good reason to believe that the prayers of good men are answered. The Bible teaches us this. Prayer has a history which affords overwhelming proof that the prayers of the righteous avail much. We know many persons whose prayers have brought help. Some of our own prayers have been answered. These facts establish the proposition that prayer is answered. If some of our prayers have not been answered, if the fervent prayers of a multitude of good men and women have not been answered in a particular case, this is not sufficient reason for us to give up our faith in prayer as a force for good in the world.

We all believe that work is a mighty agency for good. Work brings things to pass. But work does not always avail. Many a man has given much labor for naught. Days and weeks and months of labor have been wasted. Thousands of workmen have labored in vain. Is this any reason why we should lose faith in work? If the farmer plows the ground and plants the seed and the mildew blasts the harvest, what does he say? He does not lose faith in toil. He plants and plows again another year, and if the harvest should fail for two years in succession, he will plow and plant again in tears, still hoping to reap in joy.

Some so-called prayers are not real prayers at all. They are not offered in faith. They are not accompanied by works. They are offered by men whose hands are not clean and whose hearts are not pure.

They are empty words. How can it be expected that they should be answered?

St. James tells us one reason why prayer is not answered. "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." Many prayers are mere selfish petitions for worldly good which is sought for carnal purposes. The desires from which the prayer springs are carnal desires. This is true of many prayers which men offer for healing when they are sick and for worldly prosperity. The Lord looketh upon the heart. Jesus taught His disciples how to pray. According to the prayers He taught them men must first take into consideration the name of God, and the will of God, and the kingdom of God. Until they have done this they are in no condition to offer prayer for temporal good for themselves. "Hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This is first. Then we may say, "Give us this day our daily bread." This is the way to pray for temporal good. No luxuries, only necessities are to be asked. We must repress our carnal desires and moderate our eagerness for worldly good. We must take a wide view of the glory of God and His holy will. Then shall we pray aright.

But why should hundreds of men and women pray for the overthrow of the rum traffic and pray in vain? Why should hundreds of thousands of good people pray for the lives of President Garfield and President McKinley, when they were hanging in the balance, and pray in vain? How do you explain this? We do not explain it at all. But how do you understand it? We do not understand it. What, then, have you to say about it? We have this to say: Our ignorance should not hinder our faith in God. He knows why He does not give men the desires of their hearts, but we know not. Parents know why they deny their children the requests which they sometimes make, but the children know not. Their parents cannot make it plain to them in many cases, and do not try. But the children will understand when they shall have grown up. We are children. Our vision is limited. We do not know much, but we shall know hereafter. This we do know: His will is better than ours. His wisdom is infinitely superior to ours. His goodness is not impeached when He denies our petitions.

"Good when He gives, supremely good,
Nor less when He denies;
E'en crosses from His sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise."—Selected.

WHEN A MAN IS ABOUT TO DIE.

It is now the fashion not to tell a man when he is about to die. That is a question that belongs to the physician, and it may be that at times he is right about it. But I am sure there are times when that method is wrong.

A few months ago, in an eastern city, a good man was dying. The physician spoke of a hypodermic to relieve the pain of the last hours and to let the patient depart peacefully without knowing his condition. The sick man's brother favored this plan; his business partner and fellow-members of the church said, "No; he is a brave man; tell him the truth." The wife, in tears, could not decide. They sent for the minister and submitted the case to him. He said: "Tell him the truth."

They told him, and he said: "Gentlemen, I am not afraid to die, and have not been afraid of death for many years; but I do not think that it would have been quite fair not to let me know. I thank you for telling me. About how long will it be?" They told him an hour, or possibly two hours. The first half-hour he spent alone with his wife. After that he called in the friends who were there, and a few others whom he asked to have called by the telephone. They sang a hymn; the minister offered prayer; he said his dying words which are a rich heritage to his widow. A layman, who was there, told me that the scene at the deathbed was to him an evidence such as he had never known before of the power of the gospel to make men brave and true. He could not measure the loss that his own spiritual life would have suffered without it.

I am more and more convinced that, however important it may be at times to conceal from a patient some details of his condition, in the long run there is nothing so good for any man, sick or well, as the truth.—The Advance.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

NEXT SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 26, 1906.

IMPROVEMENTS.

During the summer months five hundred dollars' worth of concrete walks have been placed on the campus. Margaret Hall and the Institute have been painted. New fixtures placed in the recitation rooms, and other improvements made. Whitworth's friend, Mr. B. E. Brisier, presents the College with a dozen or more lawn swings. A new bell, weighing, with mountings, about 1200 pounds, will be installed by Sept. 26. The President has already secured thirty-six students, who help pay their expenses with work: twenty for dining hall, ten for institute, two for library and express, three for the laundry, and one as bell-ringer. Forty scholarships are offered young ladies of limited means.

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

We now have two railroads entering Brookhaven—the Mississippi Central, which opens the entire sea coast to Whitworth. Brookhaven is only eighty-three miles from Hattiesburg. It will not be very long until Brookhaven has a railroad from Slidell, La., by way of Covington and Monticello, and one from Natchez, Miss.

It is important that students engage rooms early, as we expect every room to be engaged between now and the opening of school, September 26, 1906.

THE PRESIDENT ANNOUNCES FOR 1906-07 THE FOLLOWING TEACHERS:

J. W. Cooper (Tuskegee College and Vanderbilt), Ethics, Economics, History, Psychology.

Mrs. Bessie W. Linscomb (Whitworth and Industrial Institute and College), Lady Principal; Higher Mathematics.

Miss Jane H. Dicke (Woman's College, Baltimore), English Language and Literature.

Miss Caroline V. Bradston (Centenary College, Tennessee), Latin.

Miss Georgine Hughes (Peabody Normal and Vanderbilt), Science.

Miss Mary L. Atkinson (Presbyterian College for Women, South Carolina), French.

Miss Eva Myers (Whitworth), Greek.

Miss Lillian White (Whitworth), Assistant in Mathematics.

Miss Eva Myers and Miss Lois W. Conner, Preparatory Department.

Miss Addie V. Marshall (Whitworth), Hall Teacher.

TESTING A GRANDFATHER.

Mary Elizabeth stroked the neck of the little white horse with timid, tentative fingers, as if she feared that at a touch this fairy steed might unfold hidden wings and fly forever beyond mortal ken. The [illegible] prosaic admiration of a [illegible] rosy little maid by her side voiced itself forth enthusiastically, but the boy was not satisfied.

"Grandad gave him to me," he announced proudly. Then seeing a downcast face keenly he continued, resolutely, "I've the best grandfather in all this town."

Instantly every drop of blood in Mary Elizabeth's loyal heart flashed into her cheeks.

"You haven't, 'cause he's the best," she cried.

"Huh!" retorted the Boy, scornfully. "My grandfather was a contractor in the army an' yours is nothin' but a musician. An' we don't none of us like his pieces, neither."

Mr. Courtnay Owen, a composer of classic music, in very truth fell far below the village standard of a successful man. When rumors of his somewhat more than rational reputation reached the ears of his fellow-citizens, they were wont to demand of each other in wide-eyed amazement, "What in time can folks find to like in them 'mellin' kind o' pieces' without a mite o' tune to 'em?" While the organist, having by dubious methods amassed a large fortune during the Civil War, stood in high popular esteem as a man of [illegible] financial ability.

"Well," faltered Mary Elizabeth at last, "maybe my grandfather isn't so smart as yours, but he's a lot kinder. Mercy, I just guess he is!" she exclaimed, inspired by a sudden recollection. "My grandfather didn't whip me, an' your dad did you the day you broke the barber window playin' ball."

She shuddered as she recalled a scene of which she had long a terrified spectator, when a furious, purple-faced man had [illegible] across his neighbor's shoulders.

"Huh, that was nothin'," the Boy rejoined nonchalantly. "Say, anyhow, I'll bet your grandfather'd do the same to you if you broke one of his windows. Old maids are such 'fraid cats they never get mad at nothin'."

"He wouldn't," flashed Mary Elizabeth. "He couldn't be so naughty that my grandfather wouldn't love him, an' I broke every one of his windows. He does just as kind as ever."

"Dare you to, an' double dare," jeered the Boy, tauntingly.

For an instant Mary Elizabeth hesitated. "Fraid cat yourself!" You know I'm not afraid, but you [illegible]."

Without [illegible] Mary Elizabeth [illegible] the way through the old-fashioned garden where she and Nellie Ingraham had played [illegible] all the summer. Each trip for [illegible] brown bees in the guise of a [illegible] box filled with blossoms, fondly hoping to obtain thereby rich stores of honey; they had made ladies of corn in high locks, wreaths of pink larkspur, and had buried their laughing faces so deep in the hearts of white lilies that their noses looked as if they had felt the golden touch of King Midas.

Now Nellie clutched the brief skirts of her [illegible] and [illegible] with apprehension, she crossed the hall and entered [illegible] shade, [illegible] where [illegible] stood was outstretched to her [illegible] stood trembling on the threshold.

"Why, Lizabeth," said a kindly voice, "[illegible] grandfather all about it."

[illegible] the shrunken figure in the great [illegible] the face that had gathered about the [illegible] heart gave way, and Mary Elizabeth [illegible] her grandfather's arm, sobbing [illegible] between [illegible]

[illegible] Miss Durbin was pleased to hear the soothing notes of a deadly hymn [illegible] from the chamber of [illegible] where a poor little [illegible] had been laid for [illegible] and forbidden to rest shrieked and [illegible]

It was not long before the broom [illegible] and [illegible] Ben from the parted lips [illegible] regular, quivering breaths, for in his dreams Mary Elizabeth was wandering through a [illegible] with shattered glass and cut her [illegible], while dear familiar forms stood about with stern, advertised faces. But as the musician softly played [illegible] the pitiful tale ceased and Mary Elizabeth smiled in her sleep, for she had a vision of an old man resting his wrinkled cheek on the brown breast of a Cremona. In his heart was [illegible] and in his faded eyes the look of one who understood.—Congregationalist.

LUKE XV: 17.

By Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

Greedy gain for what the world can give with God left out. It is so strange. After feeding on the bread of which there is such abundance in our Father's house, to go back to the husks with the swine!

O child of God, mercy is full and free for you. Come home with a great joy in your soul because you can.

Nashville, Tenn.

The Professor says, "It takes a very bold, ignorant man to assert, in our day, that immersion of believers is not Bible baptism." Then there is a mighty army of bold, ignorant men in this, our day.

"No man, by self-examination, can determine his fitness for the kingdom of heaven, but he can determine whether or not he is in the faith. Even in this he is likely to be deceived, unless his examination is the light of an open Bible.

The clamor for the union of churches growing out of the idea that creeds are man-made and useless is a snare well adapted to catch that class who believe that it makes no difference what a man believes if he is sincere, or that one church is as good as another.

Dr. Buckley, though a great editor, and highly respected, is neither the originator nor shaper of Southern thought, and the only significance in the statement to the effect that Dr. Buckley had not expressed his opinion in regard to the action of our General Conference on Dr. Tillett's proposition lies in the fact that while all other editors of Northern papers had expressed their opinion, he had not. That is all.

If Brother Burrow, of the Midland Methodist, thinks the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is sitting under a Juniper tree, whining or repining, he is mightily mistaken. That is not our nature, brother. We think the columns of the Advocate will bear witness to the fact that we have been up and about, and looking around with both eyes. Since the General Conference, we have not only kept eyes on Brother Burrow and Dr. Frank Richardson, but we have raised a big, fine crop of water melons, cantaloupes, tomatoes, roasting ears, etc. We have literally reveled in the good things of life. We do not waste time sitting under a Juniper tree.

THE SUCCESSFUL PREACHER.

The success of a preacher is not to be measured by dollars and cents, nor by the census returns of his churches, nor yet by his popularity. He may collect the assesments for the benevolences in full, and proudly boast of a surplus; he may be paid more than the stipulated salary, add largely to the membership roll, and fairly revel in popularity, and yet as a preacher he may be a miserable failure. There is difference between a successful collector and mixer and a Gospel preacher.

A preacher's success is measured by two standards: First, by his success in winning souls to Christ. This does not mean getting men and women to join the church. Thousands have their names on the church roll who have no vital connection with Christ. People often unite with the church from impure motives, or because they think the whole of Christian duty consists in joining the church. It is too often the case that persons join the preacher rather than the church. Having no interest in Christ, when the preacher who persuaded them to come into the church is gone they lose all interest and quit. One whose work is so shallow as that is a failure, no matter how largely he swells the membership or the receipts of the treasury.

Second, a preacher's success may be measured by his ability and faithfulness in preaching the Word. He is a diligent student and gets at the "mind of the Spirit." Therein lies the beauty and strength of preaching. Declamation, rhetoric, or even logic, good as they are, and useful in their place, amount to nothing more "than sounding brass and tinkling cymbals" if the message be destitute of the spirit and power of the Word." Not every good preacher is a scholar, but every one is a skillful handler of the Word as far as he understands it. To him the Word is God's chosen instrument. One of the finest pulpiteers we ever knew—learned, quite eloquent and exact in the use of English and the classics—was nothing more than a religious essayist. Congregations under his ministry suffered for spiritual bread. On the other hand, one of the most successful preachers of our acquaintance was without a finished education, lacking the gift of logic and unable, as he himself knew and acknowledged, to prepare a systematic discourse. Deploring the fact that he was nothing more than an exhorter, though he brought scores of sinners to Christ, he became discouraged and despondent and almost reached the point of giving up and quitting the field. He was finally encouraged and strengthened by reading that John the Baptist, a strong and successful man, "preached many things in his exhortation."

Let us have collectors, give us men who know how to get among the people. Fill our pulpits with men of the highest attainments, but let them be men full of faith and the Holy Ghost, who know how to divide the Word of Truth and to drive it home to the hearts of their hearers. These do not always reap the fruit of their labors. They sow and others gather in the harvest, fulfilling the Word which says, "One soweth and another reapeth."

"The whole of orthodoxy does not consist in loving service for our fellow-man, but it is the duty of Christians to 'do good to all men, specially to them who are of the household of faith."

TAKING ANOTHER TURN.

After all that has been said about Dr. Tillett's proposition, we are not to have a revision of our Articles of Religion, not even a statement, but simply a statement of the faith of world-wide Methodism. Dr. Ivey, of the Richmond Christian Advocate, quotes Dr. Tillett as saying that "statement is the only word which can be used legitimately in connection with the movement." Isn't that taking another turn? "Statement" may be the proper word to use, but if so Dr. Tillett needlessly stirred a vast amount of opposition by calling for a "restatement in the language of today," and virtually arguing for a revision of our creed on the ground that the present creed is "inadequate," three hundred and fifty years old, and "entitled to an honorable superannuation." If ever a man undertook to depreciate the creed of his Church, that man was Dr. Tillett in his speech before the General Conference and in his Review articles written at the special request of the Editors. This he did in several ways besides declaring the Twenty-five Articles inadequate. To impress their unsuitableness for Arminians, notwithstanding he tells us there is no Calvinism in them, they were "written from a Calvinistic standpoint." A killing reason that. His cogent and clinching reason for a "restatement," and which made the Articles appear little, was in the fact that "as a teacher of theology, he found them unsatisfactory basis of instruction." In all good conscience we say, if Dr. Tillett is right, we need, not a statement, nor a restatement, nor a revision, but we need a new creed.

All this we hear of the subject of meeting the demands of the day sounds wonderfully strange in view of the fact that Methodism, only the rise of one hundred and seventy-five years in existence, has not only outstripped every Protestant organization that, in preaching her doctrines faithfully, has helped largely to verify the distinctive features of her creed, and to-day shows no signs of losing life or popularity. We should wait to see some sign of decay before beginning to overhaul the running gear. In view of present prosperity, there is no use in "tinkering" the wheels.

As far as we are aware, the doctrines of Methodism as set forth are not out of date except with two classes: the small number among us who are Pelagians, and those who do not accept the inspiration of the Scriptures as generally understood among us.

If Dr. Tillett wants only a "statement" of the faith of world-wide Methodism, and can secure it on the basis of the Twenty-five Articles and other standards of doctrine without adding to or taking from, to have incorporated in our Discipline as an appendix, he should have said so in the beginning. But that, even if necessary, except for the good of those who do not know that our creed is unintelligible and out of date. All others can get along with the creed as it is.

THE NEW DISCIPLINE.

Through the kindness of Smith & Lamar we have received a copy of the new Discipline, 1906. This is a job of the kind we became from them. We have not yet had time to read it. We notice, though, that the addresses of the Bishops in Worldly Amusements is omitted from the Appendix. This is by order of the General Conference, and the Address ordered to take its place is also lacking. We notice, too, that the Articles of Religion are just where they were, and as they were, and as they will be for a long time to come.

We thank the Agent for a copy and congratulate Dr. Alexander, the editor, on his success in preparing copy in so short a time. The price is thirty cents, and every Methodist family in the land ought to have a copy. We hope our preachers will make an effort to this end.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A copy of the minutes of the twenty-seventh session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, held in Winona, June 14 to 19, 1906, has been received at this office. The good women were busy workers during the year and made a fine report. There are 61 Adult Auxiliaries, 7 Golden Links, and 57 Juvenile Societies, with a total membership of 2,499. They began the year April 1, 1905, with $24.80; they collected $4,332.00; disbursed $4,121.07, and closed the year with $256.72 in the treasury. They have done well.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The first number of the Quarterly Review under the management of the recently-elected editor, Dr. Gross Alexander, has been received. We are much pleased, the number before us being quite up to the standard maintained by Dr. Alexander's predecessors. The contributed articles, all worthy of a place in such a periodical, will please and profit, accruing as readers are interested in the subjects discussed. Personally, we read nothing with more interest than Prof. Shannon's article on "The Racial Integrity of the Negro." It is the best discussion of certain phases of the Negro question we have read in a long while. The most-talked-of article is by Dr. W. F. Tillett on the restatement of Methodist faith, written by special request of the editor. We wish Dr. Alexander the greatest success, and urge all our preachers to read the Review.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. R. Harvell, of Franklinton, La., after a few days' work for the ADVOCATE sent us a list of many new subscribers, and four renewals. Brother Harvell has our thanks.

Rev. H. A. Cunningham, one of our old north Mississippi friends, now of Orange, Texas, says: "We are in the closing months of our second year in Orange, and everything goes well with us."

We have been informed that Rev. C. S. Roberts is pushing things on the new church at Slidell, and has hopes of seeing it finished in the near future. He is doing what he can for the good cause.

Rev. C. V. Spragins, of Texas, brother of our H. S. Spragins, of North Mississippi, is greatly bereaved in the death of his beloved wife. Brother Spragins will have the sympathy of all his friends in the old home.

We are sorry to learn of the illness of Mrs. Keener, wife of Dr. S. S. Keener. She is at present in Touro Infirmary, in this city, for treatment. We pray for her speedy and permanent restoration to health and that her useful life may be long spared.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Centreville, Miss., makes a good plan. With a meeting in prospect and failing to secure help, he says: "I have tried one dozen preachers up to date, and have failed so far. This shows that the preachers are a busy set of men."

Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, is prosperous. Dr. Black, the popular pastor, has had the pleasure of receiving ninety-seven persons into membership: twenty-two on profession of faith, and seventy-five by certificate. No revival meeting has been held, but one is planned for at an early date.

Rev. Eugene Johnson, in a personal note to the Editor, says in regard to the Durant District: "We have a good prospect of making a full report on all collections at our next Conference. Our preachers have had good meetings to date. A number have joined the church. Some churches have been erected, others repaired."

Rev. J. W. Timin, who has charge of the Epworth Mission, of New Orleans, is active and hopeful in his efforts to build a church and parsonage somewhere near the Athletic Park, in a section where no church of any kind has ever been built. The Epworth Leagues of the city are behind the movement, and Brother Timin feels encouraged.

Rev. W. R. Harvell, writing from Bluff Creek Camp Meeting, says: "I have been to this camp ground a good many times, and this is one of the best meetings I have ever seen at this place. The spirit is high, and backsliders are being reclaimed and sinners converted at nearly every service."

Rev. J. H. Bass, of Charleston and Oakland Charge, has brought us under obligation for a fine list of subscribers—a club of twenty or more.

Mrs. A. C. McKinney, Press Correspondent of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Louisiana Conference, informs us that the President of the Society, Mrs. Kennedy, has been summoned by her daughter, on account of bereavement, to New York. Her address is Hotel Brunswick, Eighty-ninth Street and Madison Avenue, New York.

Rev. C. McDonald, of Lake, Miss., rejoices in the prosperity in his charge. He has just held a good meeting at High Hill, in which Rev. L. E. Alford did the preaching. And, "it was the delight of the hearers." Brother McDonald says: "I regard him as one of the best sermonizers I have heard. Young, educated, studious and healthy, the Church can well expect much of him."

Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., flourishes under the ministry of Rev. H. M. Ellis. More than fifty members have been received this years and there are applications for memberships almost every Sunday. The church has just installed a splendid $400 organ. We thank Brother Ellis for the facts on which this notice is based. Brother Ellis also informs us that "Dr. LaPrade will leave there Monday, August 13, for a couple of weeks' visit to his son in Georgia."

METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

To the Members of the Louisiana Annual Conference:

Dear Brethren—Next week I will mail you a circular letter requesting you to get all of the Sunday schools to observe Sept. 20 as Work Day for the Louisiana Annual Conference Orphanage. I have received about $11,000 in subscriptions. If every preacher and superintendent will take an interest in Work Day, as outlined in the circular letter, we will, I believe, have $15,000 in subscriptions by Oct. 1.

Brethren, help us. I beg you. Yours fraternally,

C. C. WEIR.

Aug. 16, 1906.

ORPHANS' DAY—SEPT. 20.

The Orphans' Homes in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky and Arkansas, especially the Methodist orphanages, and the majority of other denominations, have united on Sept. 20 as "Work Day" for the orphans. This is especially the work of the Sunday-schools.

Why not the Orphanages in Mississippi unite with them?

The plan is to give the entire [illegible] of income of the day to the Orphans' H[illegible] includes women, men and children [illegible] and many of the Methodist [illegible] Mississippi. I hereby suggest [illegible] schools, especially superintendents [illegible] in the plan and give the earnings Sept. 20, to the Orphanage.

We must have money to fit up around and in the Home, to buy our winter fuel, and furnish our schoolrooms. There are now 124 children in the Home.

C. C. WEIR.

WALNUT GROVE, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I held three of my revival meetings and good was accomplished beyond our expectations. Bro. Bennett held one at Waldo; one accession. Bro. L. E. Peebles did all the preaching here at Walnut Grove; eighteen of the best sermons I ever heard, two accessions. Just closed my meeting at Pine Grove. The local preachers assisted in this meeting; seventeen accessions to the church. We have some of the truest and most loyal local preachers on this circuit I have ever known. We commence our meeting tomorrow at Zion, a new churchhouse, and new organization; looking for great meeting. Will report later. Yours, etc.,

M. L. WHITE.

HOLLY SPRINGS CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have just closed a very successful meeting in many respects. Last Sunday the time had arrived to begin the meeting at Black Jack. But the Lord filled the first appointment by sending rain. But on Sunday night we had an overflowing congregation, and the Lord was present at each service in the power of the Spirit. We had the old-time altar services, and sinners would come and agonize at the throne of grace, until God for Christ's sake would forgive their sins. At one service we had seven bright conversions. We closed on last night with twenty-five conversions. Had I been able to have carried the meeting on another week doubtless there would have been fifty or more saved. One beautiful feature of this meeting was that when I went to baptize a class of eighteen they all received baptism by affusion, a thing that had not been customary in this particular neighborhood. Out of the twenty-five converts all joined our church but one. We go to Sylvestria tomorrow, to begin there. Respectfully,

W. R. CORNELIUS.

MISSIONARY RALLY DAY.

We hope as many Sunday schools as possible will observe Missionary Rally Day the third Sunday in October. The programmes are now ready for distribution. Sent free to preachers and Sunday school superintendents. Order from G. W. Cain, Business Manager, Nashville, Tenn.

FROM PEARL RIVER, LA.

Dear Brother Boswell: Our new pastor, Brother G. S. Roberts, has put his hands (yes, both hands) to the plow, and does not seem to have the remotest idea of turning a look back towards Sodom or any other place he might have come from. He and his pleasant and sociable helpmeet have taken hold of us in earnest. At his second meeting, on the 29th of last month, we had a good time—a real old-fashioned, all-day meeting, with dinner on the grounds. This was something new in this little corner of the Lord's vineyard, but it was not new to some of the older members. In this same remnant of a once-flourishing flock we had these all-day meetings at old Hickory Grove Church at least once a year, where some of the "well-beloveds" and other dignitaries of the old Mississippi Conference fed the attentive flock with the Bread of Life. Among those I recall a few names that were as household words to many of us: Rev. J. W. Lusk, J. R. Shelton, Geo. Bancroft, Geo. T. Vickers, J. W. Boyce, J. Bowen, H. R. Singleton, F. W. Featherston, T. W. Ellis, D. Babb, A. Nicholson, M. B. Sharbrough, C. W. Gillespie, Wm. and Dan'l Wadsworth, who were born and reared on Pearl River, and many others I may have forgotten. Later these were the pastors at this church: R. Selby, J. W. Tucker, H. Brown, G. W. Ellis, J. W. Crimes, T. W. Brown, J. R. Shannon, Dr. West, P. E. These were all of the Mississippi Conference. Also B. S. Rayner, P. E., and I. W. Cooper.

Most of them have already "crossed the bar," and the rest are casting wistful eyes towards the sun-bright clime. These old-time, all-day meetings did so much good, like the "old-time religion," it was good enough for them. It is good enough for us. So thought Brother Roberts, and he and his "good wife" staid until Monday to assist us in our Home Mission Society meeting.

Brother Roberts gave us a good talk. We are trying to collect funds to pay for the seating of our church, there being yet a considerable sum due on the same. This scribe was elected Corresponding Secretary, and a committee was appointed to consider the ways and means to further that consummation devoutly to be wished. If any of the old readers of our very own dear old Advocate" or the new readers would like to add a mite to our exchequer, we would sing "Oh, that will be joyful." That refrain would do them good, and help us out of debt. "So mote it be."

MRS. L. C. SADLER.

God is too wise not to know all about us, and what is really best for us to be, and to have. And He is too good not to desire our highest good; and too powerful, desiring not to effect it. If, then, what He has appointed for us does not seem to us the best, or even to be good, our true course is to remember that He sees further than we do, and that we shall understand Him in time, when His plans have unfolded themselves; meanwhile, casting all our care upon Him, since He careth for us.—Henry Parry Liddon.

JOHN MASON MITCHELL was born in Hickory, Miss., Jan. 10, 1856, and died at Natchez, Miss., Jan. 5, 1906. He was married in the winter of 1882 to Miss Mary Lou Gandy, of Hamburg, Miss. This settled him into the church during the summer of 1902, in many ways he proved to be one of the church's best friends. He loved the church and was ever ready to help it at every service. Soon after he joined the church he was elected steward and he proved to be faithful to his trust. Brother Mitchell was truly a good man. He was for several years a great sufferer with a nervous trouble sustained while in the service of a railroad company, but he never murmured nor complained. He had yellow fever during the epidemic of 1905 in Hamburg, Miss., in 1905, from which he never fully recovered, and after a few weeks lingering he passed away. To know Brother Mitchell was to love him. He was a true friend. I am truly glad that I know him. I shall ever regard him as one of my best friends. Being a true friend he was also a devoted husband. To think that wife was an ideal woman, what she did or said was right with him. Nothing of his earthly possessions were too valuable for her. He did what he could to make the home pleasant. May the blessed Christ cheer and comfort the widow in her loneliness, and may he keep her in the way of faith to the end, and some sweet day she shall meet her loved one, and where death and bereavement are unknown.

Sister NANCY HONEA, the wife of G. P. Honea, was born Aug. 27, 1832, was married to G. P. Honea Dec. 25, 1853, and died April 7, 1906, at home near Gladney, Miss., peacefully, triumphantly. Sister Honea joined the church when quite young, and was a true and faithful member of the church and always took an interest in its work. She leaves a husband and three grown children. The husband and children have lost a kind, devoted mother, a generous, thoughtful neighbor and friend. Some years ago she received a hurt that made her lame and left her afflicted, but she was hopeful and never murmured, but was cheerful and happy. Sister Honea was a good Christian character, a loyal friend and neighbor, did the most she could as his servant. She had been a member of her church for many years. She was in every way a faithful sister, was always glad to see the preacher, was delighted to see the organization of the church at Gladney and was always present when the Board met. Sister Honea will be greatly missed because of her kind, loving, generous disposition and helpfulness toward her fellowmen. Her aged husband will especially miss her. Gladney and loving relations in this locality. A good woman's loss is her gain. She had a triumphant hour in which to die. Be strong in the Lord. May the Lord comfort the bereaved, and may her children follow in her footsteps.

GILLIAM CIRCUIT, LA.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed the Third Quarterly Conference for this charge at Gilliam. Dr. H. G. Davis was with me, and preached four times, to the delight of the large congregations. Dr. Davis has captured the hearts of my people.

All reports are encouraging, and we expect to try to build a parsonage at Ida and a church at Dixie. Then Gilliam Circuit will be on a permanent basis, and will deserve the best of attention from the Conference. Our people are united and determined. The church at Gilliam has been nicely painted by funds raised by the ladies and donated by brethren of the W. O. W. We praise God, and take courage. Rev. A. W. Turner preached three days for me at Dixie last week. The people were charmed. Yours truly,

H. S. JOHNS.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 2, 1906.

BARTIMEUS AND ZACCHEUS.

Luke xviii, 35 to xix, 10.

Golden Text: "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke xix, 10.

Our Lord had crossed over from the far side of Jordan, and perhaps his route had been much the same as that of the hosts of Israel, when, in ancient times, the waters of the river separated and the bearers of the Ark of the Covenant passed through dry shod. The city of Jericho was not far away; perhaps its walls could already be seen—those walls that seemed so strong and massive, but which once fell down flat at the sound of the trumpets of the surrounding army of Israel. There seems to be haste now in the relating of events by the Gospel writers. They tell us of the manner in which our Lord was affected by what was before him. The final betrayal, the agony in the garden, the dark shadow of the cross, all were real to his prophetic mind.

"The great transaction" was to be accomplished, and how was he straitened until it was done! Love for those he came to seek and to save urged him on. As he was on the way going up to Jerusalem the intensity of his great purpose frightened those that followed him. (See Mark x, 32.) All this did not prevent him hearing the cry of blind Bartimeus, the beggar who was wont to sit by the wayside begging. "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me," he cried after being told that Jesus, followed by an eager, anxious throng, was passing by. Even as he was told to hold his peace, he cried all the more, "Thou, son of David, have mercy on me," with all the intense pleading he was capable of. Jesus heard him. Jesus will always hear the call for help. Now was the blind man's opportunity. He would perhaps never see the Master again. "Be of good comfort," said those that were near. "Rise, he calleth for thee." The blind man in his haste, arose, threw aside his outer coat and came to the Lord. The Lord drew from him his prayer, although he knew his need. Bartimeus received the blessing and followed the Master.

How vast is the importance of teaching opportunity! "Behold, now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." The urgency of the blind man is among the precepts placed in God's Word, and the answer thereto is for us, that we, through the comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope. A Gospel sermon heard now; or a Sunday school lesson learned, may be to us "Jesus passing by." Let it not be said of us "that many shall come from the East and from the West," and shall sit down in the kingdom of God, and ye yourselves thrust out." There will be no greater suffering in hell than the bitter reflection over lost opportunities.

"And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho." No mercy was shown Jericho of old by Joshua, for Rahab and her kindred were saved outside of the city. Let us study why Jesus only entered and passed through, and his works of compassion and salvation were also done outside. Was it that the city of Palm Trees was only fair to look upon and not like the king's daughter, "all glorious within?"

Our next study is of the meeting of Jesus and Zaccheus. Zaccheus, the man of small stature and large heart. This man had climbed a tree so he could get a good view of the one he had heard so much about—one that he wanted to be like; one who was followed by a great multitude of the common people—and there seemed to be a haste in this great man's movements, but not such a great haste but that he could stop now and then to bestow a blessing on the poor, the lame and the blind. What was Zaccheus' surprise when the Master [illegible] Zaccheus, come down for to-day I must abide at thy house. O what a glad man he was! The Master looked up in the tree and [illegible] down and [illegible] This was [illegible] Zaccheus [illegible] house. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

How to educate the youth is an important question. Commercialism may make us go too fast, skim over a great deal and know very little about anything. Normalism, plain and simple, will not do. The old way—the long route to an education—will not always solve the problem. Normalism and the old way are both good in their places, but the parent that takes either of these plans to educate his child may fail to accomplish his purpose. The main thought and intent of the parent is to fully equip the child for whatever avocation of life the child may choose to follow. Pure normalism will not do for the young, because it presupposes an investigation of the subject matter and is a hasty review with the idea to learn the best plan or method of presenting the subject matter to the pupil.

The old route to an education is long and tedious and it is the very way that many ought to go. However, we may be so committed to the old way that we forget there is any value at all in normalism. I believe that every college teacher, president, and all, ought to attend a first-class normal every summer for at least one month. On this subject of how to educate, I think that parents frequently make serious mistakes by rushing the child off to college. Too often the child sees that it is almost an impossibility to finish school in a reasonable length of time. The boy or girl is discouraged—loses taste for school and has too much pride to re-enter the common school at home or to attend some high school away from home after having been in college. The educational prospect for the child has been blighted because of the mistake. If on account of unfavorable association or for the need of educational advantages you must send your boy or girl away from home to school, it will be far better for your child to attend some good training school. In a good training school your child should get as good instruction as at college and really becomes more thoroughly acquainted with the possibilities to him in an educational way. Should he want to enter life upon a commercial or business line alone, he gets at the training school all that is absolutely necessary. Should he desire to secure a finished education, he is in every way prepared by having attended a good training school. I am not opposed to the public school or the graded school or college, but from experience and observation I am fully persuaded that we do not place enough stress on the training schools. Do not attempt to give your boy or girl either a business or classical education without first letting him or her pass through a good training school. To rush a child off to college unprepared is an unnatural way to educate, but to pursue the course which I have suggested is the more natural way and therefore the better way.

In talking our Conference Training School at Montrose, it is my purpose to make of it the best school of its kind in the State. I ask of my brethren of the ministry and laity to assist me in fulfilling this purpose. I also ask the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference to assist me until they establish a school of a similar kind in the bounds of their Conference. Eighty thousand Methodists can surely sustain one good training school. Let us do it.

There is

No Good Reason Against Good Insurance

Nor any substitute for it. Wherever failure to live means financial loss, there is call for Insurance. Is your life of financial value to another—your family, partners or business? If so, Life Insurance deserves your attention, and deserves it now. Your forethought will be better than their afterthought. ¶ When it comes to the best kind of Life Insurance, men do not all think alike. There is no desirable kind that cannot be obtained from THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY. This is the oldest active Life Insurance Company in America, and the largest and staunchest in the world. It is a Mutual Company. It has no stockholders. Its assets belong to its policy-holders. It has paid them dividends continuously for fifty-six years. Taking its history through,

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

has done as well for its policy-holders as any company. It should have done better, as has recently been shown. Under the present management all policy-holders may expect unusually favorable results. This is made reasonable by the facts that it is a strictly Mutual Company, operated under New York laws, which are now the best in the world; that its great volume of business means smaller share of expense on each policy, and that the new methods and economies, which are now a part of its constitution, will save immense sums which must go to the policy-holders, as the only proper place. ¶ Mr. Charles E. Hughes, who became famous by conducting the investigation of the Legislative Committee, and who speaks with authority, has recently said: "We have had great companies exposed to close and unsparing analysis, only to find that their solidity was as the rock of Gibraltar. I would rather take insurance in a New York company compelled to transact business under these restrictions, than in any company not so restricted, and I believe that will be the sentiment of the people of these United States."

¶ If you would like to know for yourself the latest phases of Life Insurance, or wish information concerning any form of policy, consult our nearest agent or write direct to

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

JOHN W. BOSWELL, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1906. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

WHOLE No. 5340. "PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD." VOL. 53 No. 35.

Glances at the World.

Anthony Comstock, whose special business, under the protection of the law, is to search for and destroy obscene literature and pictures, recently had occasion to seize certain publications of an art school in New York. A vast quantity of the literature was seized—pamphlets containing pictures in the nude—a foul and insidious method of tainting young and innocent people. Mr. Comstock was actuated in this instance "by the complaint of a parent whose pure children were being polluted by the foul pictures." The work in which he is engaged is not only commendable, but it is necessary. He should be encouraged and sustained. Instead, however, there are those who satire and abuse him. Not only do realists and artists, and art dealers condemn his conduct, but the newspapers in too many instances hold him up to ridicule. Good men and women everywhere applaud.

Statistics carefully compiled and made public by E. F. Kemp, of Chicago, show that over two thousand persons every year become victims to the careless handling of poisons and medicines which necessarily contain a large percent of poisonous drugs. Many cases result from pure carelessness, and others are classed as "purely accidental"—ignorantly taking one thing for another. Mr. Kemp says in his published statement that "many parents forget that many medicines which are beneficial and effective when properly used, necessarily contain ingredients which, if taken in excess, will cause trouble, and that all medicines should not only be kept out of the reach of children, but where adults are not likely to mistake them for something else. Many adults are injured, and not a few killed, by taking one medicine when they intended to take another of which the prescribed dose is larger, and parents and even trained nurses, more frequently than would be supposed, administer medicines in quantities greatly in excess of the prescribed doses." The table shows that of 2048 cases reported poisons were responsible for 1162, medicines used in regular practice for 837, and patent medicines for 49. Of these cases 892 proved fatal.

The following glance from the Washington Post is not only interesting, but contains statements that will be news to very many persons

[illegible] to the heart of the cotton country. The cotton-spinners of Lancashire, England, raised a commission of experts to visit all the cotton-growing lands of the world and investigate the industry. Their report has been made and it [illegible] that the United States must continue the source of the main supply. Egypt is proving as much of a disappointment as India [illegible] generally agreed that our Southern States will lead for this important industry for many years to come. In King Cotton's scepter to be restored to him? Forty years ago the plant was cultivated for the fiber only, but now cotton is become food as well as raiment. The oil extracted from the seed is rapidly supplanting lard in the kitchen, and it is even more rapidly supplanting olive oil on the table. The meal is good for man as well as beast, and at an exposition at Atlanta some time ago it was made into ashcake, hoecake, pone, batter cake, piecrust and poundcake, and all were pronounced excellent. Mixed with wheat flour or corn meal, the bread or biscuit is all that can be desired. Again, it is discovered that the cotton stalk, after it has yielded its lint and its seed, is a very valuable raw material for making printing paper, superior in fact to the best article of spruce pulp, and very much cheaper. In addition, the liquid left is valuable as a fertilizer and there is also made in the process of turning cotton stalk into paper considerable alcohol, extensively used in the arts. If farming were carried on in the South as it is in some of the European countries, the yield of cotton per acre would be greatly doubled, and that without the employment of any additional labor. In the days of slavery the cotton planter was the most prosperous man in the country, and he will be so again whenever he intelligently sets about increasing his tillage. A bale to the acre ought to be the average yield."

TO LOUISIANA METHODISTS.

Dear Brethren: At the request of Dr. Jno. R. Spencer, the successor of the Endowment Fund for Superannuates, I am acting as Conference Secretary, and shall in a day or two mail statements to each subscriber, stating amounts now due. Should any one receive statement of amount not yet due, he will please accept it as a reminder and be ready to meet note at Conference or when due.

Many said to me at Conference, "I have overlooked this, had I known of it some months ago I could have arranged for it." Recalling their speeches, I act as you requested me to do.

Remittances may be sent in at any time from now until Conference.

Respectfully,
JNO. F. FOSTER.

General News

The insurrection in Cuba is spreading and gaining strength. The United States are watching, and may be called on to restore peace on the island.

A company has been organized with large capital and will go extensively into the manufacture of paper from cotton stalks. This another value is added to the staple crop of the South.

The property loss at Valparaiso amounts to $200,000,000. The loss of life also was very great, at least 1,000 persons having been killed. President Roosevelt has made a call for the relief of the sufferers.

The "first bales" of cotton for the season in Louisiana and Mississippi were from a week to ten days earlier than last year, and everywhere brought good prices. The crop generally is in fine condition, and promises a good yield.

The campaign for the Governorship of Georgia ended last week. Mr. Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, one of the four candidates who expected to be elected, came out third. Mr. Hoke Smith carried 118 counties, receiving more votes than all his opponents combined.

President Roosevelt recently gave indorsement to the "spelling reform," and the English critics are severe in their denunciations of the attempt. One editor repudiates "the American language," which he says is "as little like Anglo-Saxon as is Volapük or Esperanto."

The negro soldiers who created a panic in Brownsville, Texas, by indiscriminate shooting, killing one man, have been ordered by the War Department out of the State. They are now in custody at Fort Sam Houston, and will be held for trial by the civil authorities of the State.

There lives near Hazelhurst, Miss., a negro who is perhaps the oldest person in the United States. Uncle Frank Buckley, 124 years of age. He was hostler for General Jackson in New Orleans during the war of 1812. The old man is healthy, and fairly active, bidding fair to live several years longer.

Another Russian general was assassinated on Sunday night. He was killed at a railway station by a young woman who fired five shots from a revolver. General Min's wife held the young woman, scarcely more than a girl, until she could be taken in charge by the police. This was the third attempt on the general's life.

Perhaps the hottest fight of the congressional campaign is in the Second Maine District, where the labor union is trying to beat Congressman Littlefield, who is particularly objectionable to President Gompers. Mr. Littlefield says he "will receive a bigger vote" than he did two years ago. Mr. Gompers says Mr. Littlefield "is already defeated."

HENNINGTON CAMP MEETING.

The thirty-sixth annual camp meeting at Hennington Camp Ground, located near Crystal Springs, Miss., was called for Aug. 2, immediately following the exercises of the Mississippi Chautauqua Assembly. Some who had attended the Chautauqua remained; and others moved in, so at 8 o'clock, Thursday night, we had the singing of gospel songs, accompanied with piano and cornet, and a good sermon by Rev. V. D. Skipper, who preached for us the next morning also. The afternoon service Friday was dispensed with, on account of the funeral of Mrs. J. W. McNeill, and a telegram calling Brother Skipper home. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Featherstun, had been advised by his physician to leave home for a rest, on account of a low state of health. Did it not look as if we would have a failure? But not so. Much prayer was offered, and a good Providence sent us Rev. R. F. Witt, of Gallman Circuit. The gathering of believers continued, the interest increased, and Saturday and Sunday brought many to the place where God's honor dwelleth.

Rev. T. B. Holloman came to us from Vicksburg, hoping to remain till the close, but he was called home to bury a young man who had died suddenly. Our grief at losing Bro. Holloman's help equaled his regret at leaving us. Then Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Jackson, came to our assistance, and with zeal, faith, and enthusiasm, added greatly to the success of the meeting. The promptness of the people in gathering, and the joy of those believing people in prayer and song, reminded us of the passage of Scripture, "With one accord, in one place." The Spirit's presence was felt just the same, the promise was fulfilled, and souls were converted.

At the recent Seashore Camp Meeting I noticed the same earnest, quiet, happy gathering of God's people. At each place the woman's prayer-meeting and experience meeting were occasions of great comfort to all who took part.

The last afternoon of our meeting a Baptist brother, Rev. Otto Bamber, was present, and he was invited to preach for us that night. He did so, giving us a good, earnest sermon, concise, and full of power. Brother Ellis exhorted on the same line of thought used by the brother, "to let God use us." Then Brother Witt received into the Church those who had applied for membership, giving a general invitation to all of every name and denomination to extend to the new members the right hand of fellowship. We then sang "The Old-time Religion," and with a real hand-shaking and the doxology we adjourned, hoping for another year much larger things for our Master.

We returned thanks for all the brethren, especially Brother Witt, and for others who helped, and regret that so many missed the blessings freely bestowed by our heavenly Father.

BETHEL CAMP MEETING.

The Bethel camp meeting closed on the night of the 12th. Those who had attended this camp meeting from year to year for the last ten or twelve years said it was one of the best meetings held for many years. Five pastoral charges were represented in the attendance and all received the benefits of the preaching done during the thirteen days the meeting lasted. The kind of preaching done by the preachers who did the preaching cannot fail to do good. Rev. C. A. Powell, Rev. B. F. Jones, D.D., Rev. C. C. Miller, Rev. C. N. Guice and Rev. G. W. Crisler took part in the preaching, and rendered good service, Rev. G. W. Crisler doing the principal part of the preaching.

Rev. C. N. Guice had charge of the singing, assisted by some of the best musical talent in the state, and this feature of the meeting was as much enjoyed as any part of the meeting. Faith, repentance, regeneration and justification and the witness of the Spirit furnished the ground of much of the preaching. A high standard of Christian living and a daily denying of ourselves was especially stressed by the preachers.

There were only a few who attended the meeting who were not members of some church, therefore only four joined the church on profession of faith.

The board of directors met on Monday morning, the 13th, and declared the meeting a success in every way, and arranged to have the camp meeting in 1907.

Steps were taken to secure the service of Rev. Sam Jones for the next camp meeting if possible.

THE PREACHER'S ALLOWANCE.

The "allowance," judging from the returns of some of our pastoral charges, cuts a very small figure in a preacher's living.

The relation of allowance to support may be illustrated by an example taken from the Louisiana Conference Annual, viz:

—— ct. Allowed, $600. Paid, $458.

—— ct., Allowed, $320. Paid, $150.

—— ct. Allowed, $475. Paid, $244.

There are sixteen charges which paid for support of the pastor an average of $106.25. This, in most cases, was the reward paid for the faithful labor of a man and horse for twelve months, and had to cover expenses of travel, horse feed, and the feeding and clothing of a family.

The monthly pay for the man and horse amounted to $16.35. Per day he received the sum of 54 cents (fraction omitted).

Is any other class of laborers required to work for such wages? One of these charges reported 103 members, who paid $150.

The fidelity and success of the pastor is shown in the fact that during the year twenty-five were added to the membership of the charge.

While he added 17½ per cent to the membership, that same membership paid him less than one-half the amount which they regarded as necessary to a support. "Will a man rob God?"

AN APPEAL.

To the Presiding Elders and Pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brethren: There is but one secretary of the Board of Church Extension. The Methodist Episcopal Church has four secretaries in the Church Extension field and they complain of inability to meet the demands upon them. Dr. Lambuth, of the Mission Board, has two assistant secretaries and other helpers, and could use profitably twice that number. I am already heart-sick over my inability to respond to hundreds of urgent appeals for help. The Annual Conferences are at hand. It is a physical impossibility for me to visit all of them. Special funds for Washington City, the Indian Mission Conference, California, Japan and elsewhere must be secured. The office makes demands upon my time. What am I to do?

I turn to the busiest and best of God's servants—the itinerant preachers. I know what they can do, because I know what I did for fifteen years as pastor and five years as presiding elder. The Church Extension assessment can be paid in full. Centenary Church, St. Louis, will pay out this year on all claims, as usual. I provided for that before leaving. As Secretary of the Board of Church Extension I do not ask you to do what I have not been willing to do as pastor and presiding elder. My appeal is for a special effort on your part to raise in full the Church Extension assessment. The time is short, but much can be done in the few weeks that remain. A vigorous effort by every presiding elder and pastor will insure a large increase in the Church Extension collection.

Many of you have the assessment provided for already. Please ask your people for a special offering for California, or the Indian Mission Conference, and send it to me. The need is great. New fields are being opened up in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma. Growing towns are demanding help. Our people are crowding into that country. They must have help. Small investments now will bring large returns in a short time. The failure to make the small investment often means a loss of the field altogether. I am counting on the preachers. They can do anything that should be done—even to securing the assessment in full.

During the year ending March 31 the Board had before it 232 applications asking for $123,784 in donations and $155,080 in loans. All of these applications had merit. The most of them were of exceptional worth and yet the Board could only respond with $51,210 in donations and $40,250 in loans. We must have money! The King's business requires it.

W. F. MCMURREY,
Corresponding Secretary.

NOTICE.

To the Secretaries of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference: It is time to send in the quarterly reports. Do not fail to get them to your District Secretaries by the first. Don't forget the change in secretaries: Mrs. J. C. Cayitt, Jackson District; Mrs. S. S. Smylie, Seashore District; Mrs. J. A. Guice, Natchez; Mrs. T. E. Clifford, Brookhaven District. Let us have a full report. Pay as much as you can on the pledge and be not unmindful of the scholarship.

SOME GREAT REVIVALS.

On the fourth Sunday in June there began a series of revivals here—the greatest ever known in and around Eupora. Bro. Bowen assisted the pastor, preaching three times a day to a crowded house. The preaching was clear, strong, powerful and accompanied by the Holy Spirit. Many souls were converted, the church revived, and Methodism and the cause in general permanently benefited. Both denominations took part, and when the Baptist revival began, two weeks later, all the forces were united in purpose and spirit to keep the revival moving. The Baptist revival lasted two weeks, during which seventy-eight were added to their church. We have had more than fifty additions to our church at Eupora this year, with more to follow. The revival did not stop in Eupora, but almost every church near here has had the greatest revival for years, and some of them the best in their history. The pastors of both churches have been assisting extensively the churches around here.

Brother J. G. Johnson, who is supplying Tomnolen Circuit, has received about a hundred into the church on his charge, and has one meeting yet to hold, while a great many in the same territory have joined the Baptist Church. This territory lies adjacent to ours. This is my brother's first year in the ministry, and he seems happy all the time. The pastor is under obligations also to Brother Neblett, whose sister lives here, for valuable service rendered by conducting the song and prayer services for us. The people here love him. He is doing a great work for Christ.

Just previous to the revival here, Brother Park assisted us in a revival at Maben, which resulted in much good.

We have been much annoyed with poolrooms here and at Maben, but the one at Maben is gone, and the one at Eupora has closed its doors. There hasn't been a game played here since our revival at the Methodist Church. To God be the praise.

Fraternally, W. M. JOHNSON.

THE WORK OF LOCAL PREACHERS.

In the Discipline, paragraph 169, we read: "It shall be the duty of local preachers to aid the preacher in charge of the circuit, station or mission to which they belong in supplying the people with the ministry of the Word." Their work is to be local and in harmony with the pastor. Also "and they shall be authorized to form new congregations, to take a list of all the names of all candidates for church membership, and, if expedient, receive them into the church; provided, that all such congregations, candidates and members be reported as soon as possible to the preacher-in-charge, in order that they may be placed immediately under his pastoral care."

The local preacher's labors are to come to the Church and be under the care of the preacher-in-charge. We find now-a-days that there are local preachers building up independent camp grounds that are not reported to the preacher-in-charge and not to be under the control of pastor and presiding elder. These meetings are not for the purpose of receiving members and organizing churches, but to build up a certain faction in the Church, and is a place for these local preachers to take up collections for themselves.

These independent camps are to be patronized

AN EXTRAORDINARY DANGER.

Those who are alarmed on account of the proposed revision of our Articles of Religion, fail to take note of the chief factor in the problem, viz., the personnel of the revision commission. No matter how much heresy there may be here and there in the church, it can get into our Articles of Religion only through the action of that commission. Suppose it be true that two of the commission—Tillett and Brown—are arch-heretics, and that they would like to incorporate some of their heretical doctrines into our creed, how can they do so? Can they corrupt, delude or intimidate Alpheus W. Wilson, Collins Denny and R. H. Mahon? He who thinks so does not know the men. When that trio recommends a creed containing the least vestige of heresy, I may get excited. Until then, I shall preserve my equanimity firmly believing that they will prepare a statement so thoroughly orthodox that the church will adopt it with scarcely a dissenting voice. Let us wait and see.

W. C. BLACK.

THE PROPONENTS.

Brother Bingham's "statement and restatement" is both sarcastic and illogical. His sarcasm we "courteously and charitably" pass without further notice. But we cannot so pass this illogical assumption.

He says: "Our faith is restated weekly in thousands of pulpits. Had not we better quit preaching and simply read to the people sermons printed hundreds of years ago?"

This will be a revelation to both preachers and people who have been taught that there is a difference between exposition and revision, and that a sermon is statement of our faith is not an exposition, but a restatement. Is it in this that the proponents had the best of the argument?

"If this is the argument, the poor charity opponents must meet, we give it up as too strong, far reaching and disastrous, and must fall over each other in our efforts to get into the ranks of these able "proponents."

You see there is no such thing as expository preaching, or teaching, and all sermons, all prayer meeting talks, all Sunday school lessons, all hymns and all prayers, all but a restatement of the Bible. So there is nothing we can do, if we would save ourselves from a commitment to the revision idea, but to read our Articles of Religion and the Bible and then say, amen! "Poor us!"

INVITING AND WELCOMING STRANGERS.

The following paper was read by Mr. A. M. Lyon, of Vicksburg, Miss., before the Mississippi Epworth League Conference at McComb City. The Conference unanimously requested its publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Epworth Era:

We see so much now-a-days in all our religious papers regarding the relation of the churches to the masses, and the question presents itself to my mind, "Who are the masses?" I would answer: All those who are not in any way affiliated with any church. And should you ask me, who are the "strangers in our cities?" I should give you the same answer.

The question then that I have been asked to solve, is how to reach these people, and how to keep them.

I shall take the stand that when the Spirit of a risen Christ dwells in each and every professed Christian, there will be no longer masses unreached by the Christian Churches.

The stranger is everyone who is not living an active Christian life. I say active, because if you will allow me to say it, there is such a vast army of nominal church members. Whether the majority of this number has or has not felt the witness of the Spirit, tasted of divine love, it is not ours to judge. But we are taught in Hebrews that we should not forsake the assembling of ourselves together for public worship. And Francis Havergal has said, "Avoidable absence from the house of God is a sure sign of spiritual decay." Then if we believe this, all who are not habitual church-goers are strangers to the lowly Christ whose ambassadors we are.

The first invitation should be the lives we live. With Christ as our example we should keep ourselves unspotted from the world, that others seeing our light may be made to glorify our Father in heaven.

Second, the invitation should be given personally, if possible, with a kind voice and a smile showing the stranger the love that is in our hearts, the love that is born when we accept Christ as our Savior, and which is growing larger and deeper with every hour of fellowship; the love that is causing us to realize the great truth that all men are brothers; and we are taught that Christ is not willing that any should perish, but that all should have eternal life.

Some one has said that all men are born with a hungering and thirsting after something, a yearning desire that is never satisfied until that soul has found and made his peace with God.

Let me picture to you the masses rushing hither and thither after this worldly pleasure and finding, after all the glitter and excitement is over, the same yearning desire for something, they know not what—the great aching void still there. How shall these people find God? Christ said when he was preparing his disciples for the last parting, "a greater work than this shall ye do because I go unto my Father." Blessed be his holy name for this opportunity of winning stars for our crowns. But opportunity equals responsibility. Wescott has said, "the will of God will be done, but, oh, the unspeakable loss for us if we miss our opportunity of doing it."

It is a small thing to invite strangers to the house of God. But if the stranger meets with a hearty welcome, if he sees the demonstration of fellowship among those present, and feels the grasp of a hearty handshake or a touch of the cold, stiff finger-tips, and a perfunctory recognition without any further recognition, given some attention; besides the welcome is making them feel as much at home [illegible] as they do at their clubs, in their lodges [illegible] (as in the saloons) then we have gained the battle. In these places there is no class distinctions—all are one for the time being, and I wonder sometimes if the prayer of our Lord, "that they may all be one," is not better demonstrated at these places than in our modern churches. The class distinction which rules the social world of to-day has to such an alarming extent crept into our churches. We go to the church Sabbath after Sabbath, year in and year out, rub elbows with the same people, with possibly a bow if we chance to catch our neighbor looking crosswise at us—and pass on.

Such is not attractive to the stranger. Until we love each other, we cannot love strangers. He must be made to feel that the church is his friend. We cannot be a friend to strangers until we are friendly one toward another, nor should we be stingy in the demonstration of this fact. When our hearts are full enough of brotherly love to be "one" in our churches, then we may pray for an overflow that will reach the strangers. We cannot give away that which we do not possess.

Why do not the masses get acquainted with Jesus, the Light of Life, through the modern pulpit? First, because the pulpit, to a great extent, is dominated by the public sentiment of the wealthy, and if the doctrine of a meek and lowly Jesus is preached, it is not practiced by the majority of the members. The holding apart and sometimes strife of Christians of separate and sometimes the same denominations, where one is a wealthy and the other a poor congregation, is not an attractive feature of our modern churches.

Again, many of our churches seem totally unconcious of the condition of the masses of men and concern themselves only with their possible conditions hereafter, not helping them in any way to solve the problem of every-day life. The pastor, instead of being influenced by communion with God, has been influenced by communion with stewards who have been selected for their financial standing, rather than their piety.

Before the church can expect to regain its hold on the masses in the city, it must be reorganized, and change its ideals. It must be absolutely democratic in its organization, it must be a church by the people, and of the people, and for the people. The working man must have representation in an official capacity, and must have an equal voice in directing the policy of the church. Money must have no influence here, neither social prestige.

But with her faults, no other organization accomplishes work that will in any way compare with the work our modern churches are doing. She builds hospitals where the sick and poor are cared for as tenderly as though they belonged to the wealthier families. She erects orphan asylums where the fatherless are cared for when the bread-winner passes away. She builds asylums for the blind, the lame, the deaf, and all who are wounded in the struggle of life.

What other organization can do so much? With all her charity, God has commissioned her to be the emancipator of the slave of sin. And there never will be a mighty work of grace accomplished in the hearts of sinners until Christians accomplish graceful work.

When will we learn the full meaning of Christ's command, "and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself?" I am afraid it will take hard lessons with some of us, as with the nobleman to whom Christ said "go, sell what thou hast."

So we need not profess to love God unless at the same time we love our brother, our neighbor, and the masses.

Love is not mere sentiment. It does not exhaust itself in mere self-pleasing. The first impulse of a heart into which the love of Christ has come is a desire to do good or bear good to others. As soon as Andrew and John had found the Messiah, they hastened out to find their brothers, and brought them to Jesus. They did not stay all night with their new-found friend, their hearts thrilling with companionship with him. That would have been a delight. But love is never selfish. So the two hurried away from the joy of their new-found friendship to bring others to share it. That is always the result of finding Christ. It puts a new Spirit within one. It changes the centre of one's life. Self is forgotten and everyone about us, even the most unlovable becomes interesting to us.

The strangers around us are our brothers, who were taught in infancy to say the same prayer we say every day, "Our Father who art in heaven," yet they have now forgotten God, lost Him out of their lives. We say that we have found the Christ and rejoice in His salvation. Is the condition of those about us who know not God, who are perishing in the darkness, any of our business? We are horrified, our hearts are rent with sympathy when the news is flashed across our country that hundreds have perished in San Francisco, the result of an earthquake.

Brothers, sisters, thousands are laying down this life every year for an eternal death. Have you missed an opportunity of leading one to the Light of Life?

Have we any responsibility for the country boy seeking his fortune in our cities, where the only places thrown wide open with worldly splendor and hearty welcome are places of shame and vice?

We of the church dare not invite him to our homes until he has proved himself to be a gentleman, as we put it. And while this proving contest is going on, there is a longing for home, for companionship with loved ones, and the body is worn and exhausted from exertion from its new vocation. The only door thrown open to him at this time are doors of temptation and vice. The doors of the wealthy are closed to the "masses," sometimes because of their recent ascent from the same, and they are afraid of recognition from their own, and disapproval of their new relationship. People of really good breeding are not afraid to mingle in church relationship with the masses. Those grand old mothers of Israel in the ranks of the W. C. T. U. army, Christians of all denominations in our national capital, have entertainments in their large parlors, on Sixth street, N. W., semi-monthly during the winter season, and often their own homes are thrown open to the soldiers and sailors, young men gathered there from the rank and file of our whole nation. Their object is to give them glimpses of home-life in their sea of wanderings. While we do not have such numbers at our doors, there are many who need the sympathetic hand-clasp in our church parlors and in our homes. Our look-out committees should be on the lookout for all strangers. Let us have printed invitations in every hotel and boarding house, and where practical have same in addressed envelopes. We have found this successful in our Leagues.

Let us have posters in all public places announcing all services of our churches, with plain directions for reaching same, and special welcome for strangers.

Our churches are closed so much of the time it is hard for one who is not a regular attendant to remember the hours appointed for the different meetings.

Then we need scouting work done. We welcome men at our door, but expect them to find the door. Some should go out and compel men to come in. If we saw a man standing with one foot ready to step over a perpendicular cliff, wouldn't we try to compel him to turn back and away from danger? How much more danger are strangers around us in, with only a thread between them and eternal death. Then, when we have them, let us immediately assign to them some special work [illegible] necessary part of it.

Another work we [illegible] be productive [illegible] pastors for [illegible] ters. This has proved [illegible] of reaching hundreds [illegible] took that step [illegible] ing hours. Take the [illegible] our part, will be to see to all the details [illegible] ing place, [illegible] good voice [illegible] same will prove to be [illegible] Our Lord. By [illegible] we come to the [illegible] ourselves before the [illegible] our pastors free to be the better prepared to break the bread and give the cup of salvation.

Some will tell us this is not Methodist. Some one has said dignity is not one of the fruits of the Spirit, nor is it classed among the Christian graces. Solomon says, "folly is set in great dignity."

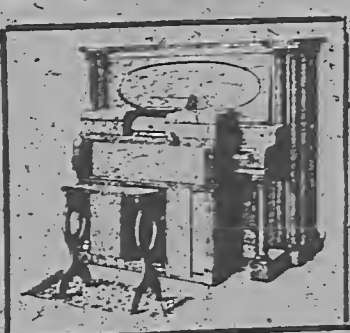
The greatest preachers of ancient and modern times were open-air preachers. Jesus Christ himself had the largest audiences when in the open air.

We must have some definite plans for this work and work up to them. Let each one of us ask ourselves the question, "What am I living for?" Indefiniteness is not only a curse, but it is a vampire sucking out of many people the vitality which God has given them for special use. Let us who are in the League make some definite plan for special work, realizing that we are all brothers and sisters, keeping close together in sympathy and in love.

RESPECT FOR OLD AGE

It is often said that American people are lacking in reverence for the aged. If this be true, it is, indeed, a flagrant fault. It is to the old we must look for wisdom gained by years. Fortunate is the young person who has close personal relations with those who have had long life and varied experience. The advice of the latter is worth more than gold. Old people do not rush [illegible] They think before they act, [illegible] stability.

[illegible] an old story, which illustrates the [illegible] of the ancient Spartan for [illegible] of the greatest amphitheatres of [illegible] a strong assembled [illegible] [illegible] popular in those [illegible] days. Every seat [illegible] Athenian boys sat on [illegible] Suddenly there [illegible] an old man, the Athenian boys [illegible] for instruction, rose and uncovered their [illegible] but not one word so far as to offer his place to the aged man. He turned to the Spartan side. All rose, and, bowing low, each offered [illegible] whereupon the Athenian lads broke out in prolonged applause.



The old man paused, smiled and bowing, said: "The Athenian knows what reverence for old age is; the Spartans show that reverence."

Is it not true that many of us are a little slow in extending respect to old age which we know belongs to it? It is so easy, it may be to pass the aged by without a word of greeting, but how much such a word means to them! A little more thoughtfulness, a little more regard for the sensitive nature of those in advanced life, a little kindly effort in their behalf, and the world would be both happier and better.—Selected.

"Melancholy cannot hold its own with perennial good nature. Sunshine is contagious. Smiles are epidemic. One joyous nature will fill an auditorium with good cheer. Despondency is a poor debater; it can bring no argument a sunbeam will not penetrate."—Selected.

More than twenty-five years ago Bishop Pierce, in one of his inimitable sermons before the Annual Conference, said: "Some preachers deal altogether in glittering generalities. They aim at nothing, and hit it with magnificent precision." There are a few such preachers still among us.

We cannot find it in our heart to blame a man who takes an uncompromising stand against what he believes to be an error. For this reason we sympathize with the Cumberland Presbyterian loyalists in their struggle against a majority who would force them into union with a church whose doctrines they do not believe.

CHARLESTON AND OAKLAND.

Dear Bro. Goodell: I have just returned from a trip to Corinth, Miss., my old home town, visiting my mother and assisting Bro. Simpson, pastor of Corinth Circuit in a revival at Box Chapel, an old church where I went to "meeting" when I was a boy.

Our congregations were good, considering the rain that fell almost every day, and we had a splendid revival. Bro. Simpson is getting on nicely in his second year on the charge. He stands first-class among his people. They all love him and he is doing a fine work.

I had a fine time going to church with my sisters and preaching to men of my boyhood days. I have one more pastor to assist and then I shall wind up for Conference.

Our beloved Presiding Elder, S. M. Thames, was with us at our third Quarterly Conference and preached two great sermons—one at Oak Grove, and one at Charleston. Brother Thames is not only a fine presiding elder, but he is a great Gospel preacher. When he comes into a pastoral charge he does not come as an ecclesiastical boss, but as a brother preacher and spiritual adviser.

We sincerely trust that Bishop Hendrix will see proper to continue him on the District.

Charleston and Oakland charge is in fine condition. Seventy-five have joined the church this year up to date, and most all of them on profession of faith.

We have raised money and paid off our Home Mission assessment and have collected some on the other claims. Our assessments for all purposes will be met in full, though they are about $200 higher than last year.

We have secured twenty-four new readers for your excellent paper during the year, and we continue to insist on the people wherever we go to take the ADVOCATE.

God bless you in your noble work.

IN GREAT AFFLICTION.

Mr. Editor: I am deeply agliated. The Lord has taken from me my dear wife, and I am desolate and lonely. After an illness of twenty-eight days with typhoid fever, she sweetly fell on sleep in Jesus August 13, at 9 p. m., aged 31 years, 5 months and 18 days. She was a daughter and eldest child of the late Rev. N. B. Norwood, of Clinton, La. She was converted when about eight years of age, and continued steadfast in the faith of our Lord until her death. Truly her's was a beautiful life, and while I know she is happy in heaven with loved ones who awaited her coming, I feel her loss as irreparable. She was a devoted wife and mother and friend, and was an earnest worker in the Lord's vineyard. She was especially fond of children, and hence was devoted to Sunday school work, being the life and inspiration of our school here in Baker.

We laid her to rest in Blackwater cemetery, Bros. Tucker, Turner, Schuhle and Wier; and Rev. H. F. Wilkinson, of the Presbyterian church, officiating. I think hers was the largest funeral attendance I ever saw, for she was loved by all. She leaves with me three children, Walter, Norwood and Mildred, to mourn our loss, the eldest being but nine years of age, and the youngest four.

In our affliction the people of Baker and the entire circuit have been so tender and kind to us. They could not have been more sympathetic and helpful. Kinder people are not to be found anywhere. They proved God's ministering angels to my dear wife and myself. They proved indeed, that they loved us dearly. May the blessings of heaven rest upon them all. Our physician, Dr. W. S. Cushman, together with Drs. Williams and Young, were faithful and strove earnestly against the fatal malady, but failed because God called her home, and human skill must always break down under Divine pressure. But they worked nobly and heroically, and I count them dear among my friends.

Dr. Boswell, I do not understand this dispensation of Providence. I am sure I can never be as effective in the Lord's work since she has gone, as I have been with her. She was such a help to me. But I am consoled in the knowledge that it was the will of God, for many of God's children prayed with me night and day for her recovery, and another still greater consolation is from the blessed fact that she was real, and is with Christ, and I will find her some glad day waiting for me at the gates of the city, or better, will meet me at the gates of death. I ask the prayers of all my brethren that God may support and sustain me in this my deep affliction.

EVILS OF THE MODERN DANCE.

Some years ago we made an inquiry of Miss Jennie Williams, Superintendent of our "Door of Hope Rescue Mission" in Nashville, Tenn., concerning the effects of modern dancing on the morals of the participants. As her life is spent among the unfortunate girls who have gone down under temptation, her testimony at once commends it self to reasonable people, and we give the following extract from her letter, dated Aug. 15, 1906, 513 Fourth Street, Nashville, Tenn.:

"I think perhaps the greater part of the great throng of the better class of fallen women have fallen simply because they were not able to resist the evil that is most always brought to bear by the whirl and fascinating excitement and fantasy of that charming, delightful, irresistible sensation, the waltz, the most damnable of all evils. There is where young men lose self-control. With brain and heart and soul on fire, it places the young girl in the clutches of Satan himself, and almost without realizing it, she waltzes on unconsciously, oftentimes to her doom. Then she imagines herself lost beyond all redemption, and goes with the hundreds of her sisters to the house of shame.

"Dancing is certainly, beyond a doubt, one of the principal causes that necessitates so many houses of ill-fame. Young men's passions are aroused and they will satisfy them, even if it is at the expense of some pure girl's virtue, that is her very life.

"The Almighty never intended that the sexes should promiscuously embrace each other, as in the dance, and where they do it they hazard their virtue in so doing. No respectable parents would allow their daughter to take the same attitude with a young man in their own parlor, and yet many will dress them with a low-necked dress and send them to a ballroom, to go through the dancing whirl until the late hours of the night in the embrace of a young man she knows not whom, sometimes a lecherous scoundrel who goes off and boasts of the familiarities he took with her. The only safe ground for the morals of either man or woman is to keep their distance from the opposite sex in the matter of physical contact. While some may mount above the baser influence of the dance where the sexes embrace, human nature is too weak at this point to be subjected to such a temptation, and we warn our young people, and their parents, to let it alone. It never leads to godliness, and often leads to ruin.

SEEING THE COUNTRY FOR THE FIRST TIME.

"Ah ing, but it's nice here! And we eat, and we eat and it taste so good." There was appreciation and pathos in the voice of the speaker, a slender, toil-worn woman who in Camp Grant will, Evanston, was enjoying the first rest she had known for eighteen years. It was also the first time she had been outside the city for two years. Six children and a sickly, weak-minded husband had kept her too busy for leisure. In addition there had been twins who lived for fourteen months, wrapped in cotton wool, and then had slipped away from earth again, and while the poor mother wept for the loss of them, she found therein cause for gratitude. "De Lord was good, I'inking, for how I work for my man and my older children who den twins to carry."

How much it means to the mothers and children in the crowded foreign neighborhoods of our cities to be taken to the summer camps in the country for one or more two-weeks' outings can only be realized by those who come in direct contact with those thus benefited.

The eagerness with which the outing is anticipated is indicated by the small boy who watched daily for the coming of the postman with the card which would announce the date for his turn to go. No fear lest he would fail to be ready! He had been waiting weeks for his turn.

Last summer a woman went to one of the camps who had not been out of the city since she came to it a bride, in the '70's, from Croatia. She had not been on the street cars, even for sixteen years, and, of course, had never ridden on the elevated road. It is hardly possible to imagine what the outing meant to her.

Chicago and New York are leaders in the "fresh air" work, while Buffalo, Indianapolis, Washington and Cleveland each have a well-organized and efficient summer outing plan.—The World Today.

TWO GIRLS WHO BECAME WIVES.

A very bright girl, by name Jane Ferrar, was married a dozen years ago. She was an ambitious girl. She was active in club work, and the clubs to which she belonged numbered some six.

When she married she preferred not to keep house. "I certainly shall not waste my life by giving it to house work," she argued. She said: "The class of women who once were housemaids are now pressing into higher occupations. Let us live in a hotel. The individual home takes too much out of a woman."

Of course the care of babies does not easily accord with hotel and club life. So the Ferrars have no children. But Jane is a leader in reforms. Her husband has given his life wholly to business. He is a silent, moody man, of whose real character she knows little.

Her cousin, Nelly Ward, married about the same time. She was as able a woman as Jane, but with a sound foundation of common sense and that tender human sympathy which is the basis of character in the woman best beloved by men and by God.

Her family besought her not to keep house. All the arguments recently urged against the [illegible] means [illegible] experiment not by general laws but in her own individual way.

Here, perhaps, was the secret of her success. She met all men and women not as types, representatives of a class, but as individuals. The work of her house and kitchen was her art which she studied. She went to cooking schools, to lectures and bright women's clubs learning how to keep house, or to help husband and babies when they came.

The cook and the maid were not to be held down in their place, but were to be helped up in it, friends and helpers. She knew all about their folks and homes. She found work for the cook's boy who had taken to drink, and when the maid's father was in the hospital she visited him and paid his bills.

She had been a housekeeper now for many years. Some of her public-spirited friends wonder that she is able to keep up her happy home life. She never has trouble with servants. They say [illegible]. She laughs and says nothing. She never argues. She just goes ahead and does.—Ladies' Home Journal.

AN ECHO FROM CHINATOWN.

The day before the destruction of Chinatown, San Francisco, Jessie Juliet Knox, favorably known for her book, "Little Almond Blossoms," completed the interesting paper on the "Shut-in Society of Chinatown," from which the following extract is taken. The article appears in the August Housekeeper. This writer is probably better acquainted with the life of the women of Chinatown than any other American. She says:

"A stranger would be frightened here, for one must pass through a large gambling house in order to reach the dear little Virgin Alley. At the street door sits the doorkeeper, a slender and stylish Chinese lad. Like a sphinx he sits there day and night. Little do they are seen approaching to make a raid, and place the officers just outside the door. When the officers enter all will appear serene as a Sunday school, and no paraphernalia in sight. Nothing to be seen save a few sleepy-looking Chinamen playing fan-tan, and the attendant ever ready to serve tea. The gods are never [illegible] always for the gods. A STATEMENT AND AN APPEAL.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is in a more prosperous condition to-day than at any time since we have had it in charge. We mean by this that it has a larger number of subscribers, and doing a better advertising business. Our publisher, Mr. C. O. Chalmers, has the interest of the paper at heart, and, as the paper shows, has greatly improved it in every material way. Still greater improvement is in prospect. How soon they will be made depends on circumstances, viz. the securing of a larger number of subscribers.

The hope of securing a large increase of readers is well based. The activity of our preachers in circulating the paper during the year has been such as to assure us that they appreciate it, and desire their people to read it. Many of our brethren have done well. We still appeal to them to help us. We desire very much to reach the ten thousand by the time our Conferences meet in December. If every preacher in our patronizing Conferences will send us an average of three subscribers each, we will come near reaching the desired number. Any brother can send that number. Many brethren can send a much larger number. All, together, with a slight effort, will give us a subscription larger than the ADVOCATE ever had. We expect a generous response to this proposition. Let us hear from you, brethren, without delay.

TO CONTRIBUTORS AND OTHERS.

We are overstocked just now with communications on the statement and restatement of Methodist Faith. We would be glad to have one or two more on Methodist experience and practice. What we have on hand, with possibly one exception, will be side-tracked next week to make room for specially-prepared matter of great interest to our Louisiana and Mississippi Methodists. We have five years or more in which to discuss restatements. Let us be patient.

It is our business to seek safety by standing on the Rock. We gain nothing in efforts to determine the security of the foundation. God will look after that.

THE FAITH THAT SAVES.

Thousands of men believe all the articles of the Christian faith, but are total strangers to the purifying power of the Gospel. Even devils believe and tremble, but are devils still. The faith that saves includes quite as much as intellectual assent to the truth, and power of [illegible] but it embraces a great deal more. Otherwise every man who assents to the truth would be on a safe moral basis, and very few unsaved men would be found in any Christian community.

A very large class of intelligent Christians are persuaded that the Gospel appeals only to the intellect, and that all a sinner has to do is to assent to the truth, confess, and obey the ordinances. We would not undertake to say that these believers are not Christians, but that their religion is genuine Christianity we do not believe. Many people are far better than their creed, and, standing, as a rule, a man's creed shapes his life.

The faith that saves, irrespective of [illegible] ordinances, brings a man into vital connection with Christ. This fact is declared by [illegible] himself in a plain, unmistakable figure. "I am the vine; ye are the branches." This vital connection is brought about by a process all divine. It does not come by blood, nor by the will of the flesh, nor by the will of man, but of God; and is a matter of necessity, by virtue of the [illegible] but because the individual has put himself in the hands of God to do with him as God will. He is grafted into the good olive stock, and becomes partaker of its fatness. The connection thus formed, is as real and as vital as the union of two varieties of trees effected by the process of grafting, so well known to nurserymen and fruit growers.

Faith, in order to vital union with Christ, must have certain characteristics wholly unknown to that belief which only assents to the truth. There must be in it the element of trust. Saving faith takes God at his word. The sinner convinced of the truth of the Gospel, may live with that conviction firmly fixed in his mind without any hope of salvation. But there comes a time when he is brought under conviction—not only under a sense of his unworthiness, but of his lost and hopeless condition out of Christ. He finds in this state of mind and soul that his [illegible] belief does not give him rest, nor [illegible] dom from guilt. Something else [illegible]

A faith of a different order [illegible] There must be trusting faith, [illegible] as a little child exercises [illegible] in a father—free, full [illegible] This is what St. Paul calls [illegible] unto righteousness.

Saving faith must have [illegible] love. Love for our fellow men [illegible] to God. There is no religion [illegible] profession may be as ostentatious [illegible] ligion of the Pharisees, but without love it is as sounding brass or tinkling [illegible] well enough for men to obey [illegible] these things do not put us in [illegible] Christ, nor can a failure to [illegible] us out of Christ, for "In Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh [illegible] love." It is a significant expression, indicating that saving faith "faith exhibits its energy by love." So essential is this element in faith that St. John says: "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." Faith, therefore, that does not work by love is not genuine. It cannot bring peace to the soul nor be helpful to our fellow-men. This element in faith divests religion of all selfishness. It so inspires Christians that, instead of concentrating life's blessings upon themselves, they divide them among their less fortunate neighbors; and instead of penning up their feelings and keeping their enjoyment to themselves, they call upon the world to hear what the Lord hath done for them, and exhort the world to "taste and see that the Lord is good." Any other religion is a worthless counterfeit.

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews states a truth when he says, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith makes the spiritual and unseen real to the soul. It amounts to such a demonstration that you can no more shake a Christian's feet from the foundation on which he stands than one can shake the foundation itself. The natural man understandeth not, nor receiveth these things, neither can he know them. They are spiritually discerned. His eye has never seen, nor his ear ever heard, nor have ever entered into his heart the things God hath prepared for them that love him, but God hath revealed them to every true believer.

In such faith the Christian lives and labors and [illegible] Then his faith is turned to sight.

ALL THINGS ARE YOURS.

The Christian's possessions are invaluable and unlimited. There is nothing essential to his spiritual needs and final salvation that is not at his command. "All things are yours: whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

Christians are in union with Christ, and as all things belong to Christ, and exist for Christ, they therefore belong to Christians and exist for their sakes; and living constantly in communion with God, doing his will, and seeking his glory, he makes all things work together for their good. Christians do not exist for the sake of things, but these things exist for the sake [illegible] Christians; and the Corinthians, to whom the [illegible] addressed, acted ignorantly and in [illegible] way when they wrangled among [illegible] the teachers, some preferring [illegible] and Apollos, and some Peter. These [illegible] ministers for whom they believed, and [illegible] and priests in them all, high [illegible] sake, it was out of place [illegible] for entering reference to another [illegible] get out of all, and out of the [illegible] of things present, and things to [illegible] of life, and even ing of death.

With all the vast resources at the command of [illegible] heirs to do for the development of [illegible] and the advancement of God's glory [illegible] there is no excuse for the puny and [illegible] and consequent shallow experience manifest in the lives of so many professing Christians. When they should be men, they are but babes in Christ.

Instead of the possible attainments in the divine life, and the enjoyment realized in constant growth in grace, it is nothing short of sheer ignorance of one's privileges and opportunities, or criminal indifference to his interests, to live as too many do without even making an effort to improve their spiritual condition. The case is as if a man has a large cash balance to his credit in a solvent bank, and either knows not how to draw on his resources, or deliberately chooses to live as a pauper. Such souls will be bankrupt in heaven or will be saved "yet as by fire."

Consider, brother, what is your privilege as a child of God. "With open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord." To this is added the promise of the Holy Ghost: "My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." God promises also "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." And as a still further inducement, St. Paul tells us that God is able to do for us "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

Let us go up and possess the land!

Dr. Richard Wilkinson, of Monroe, is taking a month's vacation. He is spending the time somewhere in New York.

Bishop Candler, who sailed at the end of July for China from Seattle, arrived safely, and in due time. Such is the message to his family in Georgia.

Rev. E. H. Craddock, pastor of Felicity Street Church, is in north Alabama, attending a Conference meeting by invitation of Dr. V. O. Hawkins, the presiding elder.

Rev. H. T. Carley, recently appointed to Parker Memorial Church, is much encouraged at the outlook. He has a fine Sunday school, a well attended prayer meeting, and large congregations on the Sabbath. He is in fine spirits. We wish abundant success.

Bishop Galloway, on the advice of his physician, has been scooting a month in the lake regions of the Northwest. He writes a cheering letter to the Western Christian Advocate from Ludington, Mich. He has been greatly refreshed and reinvigorated by four weeks of rest.

At the suggestion of Rev. H. Whitehead, pastor of our Algiers Church, the General Board of Church Extension adopted a Saving Fund for church building. The Board will take [illegible] of any church proposing to build [illegible] pay four per cent per annum [illegible] ances.

A PROTEST AND AN APPEAL

Dear Doctor Boswell: A year ago I made a protest against the gratuitous advertisement of Mr. Beeson's schools in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and received many letters and messages of thanks for so doing. Now I desire to register a protest against the publication of articles from disgruntled men. It matters not what positions in the church they may occupy, they are not fit contributors to our [illegible] its papers. They are [illegible] for their criticism is based [illegible] addition to conceit for their [illegible] cramped and narrow. With an [illegible] consciousness of infinite [illegible] these "[illegible]" can knife the whole church and her ministry, and then seem utterly amazed that anybody should flinch. Very friendship for them would bury their cigar mouthings in the bottom of the waste-basket. Friendship would stop a locomotive from rushing in the way of a passing vehicle; then why not stop the advertisement of his selfishness and spleen?

No doubt we are all sour at times, or the best of us have our blue days. What we might write on such occasions would not be worthy of ourselves; then why should an intelligent editor, a third party, suppose it of others? Upon cool reflection at least save the reader from our worst.

The waste-basket may sit low, but it is the tallest angel of blessing that visits the editor's sanctum. The issuance of any paper without it would be a crime.

AN ANTIDOTE OR QUIETUS ON PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL PRETENSIONS

If the Rev. Lyman Carley and my other brethren in Mississippi will get "The High-Church man Disarmed," by the Rev. W. P. Harrison, D.D., from our Publishing House in Nashville, Tenn., they will find just what they need if their needs be not already supplied, to expose the fallacious pretensions of "the church" and make bare the places of the absent links in the imaginary chain of the so-called apostolic succession. There are about as many "missing links" as in the Darwinian theory of evolution.

A UNITED STATES SENATOR ON THE WHISKY TRAFFIC

It is generally [illegible] Texas has been the [illegible] for several years. [illegible] have engaged in [illegible] It [illegible] In [illegible] south the law. This was [illegible] the county where the majority was clearly against [illegible] business. The will of the majority was set aside. It is this defiant attitude of the whisky traffickers that Senator Culberson alluded to in his great speech before the late Democratic Convention of Texas. We quote from the Texas Christian Advocate:

At the late Democratic Convention Senator Culberson was called to the platform for a speech. When he appeared he was given a great ovation. As he stood on the platform he faced one of the most magnificent audiences of his life. There were several thousand people and it was one of the most representative gatherings that ever assembled in Texas. It represented the brain, the culture, the public sentiment and [illegible] great [illegible] No [illegible] council of the [illegible] is speech was [illegible] to take the [illegible] proceed until he launched one [illegible] most terrific [illegible] upon the unwarranted interference of the liquor traffic in the politics of the State ever heard to fall from the lips of a public man before a Democratic Convention. He declared himself a man of liberal ideas on this subject, had no sympathy with drastic sumptuary laws, and added: "But when the whisky traffic becomes lawless, when it harbors the vicious and criminal elements, when it invades the residence districts of towns and cities of the State, when it defies the will of localities legally and constitutionally put under local option, and when it seeks to dominate our political affairs, it will find no refuge in the Democratic party." Before the sentence had scarcely been finished the great audience went wild. They sprang to their feet, stood in their chairs, flung their hats and coats into the air, and their shouts were heard many blocks away. We have never seen such a demonstration, and it was all over the assembly. Here and there could be seen a bunch of brewers and liquor sympathizers, sitting with blanched faces and dazed expressions. The uproar lasted several minutes; and when the audience quieted down, the Senator, with determined look on his face, continued: "I warn the whisky interest of the State of Texas, as I have warned it before, that such a course as this will excite the people and arouse in them a purpose to enforce the laws which nothing can thwart." This fearful warning was uttered with an emphasis that rang like a thunder peal throughout the great auditorium; and again the throng was on its feet and even a greater demonstration followed. It was several minutes before order was restored so that the Senator could proceed. No Democratic Convention in this great State ever witnessed such a scene. It was enough to make the brewers and the liquor dealers turn pale about the gills. It was not so much the sentiment that called forth the outburst as it was the man who gave utterance to it. Everybody present knew the pent-up sentiment was there, but nobody dreamed that Senator Culberson would utter it under the circumstances with such dynamic power. It is a well-known fact that he is a conservative man and that he measures his words with wonderful coolness and deliberation; and that he never goes off at a tangent. He is not a man of sentiment. And he is one of the ablest political diagnosticians in Texas. Therefore he has been studying the progress and status of local option in Texas, and as it embodies the purest elements of local self-government, he appreciates the justice and righteousness of this cause and the determination of the people to support it. As a result, he has placed himself squarely on the side of the people, and the brewers and the liquor dealers had better [illegible] his note of warning. If they do not, they [illegible] just as well prepare to read [illegible] on the wall of [illegible] the writing of their impending [illegible] Said Senator Culberson:

VIENNA CIRCUIT, LA.

Mr. Editor: I want to say to your readers that our meeting at Simmsboro was not a failure by any means. Only one was added to the church by certificate, but the church was greatly revived. We had a feast of good things at our District Conference. Just after leaving Winnfield I had the pleasure of helping Brother W. W. Nicholson in a few days' meeting at New Hope. Several were converted and five joined the church. More, we believe, will follow.

Our meeting at Vienna, commencing Sunday, Aug. 5, resulted in six accessions on profession of faith and our church greatly revived. Brother Jno. G. Sloane was with us both at Simmsboro and Vienna. After closing at Vienna last Friday evening, we started our meeting at Pine Grove Aug. 12. Brother R. H. Wynn came up from Ruston and aided us until the close.

Those good people at Antioch have completed their new church, save putting in the altar. This will be done soon. Our church at Simmsboro and Pine Grove will both be completed soon. What a gracious privilege to be associated with such a devout man as Brother Sloane. He is a sincere and earnest preacher. Yours very truly.

SUICIDE AND RELIGION.

There are about 600 suicides every year to 100,000 of our population, and the ratio is increasing a little every year. Among the causes assigned for this increase by Dr. Hanz Rost, who has been making the subject a special study, is a letting down in religious sentiment and faith. That is to say, the simple belief of the fathers, taken in connection with man's immediate responsibility to God, was in a measure preventive of suicide.

The doctor's investigations have led him to the conclusion that suicide is not caused, to any great extent, by mere privation or physical suffering, but it comes through mental disturbance and anguish that the old-time religious belief and habit could in a measure require.

Here is a point for some thoughtful preachers to take hold of—that a settled religious belief is a condition of sanity, and that if there is any doubt about the future world, there is no doubt that a man is safer in this world who believes in God, his mercy and his love. There seems to be no doubt of the conditions that contribute to this argument. It is a matter of psychological proof supported by comprehensive statistics.

There is, however, a little touch of denominational suggestion by the doctor that may be too valuable to be omitted. He says there is less suicide among Catholics than among Protestants, and mildly attributes the difference to the fact that there is less debate among Catholics as to their creed, and consequently less mental disturbance. If this is so, it only supports the main proposition that a settled religious conviction is a discouragement of suicide.

This fact, if properly used, is a greater argument for religion than the discovery of a new bas-relief on the slopes of Khorsabad or a faded papyrus in the tombs of the Pharaohs.—Ohio State Journal.

LEISURE MOMENTS.

What do you do with your leisure moments? This was a question recently asked of young men in a public assembly. It was stated that the use of leisure moments determines what a man is and what he will become. In moments when the strain of outside pressure is taken off the natural bent reveals itself. Some men are idlers at heart and leisure reveals their decided love of the "dolce far niente" mode of existence. Others turn to special fads that interest and amuse them. Many a man has used his leisure moments to fit himself for superior work. These are those who have made themselves learned by the use of spare portions of time. Busy men who have no time for Bible study can surely find leisure moments, however brief, for a glimpse at the Word of God, and by systematic use of five minutes a day and orderly reading of the Scriptures, can become filled with its truth. A man can make himself even an authority on a subject to which he would give a few minutes daily. Woman is noted for her use of spare moments in knitting or sewing. There is a mine of wealth waiting for those who will use the loose bits of time for some profit.—The Watchman.

Mrs. NANCY E. DAVIS, daughter of Samuel and Margaret Tanner, was born near Athens, Ala., Feb. 7, 1822, was married to Dr. James S. Davis July 21, 1838, and died in Iuka, Miss., July 4, 1906, being 84 years, 4 months and 27 days old. She was one of twelve children who were born to her parents, only one of whom (Mrs. E. J. Doan, Memphis, Tenn.) survives her. She was the mother of thirteen children, four of whom survive her—two sons and two daughters. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for at least fifty years. But she was something far better than being simply a member of the church; she was a genuine Christian, both in heart and life. She and her husband settled in Iuka, Miss., in 1865, where she lived till the Master said, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," and the truth and power of Christianity were beautifully and forcefully demonstrated in her consistent and active Christian life. I have rarely known a Christian who had the confidence of the people more generally and positively than she had. For some years of the latter part of her long life she was feeble in body and spent a good part of her time in her room and in her bed, but her room and heart were always open to her friends, especially her older sisters in the church and her pastor, and her rule was to have them read God's Word, sing and pray. The writer has rarely, if ever, been in sweeter love feasts than on the occasions of pastoral visits to her sickroom. As she lived, so she died. Just before her death she spoke repeatedly to her mother, who had been dead for thirty years—as if she had been at her bedside. Just a few moments before she breathed her last she was talking with loved ones who sat by her bedside, when she turned her face away and said: "Glory, glory, glory!" And these were her last words. I remarked to a friend after the funeral service that I did not know that I had ever seen more tears shed on such an occasion.

J. D. CAMERON.

Mrs. ANNIE E. WEBB, consort of Captain Junius Y. Webb, passed away at noon on Friday, Aug. 3, 1906, at their home in Minden, La. Sister Webb was the mother of thirteen children, five of whom passed over the river before her, and doubtless greeted her on the other shore. What a happy meeting! I do not know when she joined the church. For more than twenty years I have known her as a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Minden, La. I feel that in the loss of Sister Webb I have lost a special friend. She was always glad to entertain Methodist preachers in her home. And they always received a hearty welcome by all the family. With the care of the home and the children, she was not able to do much personal work in the church, but her heart was in it all. The family was sorely afflicted for years—verily they passed through deep waters, all of which Sister Webb bore with Christian fortitude and patience. Her last illness was sore, protracted, and she suffered much, but she murmured not. A sweet smile rested upon her face in death, saying to loved ones left behind, "All is well" in the beyond. We cannot speak too highly of Sister Webb and her faithful husband as members of the Minden Methodist Church. All know of their activity as long as health and strength permitted. Sister Webb was 72 years old at the time of her death. Good-by, my sister, but we shall meet again on the other shore.

JNO. A. MILLER.

MARY AILEENE LITTON, aged 4 years, 11 months and 26 days, only child of Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Litton, passed away Aug. 12, 1906, at their home at Tioga, La. Hers was no earthly or temporary sleep, but the long, sacred rest which "He giveth to His beloved." There is no death to such as thou, sweet Aileene! neither darkness nor shadow of death; only such a bright fading as when the morning star fades in the golden dawn. Thine is the victory without the battle—the crown without the conflict. It is not on earth that heaven's justice ends. Think what it is compared with the world to which her young spirit has winged its earthly flight, and say, if one deliberate wish expressed in solemn terms above her narrow home could call her back to life, which of us would utter it?

Father and mother, grieve not that she is gone before, but rather praise Him who said, "Let the little ones come unto me," that He gave you this little ray of sunshine for nearly five years as a living messenger to brighten your lives and home, and prepare your hearts for this, her last message to you:

"God is love." "God is love."

MADAM MAC.

JOHN W. ROUSE was born Oct. 22, 1820. He joined the M. E. Church in 1849 and lived a faithful Christian till death, July 4, 1906. He married Susan Bowen in 1849. To this union were born twelve children. The wife and two children preceded him to the grave. The rest are left to follow on. He was a loyal Methodist, a loving husband, a kind father. The last five years of his life he was deprived of the privilege of going to church because of affliction, but in all these years he never murmured, trusting him to whom he had committed his all. In his strong manhood, in his last days his hopes were fixed in Jesus. He spoke of heaven as though he could see it. His last days before he died were the happiest days of life. He called his children to him and told them to meet him in heaven. I visited him in his last days. Surely, it is a benediction to see a man after he has given his life to Christ, so full of hope and joy as he stands upon the brink of death. Weep not, children; press on to meet where parting comes no more.

GETTING INTO THE HABIT.

Not to use the truth that we know is worse than not to know the truth. For a man injures and tends to destroy his will-power every time he fails to exercise his will in accordance with what he knows to be right. To live the truth is to digest the truth; and just as a full stomach of undigested food is more of a menace to health than is an empty stomach, so a mind full of unused thoughts is more of a menace to spiritual health than is an ignorant mind. But our physical systems are not always within our control, while the digestion or use of our intellectual food is solely a matter of our own choice, and is always within control, if we will have it so. A little girl, of whom a children's story tells, had the right idea when she said, "Sunday you learn your verses, and week-days you get into the habit of them." To "get into the habit" of every truth we know is the only way to grow into the knowledge of more and better truth. To "learn our verses" Sundays without using them week-days is to make our learning a failure and our week-days a burden.—Exchange.

A WASTED LIFE.

The New York Sun printed not long ago a tragic letter which, though anonymous, bears every mark of being a genuine leaf torn out of a man's heart-book. The writer said he came to New York a very poor boy, and having now made a very large fortune, he retired from business. "But," says the confessing millionaire, "when I think it over, day by day, I can only be ashamed of it all. I suppose that I was no worse than the others. I know that some were worse than I. But I forget that was such a thing as a square deal. If I could get the better of an associate or a customer or an employee, I did. Anything that I could do to attain my own success was business, and I did it. I have given to charity, but it does not satisfy me. I know what I have done wasn't manly. The modern success is rank failure. I would give all that I possess to-night if I could say: 'I have given everyone a square deal. I have done no man wrong.' Think it over; it will mean a lot to you some day." It ought to mean a lot to every young man right now. Let him ask himself whether he ever heard a man talk that way in old age, who in youth had deliberately turned away from money-making and devoted his life to doing good. Did he, in fact, ever hear any poor man speak with such cold, shivering disgust at life? Any young fellow with horse sense ought to be able to see that starting out to get rich is just the same as writing "Fool!" in capital letters on his own forehead.—Interior.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom, without regard of climate or condition. So confident are they that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh. foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 169 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 9, 1906.

JESUS ENTERS JERUSALEM IN TRIUMPH.

Matt. xxi. 1-17.

Golden Text: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matt. xxi. 9.

Still on his journey to Jerusalem our Lord had come as far as Bethphage, where he began his preparations for his first public entrance into the city. In making preparation, one of several objects was considered even to detail, and that was that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. "Rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for thy King cometh sitting upon an ass and a colt the foal of an ass."

As Jesus was then on earth directing events as they had been foretold, so now, from heaven, he directs even to the smallest particular the varied circumstances that make up the lives of his children on earth. He called two of his disciples and gave them directions to go into the city and at a certain place they would find an ass tied; he told them what to say if any objections were made to the colt being taken. Jesus and the multitude waited the return of the disciples. Soon the triumphant march began. Part of the multitude preceded and part followed the Lord. They were all brought up to the highest enthusiasm; enemies were among them, as they were always near; and they heard the disciples rejoice and praise God. They gave Jesus the name of King and that he came in the name of the Lord, and they cried: "Peace in heaven and glory in the highest," whereupon the Pharisees said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples." Jesus said, "I tell you that if those should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

It is hard for us to enter into the spirit of this great joy, for we know that the Lord rode along with a heavy heart. Only a few days more and the multitude that now rejoiced and gave him praise would be joining a rabble clamoring for his blood, crying: "Crucify him! Crucify him!"

The procession, sent down [illegible] of Olives [illegible] way. Part of [illegible] in front [illegible] the main [illegible] valley and up to the gate of the city, the leaders shouting loud in [illegible] its old enthusiasm. Marching [illegible] the highway, [illegible] garments down in the way and [illegible] branches from the trees, and [illegible] to make a royal road for [illegible] Lord of glory. All the city was moved. "Who is this?" The multitude answered, This is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

In the temple Jesus was surrounded by his real subjects, little children, for had he not said, of such is the kingdom of heaven? They were shouting Hosanna to the Son of David, and the chief priests and the scribes were sore displeased, and gave voice to their objection, but Jesus only called to their mind what they must have read in the prophets many a time: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." Then the Lord began to drive out those who had desecrated his Father's house, thus teaching the children and the assembled multitude the respect due to the house of worship.

The whole incident shows us the character of the "King of kings and Lord of lords." His kingdom is a spiritual kingdom, and there is no end to the bounds of his domain; yet he is meek and lowly, and took on himself the form of a servant. He moves among those who care him not, for "the common people heard him gladly." "And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them." Works of love and mercy were his even to the cross.

This King they were trying to so much honor and praise is our King. We are subject to him, soul and spirit. We praise him every day for his goodness to us. Our souls praise him within us, when we see or hear of manifestations of his power. We are happy to know that he will come again, and that there will be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The people praised him shouting hosannas, but he was sorrowful, and we sorrow with him, because we know of the sad end of his sad and lonely life. "There were some to pity." His closest followers could not understand when he told them of what a few days would bring to him. He was too unselfish to force the truth upon them amid their joy at his entering the city as a king. We can give him our tenderest love and sympathy, for all his suffering was for us, that we could be with him in that glory that will follow.

Jesus left the temple and went out of the city and to the humble home in Bethany, where he knew he was ever welcome.

In closing the study of such an exciting lesson, let us leave our Lord in the pleasant home of Mary and Martha, and let us rejoice to know that there are many homes where Jesus is ever a welcome guest. When the day is done and evening shadows gather, and the sisters with the brother come around that sacred

WHY HE DID NOT DRINK.

The other day, four young men were riding in a car, chatting merrily together. At last one of them said: "Boys, I think it's time for drinks." Two of them consented; the other shook his head and said, "No, thank you."

"What!" exclaimed his companion, "have you become pious? Are you going to preach? Do you think you will become a missionary?"

"No, fellows," he replied, "I am not specially pious, and I may not become a missionary, but I have determined not to drink another drop, and I will tell you why: I had some business in the city with an old pawnbroker, and as I stood before his counter talking about it, there came in a young man about my age, and threw down upon the counter a little bundle. When the pawnbroker opened it, he found it was a pair of baby shoes, with the bottoms a trifle worn. The old pawnbroker seemed to have some heart left in him, and he said:

"Look here, you ought not to sell your baby's shoes for drink."

"Never mind; baby is at home dead, and does not need the shoes. Give me the money for a drink."

"Now, fellows, I have a wife and baby at home myself, and when I saw what liquor could do in degrading that husband and father, I made up my mind that, God helping me, not another drop of that stuff would pass my lips again."

HELP YOURSELF.

Be self-reliant. Help yourself. Do not be a mere dependent on some one else. Accept assistance if it is offered, and you need it; but if you have no one to help you, do not despond or despair, nerve yourself to the conflict, go to work, do what you can, and the best you can, and continue to do it, and you will succeed. It takes some strain on brain and muscle to develop men, and to increase their power. The best thing for a man sometimes, and especially a young man, is to be thrown on his own resources—to be made to feel that he must do or die—that he must tax his brain and muscle, that he must plan and labor to secure even the common comforts of life.

We do not know what strength we possess, or what efforts we can put forth, until we are put to the test. Every development of strength, and every successful effort put forth, increases our confidence of others in us, and places us on a higher level. "God helps them that help themselves," and a man who will not help himself, who will not do what he can to succeed in life, has no right to expect either God or man to help him.

The question for you to consider is not what you could do under circumstances, but what you can do under the circumstances that actually surround you, and with the appliances at your command. No labor that is right and lawful is dishonorable. Better soil your hands than your reputation. If you would reach the top of the ladder, you must begin at the lowest round. If you do not take the first step, you are not likely to take the last.

Go, then, to work. If you cannot get what you desire, take the best you can get. If you have no opportunity to work with your hands, work with your head. Employ your spare time in improving your mind. "Knowledge is power." The more you know, the better you will be prepared for work, and the wider the field of usefulness will open up before you. Never think of failure. A man who does the best he can, and perseveres, will never fail. Determine, then, whether others help you or not, that you will do what you can, and help yourself.—Unknown.

OUR MISSION TO THE HEBREWS.

By Rev. Julius Magath.

In the year 1890 the General Conference authorized the General Board of Missions to establish a mission to the Jews within the bounds of our Church. The sainted Dr. J. O. Branch of the South Georgia Conference, who during his whole life was intensely interested in the salvation of the Jews, notified the writer that the time had at last come for him to resign his chair at Emory College in order to enter on the work for which he had been longing—namely, to preach the gospel to his brethren after the flesh. Dr. Branch added that he expected the General Board of Missions, at the coming session, to make proper provision for the support of the work.

Unfortunately the General Board of Missions was in debt and could not at that time see its way to project any new work, and it was only at the session of the General Board at Waco, Tex., in May, 1901, that steps were taken to inaugurate a mission to the Jews, and the writer was appointed as general missionary for the whole Church.

This work, which is new and beset with difficulties, was undertaken with faith and confidence—faith in the power of the gospel, which the great apostle declared is to the Jew first, and with confidence not only in the help of the omnipotent God, but also in the Methodist Church, which is in this world to spread the gospel to the uttermost parts, and therefore also to the Jews.

Many have supposed that the missionary would have great difficulty in gaining access to the Jews—that they would reject his ministry and would not afford him any opportunity to present Christ to them; but this has not been the case, for not only have large numbers of Jews attended the services arranged for them in the different churches of our connection, but he has been invited to the homes, stores, and even to their synagogues, where, on occasions, he was able to declare to whole Jewish congregations what true Christianity is, and his words were received with marked signs of approbation.

Another sign of progress is the fact that, whereas hitherto the Jews were never considered in our plans of evangelization, but were altogether ignored, in many communities where your missionary was enabled to visit special services have since been arranged by our pastors, having the special object of reaching the Jews with the gospel of our Saviour, and many are the prayers now ascending to the throne of God for the salvation of Christ's own kinsmen according to flesh, where, before, the Jew was not mentioned except, perhaps, to say unkind things about him.

It is my purpose to call the attention of the whole Church to the following facts:

1. Owing to the terrible persecution of the Jews in Russia and other European countries very large numbers of them will come to America, and through the efforts of the Jewish Removal Society, having as its object the scattering of the new-comers over the whole country instead of their being compelled to live in a few large cities, very large numbers will come to our Southern States in fact, are already doing so. If we include some Western Conferences, we already have within the jurisdiction of our church a half-million Jews.

2. These Jews come here with distorted views about Christianity, believing that the Christians hate them. Our duty is to clearly show them that Christianity is love; and how shall they know it unless we take pains to demonstrate it to them?

3. These Jews are as accessible as any other people, and where the work has been pursued, as in many parts of Europe by Protestant Christianity, the results have been marvelous. The last century has witnessed a very large ingathering of Jews in many of the Protestant Churches. There have also, within the last few years, been conversions of Jews in our own Church.

4. The attention of all our ministers is called to the fact that necessarily there will come to our charge some who, claiming to be converted Jews, will seek to gain the advantages of our Church, usually to preach and to take collections. Your missionary is in possession of data regarding Hebrew missionary societies and their agents in this and in European countries. This information is at the disposal of our preachers who desire it before extending the privileges and giving the indorsements of the Church to utter strangers.

5. Your missionary stands ready at all times to cooperate with you in all your efforts to bring the Jews to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. In many of our charges there are converted Jews, and he will be glad to hear of it, and he would also like to keep a register of their names and addresses, and thus keep in touch with them.

We have our own mission to the Jews, under the care of our own Mission Board, and the prayers and efforts of all the Church are asked in this field of Christian effort.

In a recent issue of the Epworth Era, under the head of "A Long-Deferred Obligation," the following editorial notice was taken of the Hebrew mission, and it is prayerfully presented to the Church: "It is probably not fully understood among our people that we have had, during the past few years, a mission to the Jews. Dr. Julius Magath, formerly Professor of Modern Languages in Emory College, Oxford, Ga., has been commissioned with a gospel message to his own race and former coreligionists. He has pursued his calling with enthusiasm and ardor born of a race of love of the kind St. Paul felt when he uttered his perplexing words: 'I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to flesh.' (Rom. ix. 3.) Students of prophecy, and especially of the new Testament prediction, have always felt the keenest interest in the Jews and their relation to the kingdom of God. St. Paul's vision of the future was very clear, and he perceived that Israel, fallen through the rejection of Christ, was yet to rise again for the bringing of the kingdom of God. (Rom. xi. 15.) They who in the apostle's time and until now read the law with veiled face shall one day see clearly the veil being taken away, and, having turned to the Lord, will become the great missionaries of the cross. Then will be the time of the fullness of the Gentiles. But how little we are doing! One missionary going up and down among his people, with time and opportunity for addressing them at meetings and writing for them, and, of course, without facilities for organizing or gathering the fruits! He is accomplishing much. We write these things in order that the mission to the Jews may be brought to the notice of the Church, and that it may be the largest subject and most earnest prayers for the missionary who has for its end the conversion of the people through whom came the oracles of God, who gave the fathers, from whom came Christ, who is Lord over all, blessed forever."

God, in making His covenant with Abraham, promised His blessing on all who should bless Israel. May this blessing be ours, by reason of the blessing we shall be to Israel in bringing them to the realization of the truth as it is in Jesus.

SUGGESTIONS.

Let no day pass without personal secret communication with God.

Begin each day by taking counsel from the Word of God, if but one verse while you are dressing.

Put away all bitter feelings and brooding over slights or wrongs, no matter from whom received.

Have on your heart some person or cause for which you are pleading God's blessings each day.

Let no opportunity pass to say a kind word, do some kind deed, or at least smile upon those you meet. Do this, not affectedly, but sincerely, as unto the Lord.

Guard well the door of your lips that no unchaste word, jest or story, no slander or cutting remarks, no irreverent or untruthful statement, shall pass out.

Remember each day that Christ will surely come, suddenly come, quickly come; and it may be this day will determine how his coming will find us, as it must to thousands.—Exchange.

Methodist Schools For Methodist Youth.

BY DR. JOHN T. SAWYER.

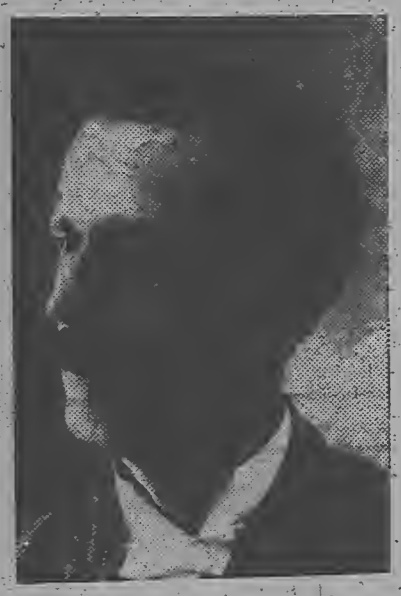
The youth of this age, and the youth of the Church, and the graduates of our schools have largely in their hands the shaping of the world's character in the not far future. That will become just about what to-day's young men and young women resolve and prepare to make it. In the strength and wisdom which God supplies, and with entire consecration of all their powers, they are to carry this world forward and upward in every righteous thing. While all are required to work for the betterment of the world and the steady uplifting of all that is human, the young men and young women of our land are confronted with problems to be solved, work to be done and plans to be succeeded, that are peculiarly and altogether their own.

The responsibility in this matter is mainly upon the young manhood and womanhood of Christendom, and it is because of their youth, and because they have a future; and the accomplishment of their purpose will cost them the sacrifice of precious time, devotion of intellect and consecration of heart and life. It is not to be disputed that every man, no matter what his age, environment or advantages, should make the most possible of himself, and the wise in State and Church see, therefore, that the young certainly should be given every chance in life. The State should see to it that all her children have the best opportunities for such development and culture as will bring them into a high standard of citizenship. The Church of God is bound to go further, and give her sons and daughters every facility for the growth of Christian character, along with the development of body and brain. The hope and future mainstay of the Church militant, and the high expectation that our Christian civilization will some day dominate the world, are in the youth who go from Christian homes to Christian colleges, and thence, fully equipped, into the arena and battles of life.

Undoubtedly, the Church schools and colleges must be maintained by the churches and patronized by the Christian parents of the land. God enjoined upon his ancient people the duty of daily instructing the children of the Church in the way of life, and to-day, in the light of the Old and New Testaments, Christians are obligated to the self-same duty. It is in the line of duty, as God would have them to perform it, for parents to supplement their home instructions, unto which they are divinely obligated, by all possible gracious influences. There are good people who fail to see, until it is too late, the tendency of godless schools and teachers to dampen, and sometimes destroy, the religious life and training they enjoyed at home.

From twelve to twenty, young people are peculiarly susceptible to the influence of those around them; and it is, therefore, not at all uncommon for a boy or girl to go off to school from the home of piety, and return after graduation minus the religion they possessed when under the parental roof. Many young men and young women have drifted away for life and forever from their childhood faith, because their parents were not careful to place them at an institution where the Faculty were pronouncedly and practically religious. As we look about us in this country of ours and behold the havoc being made of old and young by the forces of evil; and as we remember that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," we cannot fail to consider the Church of God as blind, indeed, if she rally not for the honor of her King and the saving of men, all the forces for good that God has put into her hands. The preaching in the churches should be strong, evangelical, doctrinal and practical, and the teaching and training had in our Church schools should make for the thorough development of the whole man—physical, mental and spiritual.

Our Methodist people should loyally and liberally support their own institutions of learning; and they should demand that in those institutions the highest standards of work in every department be maintained, and that there shall be thrown around the student body the active influences of a sane and practical Christianity. A hearty rallying to their own institutions in the education of their children would solve some troublesome problems for our Methodist people.



CENTENARY COLLEGE.

"In my late canvass over the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere—in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all useful, dignified lines of life, are her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say, Centenary College."—Senator Murphy J. Foster.

"Centenary is an ideal Christian college. I have traveled all over this Southland, and have seen but one other like it. It is academic."—General John B. Gordon.

"If I had one hundred sons, I would send ninety-nine of them to Centenary College, and perhaps the other one to Vanderbilt University."—Captain J. N. Pharr.

"There ought to be men in South Louisiana or elsewhere in the State to put a cash endowment of at least $100,000 behind Miller and the College."—Dr. John T. Sawyer.

REV. C. C. MILLER,
President Centenary College.

In 1825 the State of Louisiana established a college at Jackson, La., and called it "The College of Louisiana." In 1845 the State sold this college at public auction, Judge Edward McGehee being the highest bidder at $10,000. He owned it three years. By creating a self-perpetuating Board of Trustees, composed of members of the Methodist Church, he made the college substantially a Methodist college. He called it "The Centenary College of Louisiana," and vested the title to the property in the Board of Trustees, where it remained until June, 1906. The Board then, at its regular meeting, transferred the title of the college to the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and it is now the property of that Conference.

Centenary still produces great men. They are not all in the past. Some of the most distinguished men in the Louisiana Conference are graduates of Centenary College. Some of the most useful missionaries in foreign fields are graduates of Centenary College. Many of the best citizens of the State are graduates and students of Centenary College. They are found in the professions, on the farms, in the pulpits. They are found "in all the useful and dignified lines of life." Among the distinguished of the past, Centenary's students take high national rank—such as Jefferson Davis, Judah P. Benjamin and others.

"Centenary is an ideal Christian College." It stands for the highest morality and Christianity. Its environment is unsurpassed; there are no saloons or any places of evil in the town of Jackson, La., or the Parish of East Feliciana. The people are refined, cultured and Christian.

Centenary has never had a moneyed chance. If it had one-third of the endowment that other colleges have, it could give free tuition. It has every necessary requirement for a great institution, except money. Its buildings are the finest in the South; this is the opinion of all the distinguished men who have been here to lecture. Money is what it needs, and is the only thing it needs. The wonder is that it has lived and done such magnificent work with no endowment.

Dr. Sawyer is right. But even thirty or forty thousand dollars into good real estate, bringing in a permanent and substantial income for Centenary, and Centenary College would surpass its own reputation for the great work which it has done for Christian civilization.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE

By Prof. James Elliott Walmsley.

The first session of Millsaps College opened Sept. 29, 1892, and the fifteenth session will open Sept. 26, 1906. These fourteen years have been sufficient to answer the question whether a Methodist college was needed in Mississippi. To-day Millsaps College ranks as one of the strongest colleges in the South, as well as in the Methodist Church. Beginning with a faculty of five members and a student body of a little over a hundred, it has to-day a faculty of nine full professors and six assistants in the Literary Department, in addition to its Law faculty, with an average enrollment of 270 students. Its first faculty was composed of men who have since reached high rank in the educational world, and the same care is still exercised in selecting the men who so largely shape the characters of our future leaders of thought. Of the first faculty only the president, Dr. W. B. Murrah, still remains with the College. Two of the present members are doctors of philosophy of our leading universities, and three others are candidates for this degree. All of them are specialists in their departments—for instance, one member of the Law faculty has held the same position at the University of Mississippi, in addition to being Chancellor of the University; another is Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State.

DR. W. B. MURRAH,
President Millsaps College.

In the past fourteen years about two hundred and seventy-five graduates have gone out from Millsaps, and it is safe to say that there is absolutely no other institution whose graduates in the last fourteen years have met with more marked and deserved success than have these alumni, who are now winning their way not only in Mississippi and the South, but in every part of the world. Millsaps College could well afford to stake her whole future on the record of her old students. While not sectarian in her instruction, and while counting among her students adherents of every faith, Millsaps College is a Methodist college. Her Board of Trustees, of which Bishop C. B. Galloway is President, are elected by the two Mississippi Conferences. Every member of the faculty is not simply a Christian, but is a Christian worker. It is rare for a student to spend nine months at Millsaps without identifying himself with the Church and the Young Men's Christian Association. The executive officers of this Association consider the branch at Millsaps College one of the best and most active among the colleges of the country. The proportion of the students who are engaged in Bible study classes, in addition to the college class in Bible, is the largest in the South.

The grounds and buildings are valued at about $120,000, exclusive of the new Carnegie-Millsaps Library, which will add $30,000 to the institution. This new Library will be completed early in the coming session. The productive endowment is $150,000, so that the College represents a $300,000 plant, devoted to the one purpose of Christian education. These figures, when analyzed, mean that a very small part of the necessary expense of each student's education is paid by his own tuition fees.

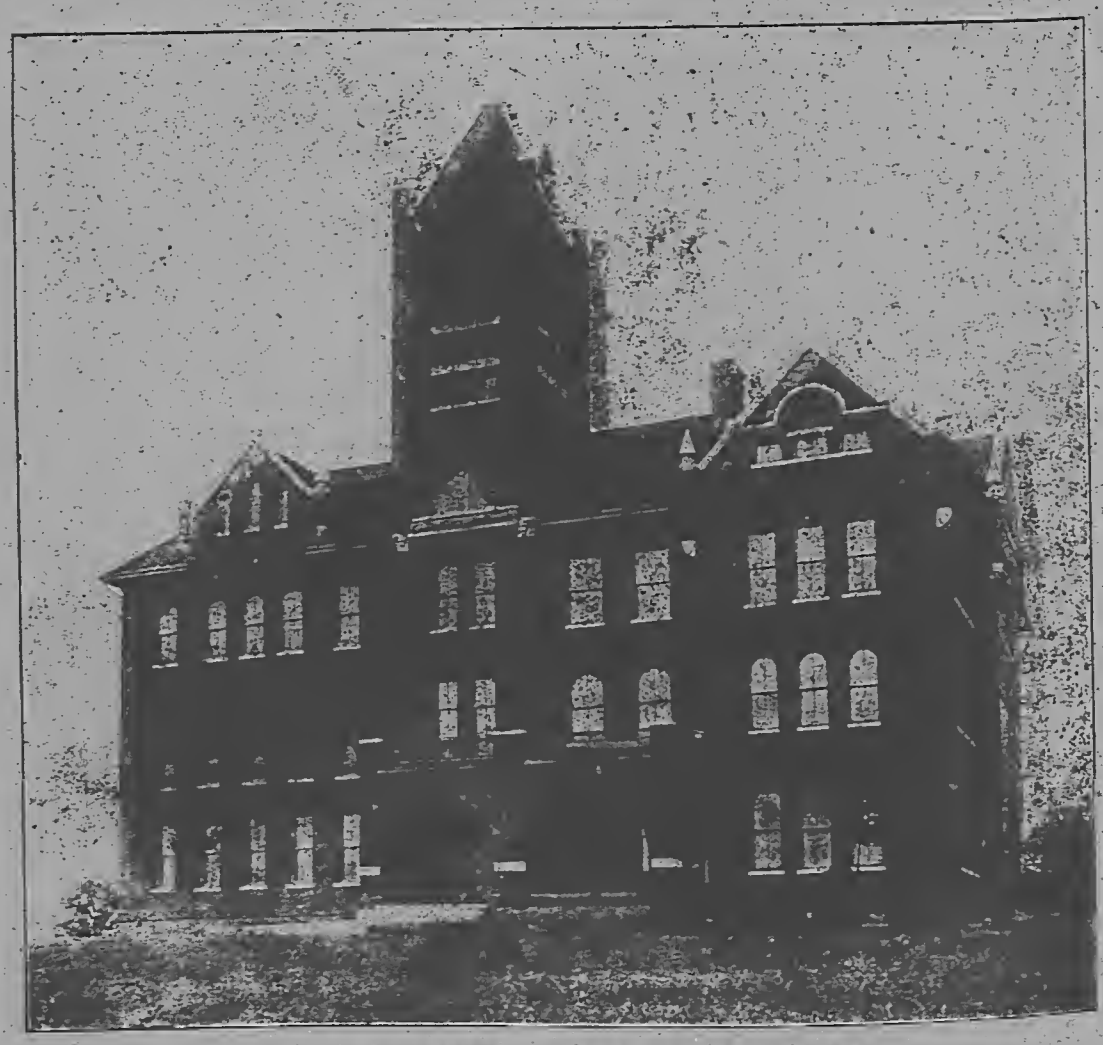
The present educational revival all over the country, and especially in the South, means increased opportunities for Millsaps College, but it also means increased competition with the colleges of our sister denominations, and also with State institutions that have overflowing coffers.

The College can continue doing good work as it is, but in order to continue doing better work than other institutions whose funds are increasing, her resources must be increased. She must represent not $300,000, but $500,000. And this is a crisis that cannot be postponed. To lose her leading position now would mean a struggle of years to put herself once more in the lead.

A PLEA FOR MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

For days my heart has been troubled, and there has been a still, small voice within me crying: "Write: Mississippi Methodists, rouse ye in the name of God!" I have tried to crush that voice, saying, "I have never written; let those who are capable write," but that voice, like Banquo's ghost, will not down, and only cries the louder: "Write!" "Write!!" "Write!!!"

Why is it that I should be so disturbed by such a cry? It is because the Methodists of Mississippi, the people who are nearest my heart, are failing in their duty. Indeed, they seem to have forgotten the word, and to have sunken into a lethargic state, that is painful to contemplate.



What is the one great institution that stands alone as the source of the power that has never been placed in the hands of the Church? Will not everyone, without a moment's hesitancy, exclaim with me: "Millsaps College!" It is the Christian training school for the boys of our State, and if we are not to educate our boys at our denominational schools, then we Methodists had best fold our hands and take a back seat, and say to other denominations: "Go forward; we have done as much as we care to do."

Some may say I am overlooking Grenada, but I am not. One thing at a time. This is our golden opportunity for Millsaps. Great things are just beyond it for Grenada.

If we expect to do a great work for the Master, if we expect to be great as a church, then I say to you, our strength lies in the Christian education we give our boys and girls.

I think I can say truly, from experience in my own home, that our boys gained more denominational pride in the few years spent at Millsaps than in all the years of their lives before. This institution is doing a great work for the Methodists of Mississippi.

But what are they doing for it? Ah! that is the sore point; that is the place where they are round napping. It was my privilege, a few days ago, to listen to Dr. Lowrey of Mississippi College, in his appeal to the Baptists of the State—not in behalf of their college, but in behalf of themselves. He showed them so plainly that there was no place for doubt that they were not giving to the College, but to themselves, and that they should receive on the investment interest an hundred-fold. He did not ask them to give, but proved to them that they must give. Right here I want to say that every time Dr. Lowrey delivers this address, for his college the Methodist pastor of the town should turn his congregation loose, and let them hear him. I do not doubt that every Methodist will come away with a fixed purpose to help Millsaps College ten times more than they ever expected to do before.

It is well to know what others are doing. It is an inherent quality of the human race not to want to be outstripped, and when you hear what our Baptist brethren are doing, and the difficulties they are facing, and how nobly they are giving and under what superior advantages we are working, Brother Methodists, you will be ashamed of yourself. I wonder if the Methodists of the State realize they have a Major Millsaps, who makes it possible for every dollar they give to mean two for Millsaps College? The Baptist Educational Board of New York gives the Baptists one-third of a dollar for every dollar they raise, and, even then, they are outstripping us in a way of which the Methodists surely have no conception.

Let me give some startling illustrations: The Methodist Church at Hattiesburg is a stronger church financially than the Baptist. Dr. Murrah went down and preached to them, trying to raise his endowment fund, and came back with $30 for Millsaps College. A few Sundays later Dr. Lowrey preached to the Baptists at the same place, and came away with $3,000 for his college. Thirty dollars against four thousand! And from a weaker congregation! How does that sound to you, Brother Methodists?

Then, again, Dr. Murrah preached at Aberdeen and came away with $26, and Dr. Lowrey, without even going there, was sent $400. Something is wrong, something is terribly wrong!

Now, you might do nothing else for a week, but try to convince me that the Methodists of Hattiesburg and Aberdeen are less liberal than the Baptists of these places, even with such startling figures against them, and all your work would be of no avail, for I do not believe it, and I will not believe it. They have not been appealed to in the right way. I want Dr. Murrah to go to them again, or send someone else. Perhaps he may intend to go back to these places, and the sermons mentioned above were only preparatory to the final one to come.

And you may say Dr. Murrah is getting up that endowment fund alright. This may be true, and if so, and at this rate, he ought to apologize to the Methodists of the State for asking them for only $100,000. Perhaps these cases mentioned are exceptional ones, and others churches are giving by the thousands, still I believe I can say, in the name of the Methodists of Mississippi, that we are just a little ashamed to be asked for the same amount of money that the Baptists are giving, and we have two-thirds the advantage. Can't you ask us for $300,000, thereby placing us on the same footing with them? If you do, and if our people are aroused as they are aroused you will get it.

Let us have a Millsaps Day, and let us see how many Millsaps boys will volunteer to work for their college on that day! With hardly an exception, every boy who has ever been a student of Millsaps College, and breathed its inspiring atmosphere, should give at least $100 on that day. Give them five years to pay it in, as the Baptists are doing. If there is a student of Millsaps so small that he cannot give $20 a year to this glorious cause, we shall have to blush, and say, with Shakspeare, "God made him, therefore let him pass for a man." Some will give a great deal more.

I wonder if everyone who reads this doesn't think of it only as an appeal to the boys and men of our State. Now, I have a secret to tell you. This article is not being written by a man at all, but by a fatherless country girl, who has very little of this world's goods. However, she expects to give $100 to Millsaps' endowment fund, and I will tell you why. Dr. Lowrey told of how this Baptist girl, and that Baptist girl—oh, ever so many of them—were saying, "Dr. Lowrey, put me down for $100." Now, it will never do for us, young women of the Methodist Church, to be outdone by these Baptist girls, so I hope a great many of you will say with me, "Dr. Murrah, put me down for $100, please." I say, all honor to our Baptist brethren who are rallying so nobly to Dr. Lowrey's call for help!

Our Dr. Murrah is a great man; he is a great Methodist; he is a great educator. We love him, we honor him, we are proud of him. Then let us rally to the support of the institution that he is so ably guiding in its upward and onward course.

With Major Millsaps' help, we must do greater things!

Men, women and children, of the Methodist Church of Mississippi, I appeal to you. Let your watchword be:

Millsaps! Millsaps!! Millsaps!!!

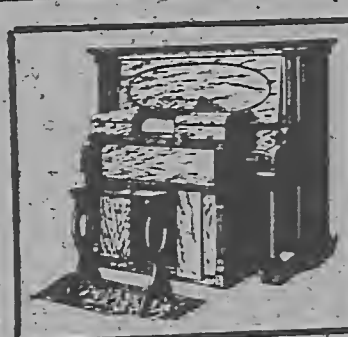
A man who shuns work through shame will be compelled some day to face a state of poverty that will make him a shame to himself.

TO LOUISIANA METHODISTS.

Dear Brethren: At the request of Dr. Jno. R. Stewart, the successor of Dr. Watkins as secretary of the Endowment Fund for Superannuates, I am acting as Conference Secretary, and shall in a day or two mail statements to each subscriber, stating amounts now due. Should any one receive statement of amount not yet due, he will please accept it as a reminder, and be ready to meet note at Conference or when due.



Many said to me at Conference, "I have overlooked this; had I known of it some months ago I would have arranged for it." Recalling these speeches, I act as you requested me to do.

Remittances may be sent in at any time from now on until Conference. Respectfully,

JNO. F. FOSTER.

THE PREACHER.

Pre-eminently the preacher is to be a fire alarm. Now what is a fire alarm for? Is it intended to soothe people to sleep and wrap the firemen in pleasant dreams, while the city is burning? To hear some people who presume to direct preachers, and to judge preachers, one would think that a preacher had mistaken his calling when he does not sing lullabies in every morning sermon, and serenade his congregation to the accompaniment of sweet music when he preaches in the evening. Is it a time for serenading when the hotel is on fire? Is it a time for delicacy when the guests, both men and women, have been aroused out of sleep by the cry of "Fire, fire?" Is it a time to mince matters when men and women are being consumed by the fires of open and secret sins? There is a demand for preachers who will be true to their high calling. Men who will not be silent when they ought to speak. Men who will cry aloud and spare not, lifting up their voices like a trumpet against the sins of the people, even if it should alienate the unregenerate who are members of the church, and bring the wrath of some adulterous Herod down upon their heads. Men who can speak louder than a whisper when sin needs to be rebuked. Men who can be as tender with a penitent as a mother with a babe, but who can be as bold as a lion when necessity requires it. God give us men like this.—Selected.

MONTROSE TRAINING SCHOOL.

HISTORY OF THE MONTROSE HIGH SCHOOL.

BY REV. WALDO W. MOORE, PRINCIPAL.

Three epochs have marked the Montrose High School. It began its career in a log house under the leadership of John Newton Waddell, who afterwards became a Presbyterian minister, and was one of the chancellors of the University of Mississippi. The first log house was too small, and so rapidly did the school grow that it was enlarged, and then a new log house was built, and that enlarged, and yet the buildings were inadequate to accommodate the pupils who came from far and near to get the tutorage of this talented man of God. Doctor Waddell gave up his position here and accepted the Chair of Ancient Languages in the University of Mississippi in the year 1848. After this the school was taught through intervening years, but it was not until the year 1884 that it began again to attract public attention. Mr. W. B. Massey revived the work, and placed the school on a firm footing. It was very soon voluntarily offered to the Brandon District by the local patrons of the school. A substantial frame building was erected and donated to the M. E. Church, South. It was chartered in 1888. Thus ends the second epoch.

REV. WALDO W. MOORE,

Two years ago the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad located a depot about five hundred yards from the old school building. Such an educational spirit had permeated the minds and hearts of the people of Montrose that they were unwilling to lose any opportunity in advancing the interest of this institution of the Church. So they appealed to the Methodists of the district, now the Forest District, and also appealed to the Methodists of the Mississippi Conference, to erect a new building, and such a building as would in some way represent the Church and Christian education, for which this institution should stand. As a result of this spirit and this appeal to the Methodists of Mississippi, the third epoch of the school finds it housed in a handsome, substantial brick building, and the school has also been transferred from the Forest District to the Mississippi Conference, and was adopted by the Conference as the Mississippi Conference Training School. This institution is needed in this part of the State, being the only school owned and operated by any Protestant denomination in the eastern half of the State, and it is needed because of the work it proposes to do.

THE NEED OF A METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL IN MISSISSIPPI.

BY W. B. HALL, B.A.

As to what kind of school a child shall attend, in view of life's great work, is a question not likely to be overestimated. England's greatness among the nations of the earth may not be said to have been won so much on battle fields and council chambers, or even amid the classic halls of Cambridge or Oxford, but at Eton and Harrow, the great training schools of England.

We have at Montrose, Miss., the only training school of the Mississippi Conference. It is located on the M. J. & K. C. Railroad in the southeastern part of the State.

The purpose of the school is not to take the place of a college, but to prepare boys for the sophomore class of our higher institutions; or, in other words, to do the same grade of work as the typical training schools of Tennessee and Kentucky are doing for Vanderbilt and other institutions of similar standing. The work done by even the best high schools of the State will hardly compare with that of the training school's higher worth. Normalism is not the kind of education the youth should have because it presupposes a mental discipline and preparation that the youth does not possess. We have a large, substantial brick building and a faculty of six or seven from as many representative colleges of the South.

Methodism has here a great opportunity. Coming, as I am, from one of the older States of the higher North, I am surprised to find such an earnest educational spirit; so many people who are waking up to a realization of the educational needs of the time. Shall we lose our opportunity, and abandon what can be made a spiritual and educational birthright?

It is earnestly hoped to make our educational efforts Christian; to set before our pupils high and noble ideals, and to lead them to know the new life of Christ.

Montrose is a town of three good churches, well known for good health and morals. The outlook for a good year is encouraging. With the help of our preachers and people, we can build here a great school for God and our country.

LET US ENDOW OUR SCHOOLS.

I have read with much interest and profit in the last Methodist Review the great article of Bishop E. R. Hendrix on "College Endowment." For some time I have been impressed with the fact that if we have schools worthy of the great Church that we represent, they must be endowed. But this article has overwhelmed me with the fact that if we maintain real colleges for boys and girls, we must endow them.

It has been thought that a woman's college could get along without endowment, but if it does the real, honest, faithful and thorough work that the Church ought to demand (and it should not receive any other kind), it must be endowed.

When will the great Methodist Church of Mississippi ever awake to a realization of this fact? I know that these things are not ordinarily accomplished in a few years. Sometimes it takes centuries, but it would seem, with the enlightened conscience, increased intelligence and wealth of the Church, we would move more rapidly to the accomplishment of the end. There are many of our Methodists whom God has greatly blessed that are able to contribute in the thousands, and they may be found by the thousand who can contribute the hundreds, and there are none, as Dr. Barton has suggested, but that are able to contribute their one and two dollars.

Thus, in a short time, the $100,000 would be raised for Grenada, and Millsaps would have her $500,000. In addition to this, they would be supplied with all the buildings and equipment necessary to do the high-grade work they are now doing, but under the greatest disadvantages. Nothing but the Church could do the work at so small a cost, and this is done by the few carrying the load. We may not always find the few willing and ready to do it, and if we could, the many ought not to be willing for them to do it.

Before we will be thoroughly aroused to a discharge of duty, we must have a more intelligent conviction and conscience at some points. First, if Christian education, in the true sense of the word, is ever done, the Church must do it. Second, God has as truly called us to educate as he has to preach, in fact we cannot carry a complete Gospel without educating. Third, there is not much of a future for the Church that does not educate.

If these are facts and could be laid upon the hearts of preachers and laymen, then the end would soon be accomplished. We are not loyal. Many of our preachers never preach on Christian education, though the Discipline requires that they do so once a year in "every congregation." Nor do they advertise the schools, nor strive to turn the boys to Millsaps and the girls to Grenada. Many of our people hardly know of these schools. Laymen persist in sending their sons and daughters to state schools, saying that they are "seeking thoroughness." They will not learn that our Millsaps and Grenada Colleges are doing a work equal to any done in the state institutions.

Let us pray that the Church may be aroused to the performance of her duty. Yours,

J. H. MITCHELL.

It is our business to seek safety by standing on the rock. We gain nothing in efforts to determine the security of the foundation. God will look after that.

JOINING THE CHURCH.

In almost every place men and women are found who profess to be Christians, but for some reason are not members of the church. One insists that he can be as good a Christian out of the church as he can in it. This is doubtful because a part of the duty of a Christian is to identify one's self with the disciples of Christ. Those who refuse to do this disobey the Head of the Church. The church has been established in the world for a great and good purpose. Among other things it is the purpose of the church to afford its members an opportunity to edify and help one another. This they can do only while they are united in the fellowship of the church.

It may be taken for granted that when one becomes a Christian he will desire to unite in this fellowship. If anyone does not desire to do so there is a strong evidence that he is not really a Christian. A man who is at heart an American will naturally desire to dwell among Americans, to share the honors and privileges of citizenship, and to be known outwardly as an American. If he refuses to become an American outwardly it will hardly be believed that he is one inwardly.

Joining the church is a testimony. The simple act of uniting with the church of Christ is strong testimony in favor of the name of Christ, the cause of Christ and the people of Christ. If membership in the church had no other significance than a mere testimony it would be exceedingly valuable. To be a member of a Christian church is to say to the world: "The gospel is true. The salvation of Christ is real. The spiritual life through Jesus Christ is the chief thing in this world. The Lord's side is the best side." Not to be a church member is to say to the world: "As for me, I have no faith in Christ, I do not value his religion. The kingdom of God has no reality for me."

But this is not all. Members of the church help one another to fight the good fight of faith. One receives encouragement from his brethren and gives encouragement to all that are banded together in this fellowship. He gives a good example to his children and neighbors. Few of those who are not church members would have their children follow their example. In most cases they not only are willing to have their children join the church, but they earnestly desire them to do so.

The church cannot save us. Those who depend on the church for salvation go to the other extreme. But many a soul has found salvation in the church. Thousands have been led to Christ through the church. The songs of Zion and the preaching of the Word in the house of God have brought many from darkness to light. The church is the chief agency of benevolence in the world. It is also an educational agency, and without the church the world would never be taught the knowledge of the Lord. To join the church is to give encouragement and aid to all these movements.—Christian Advocate (N. Y.)

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

A soldier, riding over the scene of a battle-field when the engagement was over, came, as he picked his steps among the dead, to a body, which, stirring, showed some signs of life. The bleeding form wore the dress of a foe. Regardless of that, he said to his attendant, "Give him a draught of wine." As the officer stooped to do so, the wounded soldier, discovering through the mist that was gathering on his dying eye in this good Samaritan the general of the troops against whom he had been fighting, raised himself on his elbow, drew a pistol, and with deadly hate, fired it at his benefactor's head. Happily, the bullet missed its mark; and the general, as soon as he recovered from his surprise, with a forgiveness truly magnanimous, said, "Give it to him all the same."—Southern Churchman.

A CAMPAIGN FOR CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The matter of Christian education needs to be impressed upon the minds and hearts of all the people. General education never interested the country more at any time than it does to-day. This is well; but there is danger of forgetting that which gives to education its great importance. Learning from text books in the common schools, or the great universities, does not constitute the whole of education. God must be recognized, and man's duty to him must be enforced, else education will be of little worth to the individual or the State.

While we have no fight to make on the public schools, or the public school system, we feel free to say that the State falls short of giving our boys and girls such education as they need to fully qualify them for all the God-imposed duties of life.

Our government is such that, while it guarantees to every man the fullest exercise of religious liberty, and protects him in his rights, it cannot undertake to educate his sons and daughters in any form of religion with the people's money; and our public schools, while not immoral in any sense, nor godless, as the Roman Catholics declare, cannot go beyond instruction in the elements of morality, and the reading of a short lesson from the Bible—not even that far in many schools. And we hesitate not to say that institutions, whether public or private, that fail to inculcate man's relation and duty to God, and obedience to the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ, whatever else they may be and do, are not qualified to fully direct and develop the minds and hearts of children.

Of course, if the State had no use for women, except for business and school teaching, and no use for men except to make voters, and soldiers, tradesmen and manufacturers, etc., a purely secular education would suffice. But the State wants wives and mothers, and godless and irreligious wives and mothers are not the kind to train boys and girls and properly guide the household. The State needs men who fear God and keep his commandments, men able to instruct the people in righteousness, and to stand as the mouthpiece for God at all times. The public school system contemplates nothing of this kind, and given the exclusive right to educate the people, two generations from to-day would find the country under the domination of infidelity, if not outright Atheism.

Whether publicly argued or not, the State seems to act on the principle that religion should be taught in the home. Certainly that will not be denied, but statesmen have only a slight conception of the working of human nature, if they suppose the religious impressions made upon a little child in the home will withstand the onslaughts of the world, unless they are reinforced in the schoolroom, when their minds begin to develop. It would require but few years to undermine the faith of a child who meets no encouragement at all of a religious character in the schoolroom. Even now the salvation of our children lies in the fact that the schools, as a rule, are under the direction of religious men and women, who are several degrees better, in their religious make-up than the law demands. If the law allowed immoral men and women to teach our schools, the outlook would be infinitely worse than it is.

As we see the matter, schools of a distinctly religious character are absolutely required, if Christian people meet the demands of the times. That Christian labors under a strong delusion who supposes he has done his full duty by his children when he has paid his taxes, part of which goes to support the public schools. And to let a few dollars stand between him and the education of his children at a first-class religious school, shows his indifference to the highest interests of the future of his family and the State.

To Methodists, we would say: Educate your children in Methodist schools, not as a matter of church pride, but as a matter of principle. If you believe Methodist doctrines and polity are worth preserving, send your children where these things are respected, if not directly and systematically taught. A Methodist school, with Methodist teachers, will naturally influence students towards the Methodist Church. Years ago, a young man whose father was a Baptist, and whose mother was a Methodist, was sent to a Methodist college. In the course of the college days the young man was converted during a revival, and joined the Methodist Church. The father was grieved, and said to his wife: "That is what I get by sending my boy to a Methodist school." The mother felt more than she expressed, and quietly replied, "Yes, and that is what I get."

ABOUT MINISTERIAL DRESS.

A brother, for whom we have the greatest respect, asks us to say something about "ministerial dress." We wish he had said the word himself, for he is fully capable, as is clearly evidenced by the points he gives us in his personal letter. Besides, what he could say would do more good. Two or three times in these columns we have alluded to the matter, only to be laughed at by brethren, who, though decent in their apparel, are not favorably impressed with any style of ministerial garb, and would never be shot at for preachers.

Heretofore, without any reference to the character of the goods, or the color, we have been out-and-out opposed to preachers wearing short-tail sack coats and bright-colored trousers. They are not in keeping with the preacher's calling, nor the dignity that necessarily belongs to the ministry. Not many of our preachers are Bascoms and George F. Pierces in their physical make-up—rendering any style of clothing becoming. If a preacher can add to his appearance and general bearing (not to the looks of his face), it is clearly his duty to do so. If any style of dress detracts, or causes strangers to misplace him, it is but right for him to avoid it. We have seen a few preachers—quick in action—those who turn around and jump up and down in the pulpit, who would have added to the effectiveness of their discourse, as well as to their general appearance, had they, before going into the pulpit, added two or three, or a half-dozen inches to the shortness (there was no length to speak of) of there coats. Perhaps these brethren were like young Candler, now the Bishop, who, when told by Bishop Pierce that his new coat was too short, replied: "It will be long enough before I get another."

But, hear our correspondent: "I do not believe preachers must needs wear habiliments of woe, or ostentatiously parade their calling, but there are certain proprieties, it does seem to me. Recently I saw a leading city preacher dressed pretty much as follows: a gray-mixed coat and trousers, a fancy vest, a vivid green neck-tie, conspicuously ornamented with a diamond pin of scarcely less than race-track proportions. I should be far from discountenancing neatness, even fastidious observance of the rules of dress, but should it not all be characterized by modesty and the fitness of things?"

There are a few people who do not like to see a preacher dress well, but the great majority not only like it, but are delighted, especially when they have a hand in dressing him, and the more their pastor looks like a preacher, the better are they pleased.

Preachers are called of God and set apart for their work, and it is wrong for them to so disguise themselves by dress as never to pass for a preacher in a strange company. And the preacher is just as far wrong who supposes that by dressing like the boys, and being hail-fellow-well-met with every man he sees, he is laying himself out for usefulness.

OUR SCHOOLS.

It was our purpose to make this week's issue of the ADVOCATE an "educational number." We hoped to have all the Church schools in our patronizing Conferences represented, but we have not fully succeeded. We wrote to the heads of all the institutions, asking for a short history, the status and prospects of their schools. We failed to receive replies from some of them. While they are not represented, for which we are sorry, we feel free to say they are no less worthy than those whose history we present. All are worthy of the good wishes and patronage of our people.

Our whole country is in a prosperous condition—plenty abounds all around. Our young people are seeking a higher education than is usually to be obtained in our public schools. They are going away from home—some to the State industrial institutions, and universities, and many to schools of high repute in other sections, North and East. There is no reason why all these young men and women should go out of Louisiana and Mississippi for an education. There is no reason why a single Methodist boy or girl should not be educated in the colleges belonging to our Church. They are as good as any, and better than some to which our Methodist patronage is given, and they do not charge any more.

WINTER VIEW OF THE GRENADA COLLEGE CAMPUS,
Property of the North Mississippi Annual Conference.

The States are trying hard to secure all the patronage for their schools, and they have the pocket-book of every tax-payer from which to draw the money to carry out their aim. The purpose is commendable, but if in the end, our young people are educated in mind at the expense of the heart, the education will be dearly bought.

Our preachers can do much in turning the thoughts of parents and children to our schools. Let them preach on Christian education, and publicly name the schools that can be patronized with safety to the minds and hearts of pupils. The coming Sunday will be a good time to fix the attention of the people on our institutions.

PERSONALS.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, of Rayne Memorial Church, is at Hattiesburg this week, assisting Dr. W. C. Black in a series of meetings. We hope to hear of a great revival.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, our pastor at Centreville, Miss., has been blessed with a gracious revival. He says: "The charge is in fine condition, and I feel encouraged."

Rev. M. R. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, brings us under obligation for the second club of subscribers—the last embracing a list of seventeen new names to be added to our list.

A brother preacher writes an interesting account of his charge, noting great revivals, etc., but he gives it to us in pencil writing on hard paper. We are sorry to be compelled to withhold it from publication. We have not time to put it in ink.

Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Griffin announce the marriage of Clarmon Elam and James P. Bethea, to be celebrated in the M. E. Church, South, Rolling Fork, Miss., at 8:30 P. M., Sept. 12. We are unable to accept the invitation to the wedding, but extend best wishes to the happy couple.

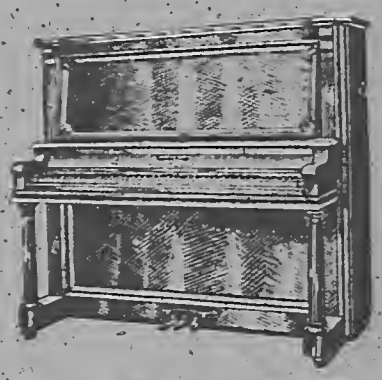
In a kind personal note to the Editor, Rev. R. A. Meek, of the Greenville (Miss.) District, says: "The work seems to be progressing favorably throughout the Greenville District, and the outlook is fine for a successful 'rounding-out' in nearly all the charges."

In spite of great pains on the part of the Editor and proof-reader, mistakes will occur. For example, the essay in our last issue on inviting and welcoming strangers was credited to "Mr. A. M. Lyon." It should have read "Mrs. A. M. Lyon." We beg pardon.

The Twelfth Annual Report of the Woman's Home Mission Society, of the Mississippi Conference, has been printed and published. We have received a copy for which we return thanks —presumably, to the secretary. The good women wrought well during the past year, reporting collections for all purposes amounting to $4,403.27.

Rev. W. A. Brimer, who supplies the Banner Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, has held revival services in all his churches, four in number, and counts more than one hundred conversions, and an addition to the church of thirty-three members. He was greatly assisted in these meetings by Revs. J. N. Flynn, D. M. Floyd, J. M. Holder, and Robert Collins.

Rev. Jno. D. Ellis, of Lauderdale, Miss., has in print "Facts Concerning Baptism." It is a four-page leaflet, and designed for free distribution. The "Facts" as presented by Brother Ellis, readers will find somewhat striking. The author has not only gone to trouble, but expense in getting out the leaflet, and asks that only those who desire it send stamp to pay postage.



Rev. G. P. White, of Kentwood (La.) Circuit, is suffering from nervous troubles, and for the present is unable to keep up his work. He has just closed a meeting at one of his churches in which he was assisted by Rev. John A. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference. Brother Jones was at his best, and his preaching was with power. Eight persons were added to the Church.

Mr. Ray L. Craycraft, President of the Atlanta Epworth League City Union, will take pleasure in assisting any young man or woman going to Atlanta in securing a boarding house, or establishing them in congenial Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, etc. He makes a public request that young people going to that city, if only for a short time, address him without any hesitancy. Adress: 140 Spring St., Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. W. L. Linfield held a meeting last week for Brother W. G. Forsythe at Fayette, Miss. This week he is helping Brother J. A. Moore at Brandon.

We have received a cordial invitation to attend a social gathering of the members and friends of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., on the evening of September 7, Rev. H. M. Ellis pastor. We would be delighted to attend, but must be content to be present in spirit, and at a distance bid the friends godspeed.

On Sept. 1, 1906, Rev. M. M. Black, of Purvis, Miss., and Miss Lillian Patrick, of Byron, Ill., were married by the Rev. J. S. French. The happy couple have our congratulations.

WOOL MARKET, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I have just closed a protracted meeting at Fayard's Chapel, in which we had nine added to the church and about fourteen conversions, and the membership very much revived, as the visible results. This church was organized about two years ago. We now have a membership there of forty-five, and the church has already paid the Conference assessments and the assessment for preacher-in-charge and presiding elder for this year.

We began a meeting Sunday, the 26th of August, at Bethel. Pray for us. May God bless you!

Your brother. R. A. SIBLEY, JR.

NOTICE.

Palmer Creek Camp Meeting will begin Sept. 27, at 7:30 p. m., and continue ten days. The camp ground is located three miles from the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, Wortham being the nearest stopping-point on the railroad. Wortham is fourteen miles north of Gulfport, and fifty-seven miles south of Hattiesburg.

The camp ground is pleasant for situation. The beautiful shade trees, abundance of cool, clear water, and the sea breeze, together make this a pleasant summer resort. Everything will be done, that can be done consistently, to make those who attend the meeting comfortable and happy; conveyance will be provided from and to the railroad by the camp ground, except to meet the Sunday and night trains, at a reduced price.

Preachers will be provided for free of charge. We are expecting to have some very able preachers with us in the meeting.

Let us come to the meeting praying and expecting God to do great things for us.

R. A. SIBLEY, Jr., P. C.

BIENVILLE CHARGE, LA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Some two weeks ago we closed an old-fashioned revival that continued ten days. Bro. Carter, our Presiding Elder, preached three sermons at the opening of the meeting that could be used as a first-class foundation for this old-time revival. Penitents were converted at the altar in the church meetings, and at home. We are expecting many bright conversions in the next two months.

The people are very kind to me and I am going to stay here another year, if I do not move this next Conference. Our next annual meeting is going to be real lively if the boys' hearts do not fail them. They say they are going to turn on the light.

If they are not careful, they will come out, like I did, when I turned on the light. They will find it necessary for them to take a hay ride for another appointment.

G. D. ANDERS.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.

Salem Camp Meeting for 1906 will (D. V.) begin Oct. 10, and close Oct. 14. The camp is located about one mile north of Americus postoffice, Jackson county, Miss., and is among the oldest in the state, being about 64 years old, and is the spiritual birthplace of many. There will be a boarding tent on the camp.

Preachers and all Christians are invited. Come in the Spirit of our Lord. We give a special invitation to those who are strangers to the joy of Salvation.

Please join with us in prayers for a revival of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ at the camp.

M. R. JONES.

Hurley, Miss.

POLLOCK CIRCUIT, LA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: The third Quarterly Conference for Pollock Circuit was held at Tioga, July 14-15. A small attendance in the day time, good at night. Dr. Sawyer was at his post, magnifying the office of presiding elder. He magnifies any office he holds—he looks into everything—he lets nothing pass. He preached three deep, spiritual, old-fashioned Methodist sermons; such sermons that he can preach. I believe some good was done, as I had a large congregation on my next appointment, at night, after a very wet day.

We held our District Conference, at Bunkie, April 26-29. I have attended every District Conference since it was organized, when I was able to get there. I think it was the best I ever attended, and on Tuesday, I came to the conclusion it was the most spiritual.

Once more I have charge of a work. My congregations are good. I preach twice every Sunday, when the weather will permit, and at the same time, in the language of a Jap colporter, "I am sowing the Bible and other religious books."

The church is doing as well at Pollock as you could expect. The people have nearly all left; the finances very much crippled on account of the mill being burnt in the spring.

My young brother and predecessor, Rev. R. H. Harper, son of Rev. J. D. Harper, of Lafayette, left the work in good shape. He had collected up to date for the Conference collections, $30.95.

I have traveled in the neighborhood of a thousand miles this year, and have preached 38 times; held prayer meetings, and delivered several lectures. I have attended District Conferences and other church meetings in the interest of the Bible and other books. The brethren and friends show me every courtesy, for which I am thankful.

I have passed my 82d year. I attended the Rapides camp meeting; preached the introductory sermon again this year, and am appointed to preach it again next year. We had good preaching at every service. I am pleased. I am proud of our young preachers, they preach well.

On Thursday, Aug. 2, being the anniversary of my birthday, I was appointed to preach at 3:30 o'clock at the camp meeting. My text was, Phil. i. 11.

I am well pleased with our paper; it gets better every week. I think the last the best. I shall do all that I can for the paper.

Yours fraternally,

GEO. JACKSON.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a meeting held in the M. E. Church, South, of Hammond, La., on August 12, 1906, a committee was appointed to give suitable expression of the church and community regarding the demise of ADOLPHUS ROUSSEAU, which was to be read before the Sunday school and also to be published in the city papers.

Resolved by the official board of the above-named church, That in the death of our highly-esteemed brother Adolphus Rousseau, our city has lost a citizen whose efforts were always in the direction of civic purity, and our church a member and officer who loved it and always rejoiced in its prosperity. We extend to the bereaved family our sincere condolence and pray that the Spirit that sustained our brother even in the valley and shadow of death may sustain them through their lives.

Resolved, That Brother Rousseau's long and faithful services as a church officer and Sunday school superintendent will be long remembered and appreciated.

L. O. PERDUE,
MRS. J. D. McCONNELL,
Committee.

EDWIN W. HUNTER, JR., infant son of Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Hunter, died July 30, 1906, aged 7 months and 21 days. It is human to think what heaven is to be like. It is human to picture something in this world like heaven. We look into some homes where all is love, happiness and peace, and say, surely this is like heaven. This picture was a view of the home of our brother and sister, Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Hunter, of Merrouge, La. Revelation and experience teach us, with all the happy surroundings mentioned, this is not heaven. Death—who is no respecter of homes or persons—cannot enter heaven. Death entered the happy home of our Brother and Sister Hunter on July 30, and took from them their only son, whom they devotedly loved. How sad and dark would our condition be unaided by revelation. God's Word comes to us in these trials and troubles and bids us look up. "For of such is the kingdom of heaven." We shall see him again. C. T. MENHOLEAND.

MRS. RACHAEL ABNEY (nee Hartfield) was born in Jasper County, Miss., Aug. 2, 1844. She joined the Methodist Church at 11 years of age; was married to Geo. P. Abney September, 1861, and died in the home of her son, Rev. H. A. Abney, at Orange, Tex., Nov. 30, 1905. She was educated at Pleasant Hill Academy, now Montrose High School, in Mississippi. Her brother-in-law, J. P. Abney, was a member of the Board of Trustees of this school. Rev. J. T. Abney, of the Mississippi Conference, is her nephew by marriage. She was a life-long Christian, ever loyal and devoted to her church. Hers was a beautifully consistent life. She had been a great sufferer for many years, but was ever patient and resigned. She looked upon death not with horror and alarm, but as a happy release. Her translation was peaceful and triumphant. Her last words were, "I'll soon be with loved ones over yonder," and with face all aglow with the light of heaven, her emancipated spirit swept through the gates of pearl to the city of God. At evening time there was light.

MRS. MARY MOORE (nee Davis) was born in Sumpter County, Ala., on Oct. 24, 1839, and died at her home in Kemper County, Miss., Aug. 2, 1906. Sister Moore was united in wedlock to Brother Robert Moore on March 24, 1858, in Sumpter County, Ala., and to them were born four boys and seven girls. Seven of the children preceded their mother to the kingdom. There remain to mourn her departure a husband, one son, three daughters, eight grandchildren and a host of friends. Sister Moore was a good woman, devoted to her children and companion. She expressed a desire to be with her children, but at the same time was submissive to God's will, and asked Jesus to come and meet her. The funeral services were conducted at the Binnsville Church by the pastor on Aug. 3, 1906. We then proceeded to the Binnsville Cemetery, accompanied by a large concourse of friends and relatives, where we laid her to rest till the resurrection morn. We are in deep sympathy with the loved ones of Sister Moore and admonish them to be faithful a few more years and they shall meet her again. Her pastor,

A. C. FLOWERS.

THE ORIGIN OF THE HOOSIER STATE.

In the early pioneer days, when the crude homes were many days' journey apart and news of the outside world was brought only by the chance traveler, these wanderers were welcomed as old friends and given a place in the family circle.

At this time Indiana was but a part of the boundless western region, its people subject to the fierce attacks of the Indians and far from any aid, so that as night came on they bolted their doors and shuttered the windows. If by chance a traveler sought admittance after dark he was first greeted by the words, "Who's here?"

In the rough language of that time these words became shortened to "Who's yere?" and it was not long until to Eastern folk this section of the country became known as the "Who's yere" region, thus giving to Indiana the name of the Hoosier State.—St. Nicholas.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING---Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc. and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 469 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

EAST FELICIANA CIRCUIT, LA.

Dear Advocate: I feel sure some of the brethren and others would like to hear of the results of the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting that has just closed. I am thankful to state that we had a right good meeting, but not what it should have been; a good many conversions, some reclaimed, several additions to the church and several promised to erect family altars in their homes. We hope that far better results will come of the meeting than what are visible. The good seed were sown.

Bros. S. L. Riggs, W. R. Harvell, and J. H. Williams were employed to do the preaching, and they did most of it. These brethren preached the pure Gospel and labored very hard all through the meeting for the salvation of souls. They are good revival preachers.

We had the pleasure of having Rev. C. C. Miller, President of Centenary College, with us part of the time. He preached several very strong, helpful sermons.

Bro. R. N. Jeffrey, the singing evangelist, added very greatly to the success of the meeting. He feels called of God to this work and is going from place to place, singing the Gospel. He is fine help in revivals. He has some very fine solos that he uses in revivals. The brethren that need such a man in their revivals would do well to get him.

Yours in the work.

REVIVAL AT CREW LAKE.

Editor Christian Advocate: I closed Wednesday night a six-day meeting at Crew Lake. We had a genuine revival of religion. Rev. S. W. B. Colvin, pastor at West Monroe, helped me with the preaching. The people of the whole community were awakened, all the Christians were greatly blessed and encouraged; backsliders were restored. There were five or six conversions and two accessions to our Church, other accessions in prospect, and some in prospect for the Baptist Church. Sectarian lines were obliterated.

I want those who understand the situation at Crew Lake to pray for these good people. The country is thinly populated, the roads are bad, and there has been much sickness during two months past. The church is surviving there under many difficulties. They are a God-fearing people who look to the Lord to help them out of their troubles. Your brother in Christ,

LESSON FOR SEPT. 16, 1906.

JESUS SILENCES THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES.

Mark xii, 13-27.

Golden Text: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's."—Mark xii, 17.

It seems that Jesus had, previous to the last week of his life on earth, been directing his preaching and teaching to the common people. It also seems that in clearing the temple of merchants and money changers, he had prefared for a few days work among the more intelligent, whom he knew would come to the temple to hear him. He also knew that their motive in hearing was far from a desire to be edified or instructed. They were his enemies; and representatives from Herodians, Pharisees, chief priests and scribes, with a few of the Sadducees, had combined in an effort to secure some evidence by which they could arrest him, and bring him before the authorities. The knowledge of this did not deter Jesus one moment in putting the truth before them in the plainest terms. He denounced their hypocrisy and their self-righteousness, and Luke says he preached to them the gospel. Their antagonism was so plainly shown them in parables that their anger and malice were all the more increased, and they would have laid hold on Jesus, but they feared the people; so they turned and left him, and went their way. They were soon back again, and come with the object of making him commit himself against the government. Full of deceit and flattery, they ask the Lord a question, hoping for an answer that would expose him to indictment for treason to the Roman government.

The question was: "Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not?" Their meaning evidently was: Should we submit to be taxed by our oppressors? Knowing their motive, Jesus said: "Why tempt ye me?" Bring me a penny, that I may see it." After they brought the penny to him, he asked: "Whose is this image and superscription?" "Caesar's," they replied. "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's," was the answer that put them to silence, and forever pointed out the plain duty of Christian citizenship. Caesar's image and superscription was placed on the coin, ever reminding his subjects that he was their ruler, and that his laws must be obeyed. Man was created in the image of God, and God's laws are written in his heart. "I will put my laws in their mind, and write them in their hearts." Hebrew ix. 10. Jesus shows us that we have an imperative duty toward earthly government, but it does not occupy the first place in our lives, as it is rather an effect following loyalty to God. "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."

The passive attitude of Christian citizens have much to do with political positions being filled by evil men. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," "Render unto God the things that are God's." Believe on and accept him whom he hath sent. Let his life be the example to follow. Walk in his steps. Be meek and lowly in heart. Know him, whom to know aright is life eternal.

The Master was next accosted by a delegation from the Sadducees. They seemed to desire some word from him to serve them as a proof that they were right on a point of doctrine. They seem to have been very good people, but they had a specialty, which was a denial of the resurrection. When religious people have a specialty, they are much in danger of rejecting some vulnerable part of the moral character, exposing same to the fiery darts of the devil. One of the kings of Israel received a mortal wound from a dart that pierced him at the joint of his armour.

Having fortified themselves with a reference to one of the old Mosaic ordinances in regard to perpetuating the name of one deceased by his brother, citing an imaginary instance of seven brothers in succession marrying the wife of the first, all having died without issue, and at last the woman died, the question was whose wife was she in the resurrection. Jesus replied: "Do you not, therefore err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God?" He then used a reference from the same inspired writer to set them right, saying that God had told Moses that he was the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, patriarchs who had long since passed away, but who still lived, as God was not a God of the dead, but a God of the living.

When the Pharisees heard that Jesus had silenced the Sadducees, as well as themselves, they joined forces and became more bitter than ever in their hatred of the Messiah.

Belief in the ressurrection is essential according to St. Paul. "For, if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: then if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." To know that we are immortal is the most pleasing prospect in all the realms of hope. God created man with the love of life, and with the evidence of death and decay all around. How sweet is the thought that "our vile body shall be changed like unto his glorious body." The question is often asked, and often lurks unmasked, "shall we know each other in that bright land to which we are journeying?" When Jesus taught by parable, or by the scene on the mount of transfiguration, individual indentity was plainly set forth. The Holy Spirit, through the prophet, mentions Noah, Daniel and Job; years after they had left the world, in connection with a line of action that characterized their life on earth. Men of high order of intellect like the Sadducees, had no excuse for their unbelief.

In these last days of the Master's life on earth, there was much of pity and compassion even toward his enemies. He was kind to them and patient towards them, but his soul was grieving more in spirit. We know what will soon be the cup that he must drink to the very dregs, and knowing that it was all for us; that he was soon to overcome the last enemy, which is death. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory. * * * But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

CENTREVILLE, MISS.

Our meeting commenced here on the third Sunday and continued through the week up until last night. Many say it was the best meeting that Centreville has had in many years. At the last night's service I received into the Church one of the finest classes I have ever received since I have been in the ministry—a class of twenty-eight on profession of faith.

Brother R. H. B. Gladney, of the North Mississippi Conference, came to us on Monday after the third Sunday, and did the preaching from Tuesday until Friday night. Brother Gladney's preaching was plain, strong, spiritual and uplifting. He is especially gifted in preaching to the children.

We held two afternoon services for the children, and the results will be far-reaching and everlasting. Yesterday was a great day in Centreville—the largest congregations I have seen at church since I came as pastor, and at the night service many had to stand during services. It was said by many of last night's service that it was the most beautiful sight they ever saw, so many of the young people giving themselves to God, and entering into covenant with him.

We all will long remember Brother Gladney, and his work will abide with us. I counted it a privilege to renew our relations as comrades of the cross of Christ, and yoke-fellows in the service. We were born near the same place and about the same time, attended the same church much of the time in our boyhood days; he was converted one week, and I was converted the next, under the ministry of the same man; licensed to preach in the same presiding elder's district; carried into the Annual Conference by the same presiding elder, and passed through the four years in the same class. It is good for brethren to be together.

THE LOUISIANA ORPHANAGE.

Dear Pastors and Superintendents of Sunday-schools: Remember that Saturday, September 29, is the day to be observed nearly all over Southern Methodism as "Work Day." Do not fail me; so much depends upon the results. I want to have our doors open for real work by Oct. 1. This means that obligations are to be met. Help make the day victorious!

A GREAT MEETING.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just closed out a meeting at White Hall, where the Lord gave us the victory. Twenty-five joined the Church, nine by baptism, and sixteen on profession of faith. The people say they have not had such a meeting for years.

We are now engaged in a meeting here at Haynesville. Brother Williams, of Gibbsland, is doing the preaching.

Pray for us. Yours in his name,

S. J. DAVIS.

Haynesville, La.

KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I have just closed a meeting at one of my appointments, and received thirty-three into the Church—twenty-six or seven on profession of faith. Brother Robt. A. Clark, of Columbus, did the preaching after Monday morning. He is a man of God, and his sermons are thoughtful and effective. He is a coming young man and a good preacher.

At one appointment Rev. E. S. Lewis of Kosciusko preached two excellent sermons. God has wonderfully blessed us this year. I have conducted meetings at five other of my appointments, and have received into the Church, to date, fifty-one; and have one more meeting to hold. We are moving along nicely, and expecting to buy a parsonage, ceil a church and collect all our assessments. To God be all the glory. Pray for us!

J. E. GAULT, P. C.

KEATCHIE CIRCUIT, LA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We began our first meeting at Logansport the fourth Sunday in May. Rev. A. W. Turner of the Grand Cane Circuit came to us on Tuesday and did as good and faithful work as I have ever known any man to do. His preaching was with great power. The meeting continued eight days; but the people never did manifest the interest that they should have done, and the result was but little good was accomplished, if any at all.

Our second meeting was held at Keatchie, beginning the first Sunday in July. Rev. A. W. Turner came to us on Tuesday and preached some most excellent sermons, which resulted in five accessions to the Church. Our third meeting was held at Longstreet, which began the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. A. W. Turner was with us from the beginning until the close, and rendered valuable and faithful service, which resulted in fourteen accessions to the Church.

Brother R. N. Jeffery, recently of Los Angeles, Cal., the singing evangelist, was with us at Keatchie and Longstreet, and added greatly to these meetings in leading the song service.

While we feel sure that some good has been accomplished, we did not witness the revival spirit among the membership in any of these meetings that we had hoped to see.

We will soon have all the material on the ground to build a new church at Longstreet, which has been greatly needed for a number of years. So if any brother or friend whom the Lord hath blessed in temporal things feels disposed to help us in building this church they can send whatever amount they wish to give to the writer at Keatchie, La., and it will be greatly appreciated. The cotton crop was almost a failure here last year, and it is going to be the same again this year. In some communities the cotton crop will be almost a total failure. The Keatchie Circuit will suffer more from the boll weevil than any circuit in the Louisiana Conference. Some of our people are going to be greatly pressed; so it can be very easily seen what a struggle it is going to be to build a nice church in this immediate section of the country.

Pray for us. I am sincerely and fraternally yours. H. J. BOLTZ.

MENDING THE BREAK.

"A broken friendship, like china, may be repaired, but the break will always show," some one says with a good bit of truth and wisdom.

Friendship is a precious thing—too precious a treasure to be carelessly broken or lightly thrown away. A true friend is a very anchor of comfort and strength and courage. One may be hardly dealt with, and suffer injustice and misunderstanding and many other cruel things; but the heart will turn to a strong, true friend and find comfort in the thought that this one at least understands and appreciates and sympathizes.

If you have even one such friend, do all in your power to keep the friendship unbroken. Let no cloud of slight or suspicion mar your happiness in each other. Avoid the break—for when it does come it cannot easily be mended so that it will be just as it was before between you.

The cause of a break in a friendship may be smoothed away and forgiven and renewed pledges of friendship made and kept well. But whenever a jarring note creeps in—a little discord that would have been passed over lightly before the break—the thought will come in spite of all: "I cannot trust this one as I did once. He has been cruel and unjust and hard to me one time. We are friends again, it is true, but it is not just as it was before."

It is not a question of forgiveness that may be full and complete. But the hurt in the heart does not heal readily or entirely, the confidence does not come back fully—the break is hard to mend and is bound to show.—Cora S. Day.

A PUNCTUAL BIRD.

What tempts the little humming bird that we see in our gardens to travel every spring from near the equator to as far north as the Arctic Circle, leaving behind him, as he does, for a season, many tropical delights? He is the only one of many humming birds that pluckily leaves the land of gayly colored birds to go into voluntary exile in the north, east of the Mississippi. How it stirs the imagination to picture the solitary, tiny migrant, a mere atom of bird life, moving above the range of human sight through the vast dome of the sky! Borne swiftly onward by rapidly vibrating little wings, he covers the thousands of miles between his winter home and his summer one by easy stages and arrives at his chosen destination, weather permitting, at approximately the same date year after year.—Country Life in America.

WHAT BLACKENS.

There is an old story about a Greek maiden named Eulalia; she wanted to be friends with Lucinda, a very gay and worldly woman. One day she said to her father, Sophronius: "I would like to call upon Lucinda; may I go to-day?"

"I can not allow you to do that, my daughter," replied Sophronius.

"But, father, you must think me exceedingly weak if you suppose I should be injured by going," said Eulalia, crossly.

Her father stooped down and picked up a piece of dirty coal and held it out. "Take that in your hand, my child; it will not hurt you."

She did, and her fingers became smudged. Eulalia did not understand. "Why," she said, "did you give me this? It blackens."

"Yes," came the reply. "Coal, when it does not burn, blackens."

Do you see the lesson of the old Greek? Bad company will blacken, even if it does not burn.

I WAS WRONG.

On the train I was talking to an aged stranger. "I was hardly grown," said he, "when I entered the army, and I fought all through the war. But if I could have seen things then as I do now, I never would have fired a shot. It was a mistake, an a sad, sad mistake. I am now preaching the gospel of the Prince of Peace, trying to keep alive all the people I can." That is indeed sad for one to come to see that, though sincere, he was sincerely wrong; see that he did a great deal of harm, believing at the time that he was doing right. That was Paul's state that noonday near Damascus. He was brought suddenly to realize that all his religious views, all his religious zeal, had up to that time been fundamentally wrong and a sad mistake. Not till one sees that he is wrong can he get right and be trained to do right.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

Marion, five, was corrected for some act of rudeness by her grandmother, who a little later quoted to a friend:

"You may break, you may shatter the vase, if you will, but the scent of the roses will hang round it still." After a minute of thought came, with a wounded air, the paraphrase, "You may hurt, you may scold, you may box if you will, but the love of grandma will cling to you still.—how's that, grandma?"—The Congregationalist and Christian World.

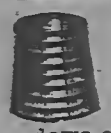
Let no day pass without personal secret communication with God.

Begin each day by taking counsel from the Word of God, if but one verse while you are dressing.



Put away all bitter feelings and broodings over slights or wrongs, no matter from whom received.

Have on your heart some person or cause for which you are pleading God's blessings each day.

Let no opportunity pass to say a kind word, do some kind deed, or at least smile upon those you meet. Do this, not affectedly, but sincerely, as unto the Lord.

Guard well the door of your lips, that no unchaste word, jest or story, no slander or cutting remarks, no irreverent or untruthful statement, shall pass out.

Remember each day that Christ will surely come, suddenly come, quickly come; and it may be this day will determine how his coming will find us, as it must to thousands.—Exchange.

We take the following glance in regard to crop statistics from the Literary Digest: "Never before," says The Wall Street Journal, "have the crop sections, as a whole, outside of the cotton belt, had so large an income in sight from their summer's labors:" and the same paper further observes that the effect of the returns on business must be "highly reassuring." The New York Journal of Commerce presents the following facts and figures: "Winter wheat is beyond the stage of doubt, and the Government estimate, based upon acreage and an unusual average production per acre, places the yield at 493,434,000 bushels, which exceeds that of last year by 47,000,000 bushels and is about 34,600,000 bushels in excess of the 'record' of 1901. There was a decline in the condition of spring wheat during the month of July, which causes a reduction in the estimated yield by 15,000,000 bushels, leaving it at 278,830,000, compared with an actual yield of 264,516,655 bushels last year and 289,625,717 in 1901. There may be a further decline in condition, or there may be improvement between now and the harvest, but with the present prospect the total yield of wheat will establish a new record of 772,264,000 bushels, compared with 748,460,218 for the former 'record year.' The quality is also reported to be unusually high. Corn shows a moderate improvement of condition during July, and the estimate crop, based upon acreage and first-of-August condition, is 2,713,194,000 bushels, compared with last year's high record of 2,707,993,540. There has been neither drought nor excessive wet weather for corn thus far, and the prospect is fair for continued good condition. The serious danger for this crop is early frost, and that is nothing that can be calculated about. We can only wait hopefully for results."

Many representatives of the negro race met a couple of weeks since and harangued each other to their heart's content. And they made "demands," as they nearly always do, when they have a big gathering. In this meeting they demanded not only "equality before the law," but equality in everything else, specially social equality. They seem not to undertsand that that is something impossible of attainment, through any sort of legal enactment. The equality of the races is not a fact in any section of our country. It never can be socially in the South. That the negro is handicapped, no one will deny. That he has all the advantages he can use to profit is a fact. A few make good use of their opportunities, and rise and do well. The vast majority do not, and they never will. If he works, gets plenty to eat, makes money and saves, and tries to elevate his kind, he should be satisfied. This is the way white people do. To seek for and long after the unattainable is foolish. To force one's self into places where he is not wanted, but where his presence is offensive, is foolhardy. The attempt will be resented whether the one who attempts is white or black. The Inter-Ocean, a Republican paper, says the negro's worst enemy—the counselor who holds him back most—is the sentimentalist, who pities him for being a negro, and is constantly prating about the disadvantages of being born with a black skin.

The new railway law went into effect on August 28. It is an exceedingly complicated affair, notwithstanding an eminent lawyer has pronounced it "sound." The central idea in the law, says an authority in such matters, is: "The idea to which all of the provisions of the statute contribute, may be summed up in a few words. This idea is that the railroads of the country must treat all people alike, and that there shall be no discrimination in favor or against any individual, corporation, or locality. And by compelling absolute publicity of tariffs, schedules, and records the federal government is provided with the means of seeing to it that this idea is obeyed by the railroads." President Baer, of the Reading Railway, one of the strong roads of the country, says, "the railroads of the country will be operated as heretofore. But his word is not regarded with alarm in any locality, and few believe that he is throwing down the gauntlet of defiance to the government. If he is, he must fight his battles alone, for ever since the enactment of the law railroad officials from Maine to California and from the Dominion to the gulf have reiterated their declarations that it is their intention to obey the new law in every particular." One provision of the bill absolutely prohibits the roads doing an interstate business to issue free passes to anybody, except railroad employees. If this clause is enforced it will put millions of dollars into pockets of railroad share-holders. Our Congressmen even, who ride on free tickets, and draw mileage from the government, will be compelled to take their mileage to pay their fare.

Ever since childhood we have been hearing of the goose that laid the golden egg, but not until recently did we hear of chickens with gold-filled craws. The story comes from the Black Hills, where, it is said, that chickens, "when cut open, are found to be full of gold nuggets, and a sudden onslaught on the poultry market has begun among the miners. Costly placer machinery is beginning to be abandoned in favor of this far more simple method of obtaining the yellow metal. The manager of a mining company's store at Hanna some time ago bought a large lot of chickens for slaughter and sale in his store. When he killed and dressed them he was surprised to find, instead of the usual pebbles, a handful of small gold nuggets in each craw. The nuggets were well worn, and showed the glint of the color of gold all over them, the rocky portions being worn away and the yellow metal exposed. He confided his secret to a paint drummer from Omaha. Together the two men started out to buy large flocks of healthy chickens and turn them loose upon the gravelly soil. Other miners adopted the scheme, and 'chicken miners' are becoming more numerous daily." No wonder that chickens and eggs are equal in value to a full cotton crop.

Our President, Mr. Roosevelt, is not only a strenuous man, but exceedingly versatile. He is a great President, a great hunter, a great athlete, a great reader, and a writer of books, as well as of State papers. He is accused of being somewhat acrobatic, but we think that is a mistake. He does, however, occasionally spring surprises on the country. His latest was an order to the Government printer to have all publications of the Executive Department "put in print according to the spelling of the Simplified Spelling Board." This Board, having at its head the president of a great university, has undertaken the reform of English spelling, which, in some respects, Mr. Roosevelt tells us, "is foolish." It is difficult everybody knows who has undertaken "to go through the dictionary." But, if we are not mistaken, the President will find it a harder task to reform it in compliance with "fonetic" usages than he had to get his railroad rate bill through Congress. If the spelling board method had been popular it would have made headway long since. But it was met with stubborn opposition and is only little advanced beyond what it was twenty years ago. If Mr. Carnegie puts some of his millions into the movement, and Mr. Roosevelt his "hole sole" it may make a "strid." With such backing, we will watch with interest to see whether or not it goes "thru."

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, one of the best-known and most active of women in promoting the welfare of the community, especially among young women, gives to one of the several journals for which she writes her views on the religious newspaper. We heartily commend what she says to all our people:

"No home is fully furnished for every demand unless it has coming to it regularly a religious newspaper. We must be made aware of what is going on. We need to know what is being done in the world of religious thought and activity. We cannot be intelligent Christians unless we keep abreast of the rapidly changing and wonderfully progressing missionary movements of our time, and we ought to have information as to men and methods in the religious world. Shall we be thought narrow if we insist that the first requisite is not as some persons imagine, a well-edited, non-sectarian journal, but rather a thoughtful, comprehensive and interesting denominational newspaper? People should know what is going on in their own household and advance from that point to the issues that affect the community. One's denominational paper should take precedence and other literature follow. Why should we have so little denominational loyalty that we care nothing for the traditions of our own church, for our own standards and our own work? Those who spend the small sum of money needful to keep them in touch with their own church will, all things considered, be better Christians and care more truly for the whole field than those who neglect this means of obtaining up-to-date information."

REVIVAL AT IDA, LA.

Dear Doctor: I began a meeting here last week and closed last night, Aug. 31, with twenty-five accessions to our Church, and there will be as many to the Baptist Church. Praise the Lord!

Rev. C. C. Wier preached once, and raised $70 for the Orphanage. Prof. T. S. Sligh was at one service. Dr. H. C. Davis, P. E., was here three days, preaching and working. One of his sermons was cyclonic in effect. One hundred came up for prayer. We also had Dr. M. H. Wells, of Birmingham, a week, preaching, exhorting, etc. He is a great worker in a revival, especially for the Church. Being a war veteran, as well as of the cross, Dr. Wells won all hearts. Things are in good shape now on Gilliam Circuit—seventy accessions to date.

LETTER FROM BISHOP FITZGERALD.

With this letter my greeting and good wishes go to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. To its Editor, Dr. Boswell, my yokefellow of former days, my heart turns in friendly regard when I see the familiar face of the paper. And not infrequently do I feel close to him in the secret place where are remembered those of whom past recollections are pleasant and concerning whom hope is sacred and joyful. Yes, that is the word; my old "yokefellow"—that was our relation. We worked together for a cause we loved. For the Christian Advocate here at Nashville we were quill-drivers and ink-spillers at a time when great questions were pending and precious interests were at stake.

That is always the situation in the living Church of Christ as it is seen by living men who follow His banner, keeping step with fellow-soldiers of the cross. For you, my old comrade, I will say, if you will give me the privilege, your service was hearty and unstinted, your spirit such as was becoming to a watchman who stood upon Zion's walls. Your trumpet gave no uncertain sound. Whenever there was a question under consideration that affected the faith once delivered to the saints it was heard. I believed in you in those by-gone days, and felt safer and stronger because you were nigh. This feeling concerning you is not changed. The thought of you is a tonic to this old Editor, whose heart is in the same place, and who is trying to keep moving on the old lines.

Every week I open the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, expecting to find in its columns news that has been winnowed and the trash rejected, opinions that are clear, courage that admits of no neutrality in the discussion of measures and men at proper times, with a freedom from partisanship becoming to an Editor who follows the Golden Rule, and whose meat it is to do the will of our Father which is in heaven.

My expectation, thus expressed, is not disappointed. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, as an organ of the Church, stands for the truth with a courage that does not falter, and a devotion that does not grow cold. It does not stoop to achieve a cheap and transient success or notoriety. No, verily, Dr. Boswell does not stoop; he is one of the most perpendicular of all our men that stand up for the defense of the truth as held by our Methodism, which we think is the truth as it is in Jesus. All this your readers know fully as well or better than I do, but it was in my thought, and I wanted to say it. This old scribe claims some indulgence from his brethren, and usually gets it.

The Louisiana contingent here in Nashville, our connectional center, is giving a good account of itself. Contingent is a noun in the singular, but these Louisianians are three in number—Carre, Carter and Parker. They are doing excellent service in their several spheres. They are honored as men and loved as brethren. The "home folks" will welcome this kindly word concerning these children of Louisiana Methodism. They are all three doing connectional work for our connectional Church in a way that I think must please the Church's ever-gracious Head.

The order of the day with us Methodists seems to be the reconstruction of this, that and the other. Our new Publishing House is nearly ready for use; it is said by experts to combine utility and elegance in its construction. The new building for Vanderbilt University is nearly finished, and will be a thing of beauty; and the main building, so called, which was damaged by fire, is nearly rebuilt, and will be bigger and better than ever. The Vanderbilt Commission is doing thorough work in the investigation of the questions submitted to them; and when they report we will know "where we are at."

The discussion of the question of a restatement of the Creed of Methodism has been lively and marked by unusual ability. Our people have enough love for their Church and its institutions to be profoundly interested in these matters, and enough religion in their souls to sustain their faith in God and brotherly love among themselves.

But I am running on at an unusual length, and will come to a close with this free-and-easy epistle. It seems strange to think of Bishop Keener as dead. He is missed and mourned by the whole Church that he loved so well and served so ably for so many years. And my thoughts grow solemn as I think of him and others who have gone on before us—McTyiere, Parker, Walker and the rest—elect spirits who served their generation by the will of God, and then fell on sleep. The thought of joining them is not unpleasant to me. It is better up there, where we shall see face to face and know even as we are known. That is the promise of our Lord; we will know its meaning when it shall have been fulfilled. When we get home, through grace abiding and abounding, we will catch in accents clear the Voice whose tones fell faintly—in our pauses rapt and silent—upon our inner ear, and cheered our fainting hearts while on the way. So feels your brother,

O. P. FITZGERALD.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY.

My wife and I are taking a few weeks' turn-around among our children. We spent one week in Aberdeen, where wife lived sixty-odd years ago, when she was a litte girl, and where she spent most of her school-girl days. In that week she lived life over again. Many of the old Baronial residences remain, but most of the old people have gone.

Dr. Robert Paine, of Lagrange College, was elected Bishop in May, 1840, and moved to Aberdeen in October following. Here he lived and reared his family, and here he died, and his remains sleep in the cemetery. The Bishop was a good and a great man—about the most perfectly rounded man I have ever known. His name is still like ointment poured forth in that city. Two of his sons and one of his daughters, and several of his grandchildren still live in Aberdeen. My own acquaintance with Aberdeen extends back sixty years. Wife and I tried to see how many of the old preachers we could recall. We recalled the names of Lewis H. Davis, the blind man; Jas. L. Chapman, the Irish orator and debater; John Moss, B. T. Crouch and A. J. See, all before the war and including the first year of the war. All of these have gone home.

Along in the fifties Jas. L. Chapman drifted off into politics, and lost his grip as a preacher. Being an Irishman, he was opposed to Knownothingism, and took the stump in opposition to that party. His gifts as an orator and disputant were the occasion of his undoing as a preacher.

Among the presiding elders who had lived in Aberdeen and served the district from other points we could recall the names of a few—Thomas L. Boswell, J. H. Brooks, Jesse Walsh, Moses Brock, and M. J. Blackwell. All of these have gone to their reward. We could name scores of devout laymen and laywomen who had lived and wrought and loved and died in that town. The stones in the graveyard tell where they sleep. We call to mind some of the local preachers of the long ago—J. B. Mann, W. L. Bonner, Jno. Young, and Simon B. Sykes. La, la, how I longed to get my hands on the old quarterly conference records; but no one could tell me where to find them. How careless we are about preserving the facts of our history.

Rev. Amos Kendall lives in Aberdeen, and as pastor, presiding elder and now as citizen, he has spent sixteen years of his life since the war in that city. He knows Aberdeen; and Aberdeen knows, loves and honors him. Brother Kendall is an Englishman, but he is not to blame for it, for he was born that way. He will be seventy-six his next birthday, but he is as straight as an Indian, and can step off a mile about as quick as any man I know. He was built out of tough material to begin with, and it has been toughened still more by more than fifty years of itinerant work. He was one in a family of twelve children, and the tenth of ten sons. This large family, or eleven of them, was reared on an English farm of forty acres. That meant great thrift and great economy. Forty acres would afford short grazing for the average American boy. We use up more pasture land for the size of our men than, perhaps, any other great nation of the world. Brother Kendall's father, without applying for it, was appointed postmaster of Ashby, England, more than sixty years ago, and one of his relatives is postmaster to-day. Brother Kendall came to America and went up to join the Memphis Conference on his English papers, but Bishop Paine said, "no, you must have a recommendation from the quarterly conference." So he served as a supply for the year 1858. Since then he has been a regular field hand along with the rest of us. He and his wife are living in ease and comfort in Aberdeen.

"A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and among his own kin." This, I take it, is the general rule. There are exceptions to it, and Rev. Jas. E. Cunningham is one of them. He is closing his fourth year in Aberdeen, right in his own country, and surrounded by his kin, and he is respected and honored by every man, woman and child in the town.

I am now in the prairies, where I served from December, 1870, till December, 1874, as pastor, and then for four years as presiding elder. These years as pastor were years of trial. It was the reconstruction period, when we were trying to rid Mississippi of the carpet-baggers. In a section where there were ten colored to one white voter, the times were serious. Blood was willfully, wantonly and wastefully shed here in Artesia. Some things had to be done, without standing on the order of doing them.

The charge that I served as one, is now three pastoral charges. This is the day of small and intensive farming. Providence, or Porter, ought to be able to work his own patch. It is a mere patch compared to the works as they once were. The Crawford Circuit of my day embraced all of Lowndes County west of the river, and parts of Oktibbeha and Clay counties. We grow by division. The district is smaller in territory and larger in the number of appointments. Yours,

GILDEROY.

Artesia, Miss.

STATEMENT OF METHODIST FAITH.

That the action of the recent General Conference, in providing for a commission to act with the representatives of the other great Methodist bodies of the world in preparing a statement of the historic faith of Methodism, should have caused widespread discussion among Methodist people was to have been expected, and desired; for it has shown the intense interest taken by our people in the preservation of the doctrinal integrity of Methodism, and their readiness to resent anything that suggests the alteration of the standards of doctrine that from the beginning have been accepted and taught by the people called Methodists.

That the discussion of this question should have been marked by charges, expressed or implied, involving a want of progressiveness on the one hand or a lack of orthodoxy on the other, is to be regretted. The man who cannot consider such a question without reflecting upon the character of those who differ from him consults his prejudices rather than his judgment, and is, to that extent, an unsafe counselor.

It is impossible to avoid the conviction that in the minds of some people the proposed action is misunderstood and that a clearer view of the ends to be reached will remove much of the apprehension entertained by many good people.

Sorrow has been expressed by some that the church proposes to "change its creed," and the melancholy spectacle of a revised Apostles' Creed has carried grief to the heart of the devout believer. Of course such fears are groundless. The Apostles' Creed, which should be a part of the public worship in all Methodist churches, is in no danger whatever. Many who oppose the recently adopted order of worship, with its public recitation of the Creed, are opposed to the suggested formulation of Methodist faith.

Others have supposed that what is contemplated is a revision of the faith—a change in the doctrines of the Church—and from some quarters, where one would expect to find a more accurate knowledge of the facts, or a more candid expression of them, the objection is urged that the General Conference proposes to revise its doctrinal standards. So far is this from being a fact that every man who has spoken or written on the subject, as far at least as the knowledge of this writer extends, has distinctly disclaimed any such purpose, and has declared his unshaken faith in the doctrines that from the first have been preached by the followers of John Wesley. It is one of the glories of Methodism that her ministry can preach from her pulpits what is written in her books, and that no suggestion has ever been made to revise or alter those great doctrines that by common consent throughout the Christian world have been known as "Methodist doctrines."

But it has been said that, though the resolution adopted by the General Conference does not imply any such thing, the speeches of some who advocated the passage of the resolution show that a "revision," and not a "restatement," is what is intended. Passing over the imputation that the General Conference adopted a resolution calling for a "statement of Methodist faith," when it intended to accomplish something else, it may be answered: (1) Granting, for a moment, that there were some who desired to accomplish a revision of the faith of the Church, the General Conference did not so desire, and the resolution, as it stands, expresses all that the General Conference proposes to do. (2) If there can be found a sentence of one or more speakers that is susceptible of any such construction, these brethren are to be judged, not by some expression that in the warmth of debate may have escaped them, but by their clear and emphatic deliverances; and, without exception, these deliverances expressed unqualified faith in the doctrines of the Church, and disclaimed any intention to change or revise or alter these doctrines. (3) If there be a single statement of a single speaker that unmistakably conveys this impression, it has escaped the attention of the writer of this paper.

The expression used by the mover of the resolution, that the Twenty-five Articles were "entitled to honorable superannuation," has been made to do frequent and arduous service, and the frequency of its use suggests the willingness of the opposers of the resolution to find anything more substantial upon which to hang an objection. The present writer agrees with Dr. W. F. Hunnicutt, who, in a recent article upon the resolution, characterized this expression as "inapt," and thinks it would have been well if the expression had not been used. But in every subsequent utterance the speaker earnestly declared his faith in the truths contained in these articles, and based his "inapt expression" solely upon their "inadequacy," showing that they emphasized some doctrines that to-day are in no need of especial emphasis, and omitted, or inadequately expressed, some great Methodist doctrines, that at the present time call for especial emphasis.

But the reader may ask: What then is proposed, since there is to be no revision of the creed or alteration of the faith of Methodism? Let us see.

The resolution calls for the appointment of a commission of five, one of whom shall be a Bishop, and all of whom shall be members of the Ecumenical Conference, to be held in 1911, who shall invite the appointment of similar commissions from the other Methodist bodies of the world. The joint commission, thus formed, shall prepare a statement of the faith that from the beginning has been believed and preached by the sons of Wesley, and the result of their labors shall be accepted as the faith of world-wide Methodism, when it shall have been adopted by a sufficient number of these Methodist bodies to give it an ecumenical character.

It is to be noted, first, that the commission is to act in concert with the representatives of the other great Methodist bodies of the world, and that until these bodies act, our commission can do nothing. It is to be noted, again, that this joint commission is to alter nothing, change nothing, revise nothing; but to prepare a statement of the distinctive and historic faith of Methodism. It is to be noted, finally, that this statement is to be recognized only when it has been adopted by a sufficient number of the great Methodist Churches of the world to give to it the character of a world-wide Methodist statement of faith.

An effort has been made to reflect upon this movement, because one of the most prominent advocates of its inauguration is connected with a theological institution. Whenever any church reaches the point where it must view with suspicion any proposition because it emanates from or is championed by a teacher of theology, it has reached a point where it should abandon its theological institutions. If the teaching of theology and the special study preparatory thereto or incident thereto, tends to unsettle the faith of the Christian ministry, our faith rests upon a frail foundation.

As a matter of fact, one name that appears upon the resolution adopted is that of a leading member of the faculty of our great theological school. He is a man of broad culture and fervent piety, who for twenty-five years has passed unchallenged among us, magnifying his great work as a teacher of the mind and heart of such of our young ministers as have come under his influence.

The second name is that of no theological teacher; but of a man who has been for years, in a pre-eminent degree, the exponent of the evangelical spirit of the Church, a man who in any gathering of churchmen would be recognized as an authority on world-wide missions, who, by his delicate and intimate relation to the forward movement of the Church, is rendered in a peculiar sense a wise counselor in the things pertaining to needs of the Church in her large movements. This man tells us that such a formulation of the faith of Methodism is greatly needed in the mission work to-day.

The third name appended to the resolution is that of a venerable man, the recognized leader of his Conference, who for nearly half a century has filled with honor the positions of pastor, presiding elder, editor, and college president, and who among his brethren has been equally highly esteemed for his devout spirit, his scholarly attainments, and his ability as a preacher.

One of the most earnest champions of the movement is a pastor in the full vigor of a splendid manhood, a zealous, cultivated man, a man who has a future and a past; while possibly the most dramatic figure on the affirmative side in the long and brilliant debate was that of a veteran presiding elder, a man nearing the close of a long and useful life, who urged with the fervor zeal of youth the necessity and opportuneness of the proposed legislation. By every token this resolution is the expression of an earnest effort of prayerful and thoughtful men to promote the glory of the Church they love and hasten the coming of the kingdom of the Christ they adore.

It has been objected that this matter was precipitated upon the Church, and that there was no demand for the action taken. That no precipitate action was taken is shown by the fact that the discussion extended over the greater part of three days and the resolution was adopted after a full consideration of the question in all its earings. Nor is the element of precipitancy be found in the form of action taken. Provision was made for a commission, the result of whose labors will be submitted for action to some future General Conference. The General Conference of 1910 and the Ecumenical Conference of 1911 will both have passed into history before the General Conference of 1914, or that of 1918 can act upon the report of this proposed joint commission. If any should ask what, in the meanwhile, Methodist people shall believe and Methodist preachers preach, the answer is at hand: Let Methodist people believe what they believe now and have always believed: no one is suggesting that they believe anything else. Let Methodist preachers preach what they preach now and have always preached: no one is suggesting that they preach anything else. Methodist preachers have been giving to Methodist people for the last one hundred and twenty-two years restatements of Methodist faith, and the Church has survived. Surely "the faith once delivered to the saints" is in no danger when ecumenical Methodism, through chosen representatives, shall undertake to give to the world a statement of the faith received from the fathers and preached, unaltered, by their sons to-day.

As to the demand for such a movement, it may not be impertinent to ask where this demand would be more likely to first manifest itself than in such a representative body of the lay and clerical membership of the Church as that which met in Birmingham in May last? There is apparent no legal nor moral reason why such a body should not have taken the initiative in the matter, and the pronounced majority of both clerical and lay delegates given the resolution after a full and exhaustive discussion would indicate that to many minds there existed a demand for such an action.

The length of this paper precludes the possibility of the discussion at this time of the interesting questions of the need of all this action, and the practical effects that may be expected to result therefrom.

A. F. WATKINS.

DR. WEEMS AND THE RESTATEMENT.

In the ADVOCATE of August 30 Dr. J. M. Weems says, alluding to the action of the General Conference, relative to a restatement of our faith: "This commission shall report back to this General Conference four years hence the result of their labors. Why is the word 'this' substituted for that 'next' in this report? Is it a technical advantage? This General Conference will not be in session four years hence. And would it not be in order for a majority of the next General Conference to determine that the action of the last General Conference made the work of this commission final?"

Now this language of my brother strongly intimates that the man who wrote the resolutions adopted, presumably Dr. Tillett, purposely perpetrated a fraud, a deception upon the Church. Is not Dr. Tillett utterly incapable of any such double dealing? Is not Dr. Lambuth or Carter equally trustworthy? One of the three wrote the resolutions—all three signed them. Has Dr. Weems ever read Dr. Tillett's speech in favor of the resolutions? If so, he read this: "And I beg to call your attention to the fact that, after all, this is not like the hymnbook, to be finally settled by a commission. It is not like that commission to whom was referred the matter of a new order of worship, that had the power finally to settle it, or that commission that was to write a catechism and finally settle it. The whole matter is to be brought back here to this General Conference; and not until this Conference has seen and considered its merits will anything be done with this new statement of faith.

These words express Dr. Tillett's view of the very matter Dr. Weems discusses. Has he fairly represented Dr. Tillett?

Again Dr. Weems quotes from Dr. Tillett's part of a little book in which he presents the doctrines of our Church:

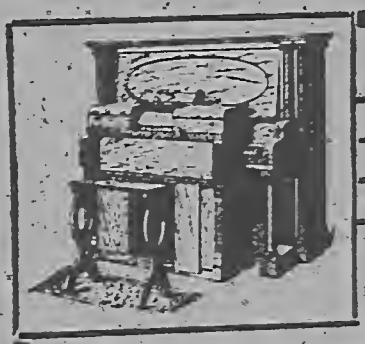
"In chapter 2, page 14, is this language: 'Nevertheless, the Bible is not wholly divine: it is rather divine-human, for much that is contained in it is human in its origin and did not need to be divinely revealed. This human portion of the Bible is, in fact, the larger part.' Why did not Dr. Weems quote further: 'It is however a faithful and trustworthy record, quite as much as that portion which records divine revelation.' Dr. Tillett merely suggests here that the genealogy and history of the Bible are trustworthy records, not divinely revealed, because no man already had them. And the revelation of them was not needed. Why did he not quote still further? He would have shown this: 'The divine revelations contained in the Bible are of transcendent importance.' He does quote from page 10: 'This special influence from the Holy Spirit upon the minds of the Biblical writers was designed to prevent them from making hurtful mistakes in the statements they should give of the great moral and spiritual truths of religion, and in an important sense to make their words God's words, and their books to be God's Book.'

Here Dr. Tillett tells us that the Spirit of inspiration guides the Bible writers in recording even the unrevealed history and biography and such, so that no hurtful errors may slip in. Dr. Weems makes these reflections upon this quotation: 'There are three facts stated here that the Twenty-five Articles oppose. One is that the small portion of the Bible left is without hurtful mistakes, yet it has mistakes.' The other two are, that it is only in an important sense that the words of the inspired writers are God's words, and that it is also only in an important sense that the small portion of the Bible left is God's Book.' I beg to insist that no such inferences are inferable. Dr. Tillett indicates nothing of the kind.

Dr. Weems declares that all of this that he quotes from Dr. Tillett's book is contradictory to the Twenty-five Articles. Let us see: Articles v and vi deal with the Holy Scriptures; and there is not one word or syllable in either of them, or in any other, that contradicts in any sense Dr. Tillett's utterances in the book alluded to, or in anywise contradicted by Dr. Tillett.

Dr. Weems begins his article with the words: 'I have tried to study the situation of this revision question before us.' Does not Dr. Weems know that there is 'no revision question before us'—that neither Drs. Tillett, Lambuth, Carter nor anybody else has proposed any revision of our creed or belief? Is it fair to falsely name an issue to make it unpopular? He then sets in to discuss the restatement question, i.e., he indicates that he is to discuss it; but, instead, he proceeds to discuss Dr. Tillett. What has Dr. Tillett's views, especially written in a book accepted by the authorities of the Church three years ago, got to do with the action of the General Conference on the restatement question? Was Dr. Tillett the General Conference? What, if everything that Dr. Weems can dream against Dr. Tillett be true, is there in it all any argument against the restatement of our faith?

An old lawyer once said to a pupil of his: "My son, when you get a case, if the law is on your side, stress the law; if the evidence is on your side, stress the evidence; but if both law and evidence are against you, abuse the attorney on the other side." Does Dr. Weems realize that the law and the evidence are against him? He has not produced one single argument against the restatement of our faith; but he has assiduously criticised Dr. Tillett; and would have us accept what he says against the Vanderbilt Dean as argument against restatement of our faith.



The Doctor entitles his article "The Issue Closed." How is that? Does he mean that there is nothing more to be said against the restatement? He has not said anything against it yet. To cry heretic, heretic! is not argument. If the Doctor has one argument let him bring it forward. Perhaps he means "The Issue is Closed" against the rest of us. Do not shut us off. This is my first utterance—let me have a chance. I have something to say in favor of restatement. Let us be fair. Let us be very brotherly! Let us have a full, free discussion! Let me suggest: Quit "abusing the attorney on the other side."

A FAMILY OF PREACHERS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: It, no doubt, will be interesting to some to know something about, what is perhaps, the largest family of preachers in this country. Many years ago there lived near Holmesville, Pike county, Miss., Quiney and Pattie Lewis. To them were born a large family of children. Quiney Lewis had one or two brothers in the Methodist ministry, I think local preachers. His oldest daughter, Annie, who was my grandmother, married Warren Alford, who was for some time during his life a Methodist local preacher. Two sons of Quiney Lewis, early in life, became Methodist preachers and joined the Mississippi Conference. These are H. P., Sr., and W. B. Lewis. They are my great-uncles, and, as I think, the greatest uncles I have. The youngest daughter of this family, Elizabeth, was twice married. Her second marriage was to John D. Warner, who was many years a useful local Methodist preacher, and about one year ago went home to his reward.

I have no recollection of ever seeing my great-grandmother, Pattie Lewis, but am told that she was a heroine of the faith of Jesus Christ; and a brave soldier of the cross. I have a distinct recollection of my great-grandfather, although he died when I was a small boy. I am told that, like Jacob of old, he was a veritable prince with God. H. P. Lewis, the older of his two sons in the ministry, is now pastor of the Vicksburg Circuit. If he takes work next year it will make one-half of a century for him of unceasing effective labor for the Church and the Master. W. B. Lewis, the younger of the two preacher sons, and the youngest son of the family, is now stationed at Mosspoint, Miss. He has served the Church as presiding elder several years, and has filled the best pulpits in the Mississippi Conference. H. P. Lewis, Sr., has five sons in the Methodist itinerancy. The oldest, B. W. Lewis, is serving the Bucatunna charge. John T. Lewis is in the North Mississippi Conference, and is stationed at Durant. H. P. Lewis, Jr., is pastor of the Adams charge. J. M. Lewis is on the Oak Ridge work. Osmond S. Lewis is in charge of the Braxton Circuit. Four of these sons (grandsons of Quiney Lewis) are graduates from Millsaps College. H. P. Lewis, Sr., has two daughters who married Methodist ministers. His oldest daughter, Elizabeth, was first married to James Jagers, who was a local preacher several years before his death. His third and youngest daughter, Lela, married Walter A. Terry, who is now stationed at Washington St., Vicksburg. W. B. Lewis has only two sons, and both are in the Mississippi Conference. The elder, B. F. Lewis, is serving the Canton station with great acceptability, and the younger, W. H. Lewis, is stationed at Port Gibson. These two brothers are both college graduates, and also from Vanderbilt University. W. B. Lewis' oldest daughter, Laura, married a prominent member of the Virginia Conference. The oldest daughter now living of Quiney Lewis is Abigail Regan, at Holmesville, Miss., the home of her youth. She has one son in the ministry, T. B. Regan, now stationed at Corvallis, Montana. She has one daughter, Martha, who married a member of the Mississippi Conference, P. Howard, now superannuated. Barney Lewis (son of Quiney) has one son, Samuel, living in Texas, who is a local Methodist preacher. He had one daughter, Lizzie (now dead), who married R. S. Gale, of the Mississippi Conference.

The oldest son of Warren Alford, Needham S. Alford, grandson of Quiney Lewis, living near Magnolia, Miss., has been a local preacher more than twenty years, and has long been an elder in the Church. Now we go to the next generation. N. E. Alford has three sons in the Mississippi Conference. (Remember these are the great-grandchildren of Quiney Lewis.) The writer of this article was ten years in the Louisiana Conference, but was transferred last December to the Mississippi Conference, and assigned to Silver City. L. F. Alford is serving the Pachuta work, and J. A. Alford is on the Tranquil charge. There is one great-granddaughter, Mollie Bullock, who married a Methodist preacher, H. E. Carter, now preacher in charge of the Lake City work. Then, of the descendants of one of the brothers of Quiney Lewis, I know of one Methodist preacher who is in the Conference (I do not know what Conference). Jimmie Lewis, son of Bennie Lewis, a resident of east Pike county, near old China Grove camp-ground. This makes twenty-six preachers in this immediate family. There may be others that I cannot call to mind now or that I may not know of who are ministers.

Now the Lewis family and the Jones family are connected by marriage. W. B. Lewis' wife is a sister of B. F. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference. I do not know how many Joneses there are in the ministry, but it seems that their name is "Legion."

I cannot close this article without referring to the other side of the house—to those in the ministry to whom I am related. Seaborn Alford was a local preacher and lived near Topisaw camp-ground. He has one grandson in the Mississippi Conference, Luke E. Alford, who is now stationed at South Side, Meridian. Seaborn was the youngest brother of my great-grandfather, Edwin Alford; and Earl Lesley Alford, pastor at Dekalb, is a distant relative. W. R. Harvell, of the Louisiana Conference, now on the Franklinton work, married my father's second cousin, Ada Brock. This is all of the Methodist persuasion. There are four Baptist preachers that I think of now. One of my grandfather's brothers, Ira Alford, was a Baptist minister. Walter Tynes, my father's first cousin, is the Baptist preacher at Palestine, Texas. Eugene McClendon, of Jennings, La., is pastor there of the Baptist Church, and Bennie Alford, of Pike county, graduated from the Mississippi Baptist College, and is serving a church somewhere in that denomination. So this is eight—four Methodist and four Baptist preachers added to the twenty-six already mentioned. This is thirty Methodist preachers and four Baptists, thirty-four in all.

Now, Dr. Boswell, if you know of, or hear of, anybody that can beat this I want you to let me know. I want to know something of the history of his family. It is remarkable that of so many ministers of the gospel in the family of Quiney Lewis all of them are Methodists. It is also remarkable that of the many grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and the children of the great-grandchildren, the tenets of Methodism have been handed down and preserved. The Lewis family is pre-eminently a Methodist family. And, what is best of all, it is notably a religious family. I believe, as a rule, there are family altars and Godly mothers and praying fathers when God calls so many out and separates them to the work of the ministry. The question has been asked, "why is there such a dearth of preachers? Why are so few young men consecrating themselves to the ministry? Why is the demand so much greater than the supply?" These are questions of vital interest confronting the Church to-day. I believe the answer, at least in part, is because there are not many homes like that of "Uncle Quiney and Aunt Pattie." God does not often call preachers out of Godless homes. If he does it is the exception, and not the rule. O, for Christian homes! Homes where Christ has an altar, and where the sons and daughters, too, are consecrated like Samuel, and given to God from earliest infancy!

The Christian Life.

PROMISES.

What a large part promises play in life. The child promises its parent to be obedient. The youth promises the maiden to be true. The debtor promises his creditor to make payment. And most solemn and fateful promise of all is that, made by the Christian to his God:—In faith and charity so to live the life entrusted to him, that at the end he may hear those wondrous gracious words, "Well done!" The key-note of that life is sounded in the Collect. And the unutterable reward, as well, with which it shall be ultimately crowned.—"That we loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises, which exceed all that we can desire."—Canadian Churchman.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Not in his circumstances, not in his habits, not in his hereditary station, but in himself, in a heart ready to give itself up to the worse instead of to the better powers of the world in a soul that loves baseness, frivolity, and falseness—there lies the real enemy. O the great strenght which comes when the discovery is made, and feeling that now at least the real battle has begun, the man solemnly, solidly settles himself down to the conquest of himself! The army which has carried by storm one fortification after another and found that it has only gained possession of an outpost more or less insignificant, now sits down before the central citadel, and the real siege begins. Then comes humility; and by humility self-understanding, and in self-understanding strength. Then comes the cry for God's help, which always brings its answer. Then comes the giving of the soul's own weakness into the abundant strength of Christ. Then comes the great reality of prayer. All of these when the man has at last got the centre of his sin, and is at last fighting with himself for his own soul.

Do you know the meaning of all that? Are you fighting that battle for self-conquest? If you are, you know with what a true exhilaration that which seems such a cruel and unnatural necessity of life may occupy and inspire the soul. Almost with a shout the man exclaims: "I will subdue myself for goodness and for God!" And though no shout is heard, though men beside him do not hear a sound, though the battlefield is in some inmost secret chamber of his secluded life, though the fairest flower of his own self-content are being torn to pieces by the wrestler's feet, yet still there is—do you not know it, many of you?—a deep, strong, solemn joy as the night draws nearer to the day and the self with which we fight grows weaker, and the self for which we fight grows freer—a joy deep and strong and solemn, with which no other pleasure in human living can compare.

And also there grows up a great charity and hope for every other man who is fighting the good fight with his sins—a charity and hope which is alone reward enough for all our pains!—PHILLIPS BROOKS.

THE PASSION FOR THE PERISHING.

Will you lend us your hearts for a few moments? Are you not professed "Christians and members of the church?" Do you not profess to "know Jesus is your personal Saviour and to love him above all others?" Do you not profess to "have the witness of the Spirit," and do you not openly rejoice in your "title to mansions in the skies?" Have you not announced many times that your sons are at peace with God, and that they expect to go to heaven some day? Then are you going to leave a "father or mother, a brother or sister, a teacher or pupil, a schoolmate or friend, even a enemy or neighbor," behind you as you travel to that heavenly city? Or, if you are going to take them along, what are you doing to induce them to go along? Honestly, can you say that you have been doing anything? Your words are loud-sounding sometimes, but in life and in deeds, can you be accused of earnestness? "Do you want to go to heaven alone?" Is that possible? can a religion be a selfish thing? Do you think that possible?

Have you had countless opportunities to invite your loved ones and friends to go with you to your place of worship? And yet, how long has it been since you have done so? Is it not your custom to get ready to go to the place of prayer on Sabbath morning, then go through the streets in a devout spirit, without asking a single one out of the hundreds whom you have passed to go up with you? On your way home do you not often lament the small attendance at the service? Do you not talk with people about "the weather, the markets, politics, amusements, prospects of the crops, business matters, or some sensation of the morning," and yet never mention the greatest of all matters? Do you ever show yourself especially interested in other people in any way? Since every man is a priest in these days, would it not be salutary for every man to think who it was went by on the other side? Is indifference to others the nature of the gospel of the Son of God? Is that the way Jesus did? Did he turn away from poor, blind Bartimeus? Did he fail to see the Samaritan woman at the well?" Did it ever occur to you that you are each the Christ to the world? Do you think that he always feels honored by your proxy? Do you want him to represent you above as you represent him here below? Would it not be a good idea to mend matters immediately?—The Optimist.

W. H. M. S.

For the benefit of some who would like to know how to create "interest," in order to overcome, in some degree, the demoralizing effect of "vacation," which, in some cases, should be called dissipation, we will say, "avoid the ruts," try something new.

Our "best-laid plans" had been so upset by vacation, dissipation, rain and heat, that we, of the Ruston Auxiliary, decided that something must be done; so we planned an all-day meeting, with "dinner on the ground," literary programme both "before and after taking." We invited our District Corresponding Secretary to "spend the day," which she gladly did, though she did not bring all the children. She did bring a friend with her. We ate, drank and were merry.

The morning programme consisted of prayer, Bible reading, with comments, some of our best leaflets read, and our best old songs, after which our embryo bishop, Robert Wynn, Jr., extended the following invitation to the audience:

"While all that we've heard has been very fine, I'm hungry and you are; so come out and dine."

The dinner was a thing to be deserved, especially at that time of day.

Mrs. Gillman led the devotional in the afternoon and conducted a question box or "round table" in a novel way. She asked the questions, and had as many ladies as there were questions to read the answers. They were required to "line up" and answer the same questions from memory, anyone failing to do so to "be seated," as in a spelling match, the object being to impress both questions and answers.

The closing feature of the afternoon programme was a guessing contest of eleven verses, each representing one of our officers' names, in which the space for name was left blank, to be supplied by the guesser. We will not ask you to publish the same, but if any lady or auxiliary wishes to try it, she may apply with stamps.

The following is a list of original questions propounded to our auxiliary by Mrs. S. A. Hardy, our Corresponding Secretary and Press Superintendent:

1. Who was the architect of the first parsonage. Ans. A great woman, who lived in Shunem. (See 2nd Kings, iv, 8-9.)

2. How was it furnished? Ans. With a bed, table, stool and candlestick. (2nd Kings, iv, 10.)

3. What was the preacher's name for whom it was built? Ans. Elisha.

4. By what two great acts of faith did he show his gratitude? Ans. By giving the woman a son, and by restoring him to life when he had died. (2nd Kings, iv, 16; vii, 34-37.)

In searching out the corners, we find many pastors are trying to work without their "strong right arm of power," the W. H. M. S., or if using it at all, it is in the "aid" sling. Brethren, get out of your own fight, and "help those women."

The punner and paragrapher of the Baltimore Southern Methodist says: "It is well to have a good light when you take up a collection. Contribution plates passed in 'a dim religious light' usually come up empty." The plates might turn out better if the collector was required to carry a cash register. But Deacon Jackson, an old friend of ours, says: "That is rather hard, and I think I will resign."

If our Lord gave his disciples instruction as to the organization, polity and mission of the churches between his resurrection and ascension, making them congregational and independent in government, it is somewhat singular that these disciples allowed St. Paul, without protest on their part, to exercise so much authority over their spiritual and temporal concerns. The thought suggested could be considerably expanded.

We informed our readers some weeks ago that a prominent member of the General Conference denied outright one of our articles of religion. Since then we have received a communication on restatement in which one or two of our articles are assailed; and in the Texas Christian Advocate of August 16 Rev. J. W. Hill, who voted for restatement, declares that one of our articles "contradicts St. Paul and contains a residuum of Calvinism, which no Methodist believes or preaches." What shall we have next?

* * *

Rev. W. T. Lowery, President of Mississippi College, a Baptist institution, in a short letter to the Baptist Record, tells of his success in canvassing for his school. At New Albany, Miss., a small town in the northern part of the State, his Baptist brethren, having just raised $600 to pay the salary of a foreign missionary, gave him $1,180 for his college. At Senatobia he secured $570. A Mississippi College boy, now in far-away China, gives him $20 a year, and he had just received a check for $25 "from Darkest Africa." And a professor in Stanford University, Cal., gave him his name for $50. "And every few days the mail brings a liberal subscription from some former student." What are the boys doing for Millsaps? What are the Methodists of Mississippi doing to draw on Major Millsaps, who has promised to duplicate every dollar given for the endowment of Millsaps College? Will they embrace the opportunity? Amen!

FAITH IN THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

Perhaps never in the history of the Church was the Word of God subjected to criticism so refined and dangerous, as it is to-day. The vulgarisms of Tom Paine long since lost their influence. The ridicules and witticisms of a later and more polished infidel are seldom mentioned. As far as we know there is not now a man in public life who parades as a disbeliever. But it is confidently affirmed that there is plenty of infidelity of an insidious character among our people. Those who stand accused would indignantly deny the accusation—for some of them are in the pulpit and in our institutions of learning. They have commanding positions, and can do harm. A few that might be named are eminent.

These men accomplish their destructive work, not by denying the truth of the Scriptures as a whole, but by teaching that the Bible is neither altogether a revelation, nor wholly inspired. And some go so far as to deny the supernatural and miraculous in our religion. Of course, much in the Book is not revelation, such as the historical parts, which make up so large a portion of the Word. Bible history is only a record of men and places and events, and of God's dealings with the human race. The history itself, however, is a matter of inspiration. That is, it was written by divine direction under the supervision of the Holy Spirit. This is affirmed: "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The critics hold to a limited inspiration—that is to say: some things are inspired and some are not, the divine element dominating only so far to keep out of the record all hurtful mistakes. This is a serious admission—we might say a fatal one—for, while the man who makes it may not stumble himself over his discovery of mistakes, he is the occasion of stumbling to the many who, unable to distinguish the true from the false, are led to reject all. Nothing could be more natural than for one who is persuaded of the untrustworthiness of Scripture narratives to conclude that what is set forth as revelations is equally untrustworthy. If a man is convinced that the first chapters of Genesis are purely allegorical, or that the record concerning Jonah and Nineveh is only fiction, or that miracles were tricks of jugglery, how can he be held to the basic truths of the Word of God? Would he not be likely to say: If all this history is simply fiction, what assurance have I that there is any truth in the doctrine of the Trinity, or of the incarnation of the Son of God? and what substantial basis is there for faith in the atonement or the resurrection?

Looking at the matter from a plain common-sense standpoint, and arguing in a logical way, I am bound to conclude that if the Bible is untrustworthy in one particular, it is not to be relied on in any, and is worthless, save as to its ethical teachings, and if valuable only for this, we can get rid of all the inconvenience and trouble it occasions on account of our sins against God by discarding it altogether and adopting a code that leaves God wholly out of consideration.

St. Paul declared that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." He had in mind the Old Testament Scriptures, in which Timothy had been instructed, and which had made him "wise unto salvation." He made no exception, or if he did, they are nowhere noted in his writings. We would not weaken the force of the statement by adopting the transposed rendering, which says "All God-inspired Scripture is profitable." That would be equivalent to admitting what we have denied, viz: that some things in the Scriptures are not inspired. Nobody will deny that all God-inspired Scripture is not only profitable, but true. What we would indelibly fix on the mind is, not the fact that the Bible contains the word of God, but the fact that the Bible is the word of God, to be accepted in all its parts, and obeyed in all its commands.

As we see it, there is no way to hold to the idea that parts of the Word of God are inspired and at the same time maintain faith in other parts, except by showing that the inspired portions are not in the book by authority of the reputed authors. Let the critics prove this, and give us an expurgated edition of the Word, and controversy will be at an end. Until they do this, plain people will be justified in accepting the Bible as it is—believing its history, acknowledging its miracles, and trusting in its promises for life and salvation. Destroy this confidence, and the brightness and beauty of life to them will go out forever, and the grave will close over them without hope of a reopening.

The higher critics, admitting them to be perfectly sincere, seem not to apprehend the damage they are capable of doing, when in the classroom before students, or in the pulpit before unlearned people, they propound the theory of a limited inspiration. They know not how they undermine confidence in the Word of God, and cause men to make shipwreck of the faith.

UPSETTING MOSES.

Somebody is always trying to upset Moses. No sooner does one set of theorists—sometimes dignified by the title of scientists—fail than another undertakes the task. Between them all Moses and his friends have a hard time. The last effort made to show that Moses was a fraud was by a scientist, going by the name of Balkwill. This gentleman, commenting on Moses' "pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night," does not deny the history of the matter as stated in the Scriptures, but explains the miracle in a very easy and natural way. He informs us that Moses used "naphtha or liquid bitumen (a product of coal oil), known to the Persians and Greeks," and that he "learned how to prepare it from the Egyptian priests." But how Moses managed to distill and transport a supply sufficient for all the long years of his wanderings—keeping the signal of the divine presence before the thousands of Israel, day and night, the scientist does not tell us. If this explanation of the wonder be true, then Moses was the most consummate and successful humbug that ever played before the world. Mr. Lincoln said: "You can fool some people all the time, and all the people some time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." Had Mr. Lincoln believed with Mr. Balkwill he would have excepted Moses. But, after all, it may be that the history written by Moses has much of the divine-human element in it, especially the human.

No individual of the human race can claim anything of God as a matter of right. Nor can he purchase anything at the hands of God. All he ever receives is of grace through faith. To make an effort outside of God's method is vain and presumptive.

DEATH OF MRS. S. S. KEENER

Mrs. Anna Mildred Keener, beloved wife of Dr. S. S. Keener, of the Louisiana Conference, died in this city on Saturday, Sept. 8, 1906, at 12:45 m. This news will prove a great shock to her many friends who had not heard of her serious illness. It is a sad blow to our dear Brother Keener, who is thus left alone in the world. She was all to him that a good wife could be—a helpmeet indeed. She was an active and useful worker in the Church, a devoted and efficient Christian. It was our pleasure to know Sister Keener and to bear testimony to the fact that she was greatly interested in her husband's work, and to the work of her Lord. It is hard to realize that one who, so short a time ago, was apparently in robust health, is gone from us, and "we sorrow not as those who have no hope," for she has entered into rest.

A GIFT TO MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

We publish with pleasure the following clipping from the Jackson (Miss.) Evening News:

Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, to-day made the pleasing announcement that Mr. I. C. Enochs, of this city, had given the sum of five thousand dollars towards the endowment fund of Millsaps College. Mr. Enochs did not desire any announcement made of this fact and has made none himself, but President Murrah made the announcement. President Murrah also states that he is meeting with much encouragement in getting up the additional endowment for the college. Dr. Murrah has been making a tour of the state in the interest of an additional endowment for this most excellent institution, and it is gratifying to note that the members of the Methodist denomination are appreciating the work done by the splendid college and are putting it in a position where it will be able to do better work. The next session of Millsaps College will open on the 20th of this month, and there will be a fine attendance from all over Mississippi. The outlook for Millsaps College was never brighter. Each year sees it progress and take a higher rank. It is one of the best colleges of its kind in the South, and its friends are proud of the record that it has made.

PERSONALS.

We are literally burdened with communications—field notes, obituaries, and other things. We will, if nothing happens, print everything in hand, except what we have laid aside as soon as possible.

Rev. Parmenas Howard, of the Mississippi Conference, is in the city for a few days undergoing treatment for nasal catarrh, from which he has been suffering for a while. Otherwise he is in good health.

Rev. J. C. Park, of Greenwood, Miss., has set apart Sept. 23 as "Religious Literature Day." He will present the claims of this ADVOCATE, and hopes to send us a list of new subscribers. Bro. Park succeeds in everything he undertakes.

Rev. J. H. Holder sends us good news from the charges of the Grenada District. He says: "Grenada District is moving this year. I have never heard of so many revivals of religion as we have had. From all over the District there comes in good reports."

Rev. M. E. White, of Walnut Grove (Miss.) Circuit, has just held two successful meetings—one at Pleasant Hill, the other at Beech Springs. The local preachers of this circuit are doing good service. This is Brother White's fourth year on that work—the best of the four.

Rev. A. L. Townsley, of Second Church, Baton Rouge (now called Keener Memorial, we believe) has just returned from his "summer vacation," visiting his father in Tennessee. His charge is in good condition, making progress along all lines. He is this week engaged in a meeting at Zachary, with Rev. R. O. Weir.

Dr. Richard Wilkinson, of Monroe, spent the month of August in New York where he preached twice every Sunday in the Metropolitan Temple, and lectured three times during the week—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. He met a cordial reception, and was treated kindly at the hands of the New Yorkers.

A note from Dr. W. B. Murrah commends the communication, "A Plea for Millsaps College," in last week's issue. He says though the writer having been misinformed, that "the statement respecting Aberdeen and Hattiesburg is inaccurate and might be misleading. Everywhere I go I find our people loyal to our college, and deeply interested in its welfare."

Before President Sligh, of Mansfield enters suit for damages against the Advocate, he will please hear an explanation. Our Publisher borrowed two or three cuts from one of the daily papers. Among them was one marked "Prof. T. S. Sligh." He thought it the very thing to accompany the article on "Mansfield College." We are the innocent victims of somebody else's mistake. That's how it was, Brother Sligh.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Vicksburg, sends us the following notice of the death of an elect lady: "Many of your readers will be grieved to learn of the death of Mrs. Bryant Willis, who died at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. J. H. Brabston, near Bovina, Miss., Sept. 4. Her home was the resting place of the itinerant. Her welcome was always cordial, and her associations helpful. She was the mother of Mrs. Bishop Galloway."

Rev. R. A. Clark, of Second Church, Columbus, Miss., will have the sympathy of a host of friends. He has just been called to mourn the death of his mother, who passed into rest from the old home near Kosciusko. She was seventy years of age, a consecrated Christian and a good mother. She died happy in the Lord. Ten children, all grown, survive her, and all were present at the funeral except one. May the Lord comfort the bereaved and sorrowing hearts.

OUR CONFERENCE TRAINING-SCHOOL AT MONTROSE, MISS.

There is still an indebtedness of $3,000 against the Montrose High School, our Conference Training-School. In addition to what they have already paid, the people of Montrose will pay $1,500 of the above amount, provided the Methodists of Mississippi will pay $1,500.

This property is worth $10,000 to the Church. The Methodists of Mississippi need this Training-School. With a little effort, and at a small cost, we can now secure a coveted position in educational circles. Let us take advantage of this opportunity, and make the investment in the name of our Lord and for the benefit of our Church.

Send check, postoffice order, express order, or registered letter for the amount you will pay to WALLO W. MOORE, Financial Agent.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.

Mr. Editor: Brother C. C. Weir, agent for our Orphanage Home Fund, has selected Saturday, Sept. 29, as "Work Day," at which time the Sunday school children are requested to work and make some money or contribute something to the above fund. Will not every Sunday-school superintendent bring this matter before his Sunday school?

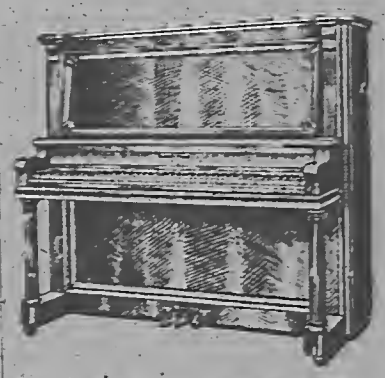
This work need not be confined to the children. Let everyone give something to this worthy cause on that day. As the ocean is made up of many drops of water, so these gifts, in the aggregate, should make up a splendid contribution.

I am glad to report that the work is progressing very well on the Shreveport District. A number of splendid revivals have been held with good results.

We are trying to close a deal to-day for a district parsonage, which means much to the district.

The opening of Mansfield College promises to be good. We have a splendid plant there and an excellent corps of teachers. It is a healthy place. Let our people rally to our own institutions.

We will welcome the Annual Conference to our city, and hope the brethren will feel very much at home among us. H. G. DAVIS.



CAMP MEETING.

We will commence a camp meeting on the Pollock Circuit, near Pollock, La., Oct. 9, and continue eight or ten days. I am expecting some good preachers and workers. We will hold our camp meeting this year under a tent, and by another year we expect to build a good, substantial tabernacle, and erect tents on the ground. The people can come in their wagons. Being near the town of Pollock, we can use the vacant houses. We have a beautiful grove, and plenty of good water. Brethren, pray for the meeting, that it may be a success. GEO. JACKSON, P. C.

DEDICATION NOTICE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Rev. R. H. Wynn will dedicate our new church at Antioch on Sunday, Sept. 16, 1906. All former pastors are kindly invited to be present. GEO. W. HUDDLEY, P. C.

FROM REV. H. W. MAY.

My Dear Doctor Boswell: On July 24 your scribe had the pleasure of beginning a protracted meeting in Mer-Rouge, La., with our pastor, Rev. C. T. Munholland. The meeting was continued eight and one-half days, growing in interest and power at each succeeding service, resulting in quite a revival in religious matters, and in an increase of six souls in our membership.

I found the pastor suffering very much from sore throat, and unable to preach, but in high favor with the people, and the happy recipient of every kindness his congregation could possibly show any one. Our people at Mer Rouge are a first-class, high-grade "society," and are laboring in loyalty and love with their pastor. They said many kind things of the good men we have sent to them—Hoffpauir, Denson, Barr, and many others are held in high esteem. Brother Munholland is doing a good work: Let prayer be made for his recovery. We need such men very much in Louisiana. His type is not found every day. He belongs to the "manly and faithful" class. I hope that no good man who reads these words will strain out an invidiuos comparison through the sieve of sensitiveness, fleeing while no one is pursuing—"charity thinketh no evil," "is not easily provoked." The church at Mer Rouge is a praisworthy little pack, and its pastor is a true, good man.

Brother Ivey, for many years a member of the Louisiana Conference, lives in said community, worshipping with us, and is ready to do anything our pastor calls upon him for. I had not seen him in twenty years. We met first at Ruston in 1886. He was then in the full strength of manhood; I, a novice, having my first view of an Annual Conference. Brother Ivey is the same dignified, scholarly gentleman—"his bow abides in strength."

My meeting at Waterproof closed Sunday last. It was continued twelve days, resulting in much good to the flock, family and pastor. Rev. R. A. Davis, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Confereuce, did some good work for us. His preaching had the old-time "trumpet-sound," and was to the edification, exhortation and comfort of my little flock.

The health of our brother has improved, and he will, I think, be ready for work this winter. He is now traveling the Tensas Mission, and making full proof of his ministry. The Monroe District is in good shape. The pastors, to a man, as far as I have been informed, are all (save Doctor Wilkinson, who is spending a month in New York) at their posts, and abundant in labor.

My little patch prospers. The fruit of the sowing of my praisworthy predecessors I am reaping. The people of Tensas parish are largely the offspring of the ante-bellum families, proverbial for that kindness, generosity and that broad hospitality peculiar to the South. My prayer is for piety to exercise and govern the broad and splendid powers of the people of this parish. Yours fraternally,

H. W. MAY.

Waterproof, La.

VIENNA CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: We have held revival meetings at all our churches but one. Our meetlng at Salem was postponed for two weeks, for a plural number of reasons.

Brother John G. Sloane aided us in meetlngs at Simsboro and Vienna. At Pine Grove we had Brother Wynn with us. Rev. T. S. Randle, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, assisted us at Antioch. We were successful in all of these meetings. Twenty-seven were added to the Church by baptism and vows, and two by certificate, with more to follow soon. In two of these meetings I baptized twelve infants.

Our new Church at Antioch is complete save the altar, which we hope to place soon, so as to have it dedicated in September. We hope to carry up a good report in December. Pray for us. Yours very truly,

G. W. HIVELEY.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

The new edition of the Discipline is now ready for delivery at 30 cents per copy post paid by mail, or $2.70 per dozen, by express not prepaid.

It contains the revisions and additions made by the last General Conference, also the latest Episcopal decisions, and should be possessed by all the Church members, especially the preachers and officials, as soon as practicable. Let orders come quickly and rapidly. Also, don't neglect to send 50 cents for a copy of the Methodist Armor, if you have it not already, and read up on your doctrines, while the subject of restatement is being discussed.

I am present at Lake, Miss., ready for service in the campmeeting which begins August 24. There is promise of an unusual number of tenters and a large attendance of people. All indications are propitious for a good meeting. The camp meeting at Shiloh closed last night. For several reasons there were not as many tenters as heretofore, nor as large attendance of people, nor as great visible results as at times previous. But much good was done, and there is no doubt that the faithful preaching, good singing and earnest praying during the occasion will bear fruit in time to come.

Week before last I assisted Brother Eckles at Independence, Cockrum Circuit, where there were seven accessions to the Church—two of them on profession of faith.

Your brother and in haste,

G. W. BACHMAN.

MRS. MARTHA BRUMFIELD was born in Robinson County, N. C., Nov. 18, 1830, and moved with her parents, Lemuel and Polly Lewis, to Marion County, Miss., when quite young. She joined the Methodist Church very early in life, and was a faithful member the rest of her days. She was married to Andrew Jackson Brumfield on September 11, 1851, who preceded her to their heavenly home twenty years ago. Sister Brumfield was a good Christian woman. She was a Methodist after the old type. She enjoyed religion. She loved her church and was a true friend to her pastor. Her children, a son and two daughters, she trained for the Lord, and they are on their way to meet her in heaven. For more than sixty years she was a member of Water Holes Church, and she will be missed there, but we know where to find her. She was taken seriously ill on the first day of July, and after eleven days of intense suffering she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. She requested to be buried beside her great-grand-baby, Orison F. Robins, infant son of Dr. E. D. and Martha Robins, who preceded her to the better land only three days. May God comfort the sorrowing ones. Her pastor,

J. E. WILLIAMS.

The following resolutions of respect were adopted by the Woman's Home Mission Society of West End M. E. Church, South, Alexandria, La., Aug. 28, 1906:

Whereas our Heavenly Father has removed from our midst to her home above our faithful Second Vice President, MRS. FLORENCE V. SMITH,

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to His holy will.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with her bereaved family in this their great sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of our Society, and that a copy be sent to the family of our deceased sister and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

MRS. J. W. BOOTH.
MRS. LILLIE WEEKS.
MRS. LIZZIE GRIFFIN.
MRS. N. M. STEWART.

Brother BUFORD A. SUMMER was born June 14, 1850, and died July 23, 1906. His parents were members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and were Christians of the highest type. Hence, it is not strange that their children early became church members and grew up devout Christian men and women. Brother Buford joined the church at 11 years of age, and, growing up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," it was but natural that he developed a strong religious character. In his young manhood he was a photographer, but in 1876 he moved to China Grove and settled down to farm life. About this time he became a member of the M. E. Church, South. On Feb. 6, 1878, he married Miss Celia Yarborough, with whom he lived happily until his death. A few years after his marriage he moved to Marion County, where, for more than twenty years, he lived and wrought for the good of his community. His labors were not in vain. He lived to see his community uplifted and advanced along all lines. The people trusted him in all things and always found him worthy of their confidence. He was, therefore, a good citizen. He was a model husband and father. His home life was beautiful. A strong man in every way, he was confidently trusted and looked to by his entire family. They loved him devotedly and obeyed his directions gladly. He was of an affectionate and considerate disposition, and consequently there was peace and happiness in his home. "A better father never lived" was truthfully said of him. He represented the highest type of Christian manhood. His devotion to his Church and the manner in which he discharged his religious duties attest to his religious character. At the time of his death he was steward, trustee and Sunday school superintendent of his church, and a delegate to the next Annual Conference. He never allowed his secular business, which was very extensive, to interfere with his religious duties. He never missed a quarterly conference. He enjoyed the services of his church. He was a sweet singer and able in prayer. It was a privilege to preach when he was present. He loved his pastor. Never a word of harsh criticism came from Brother Summer. His comfortable home was the pastor's home, and to visit his home was one of the delightful privileges of the writer. I loved Brother Summer and was sure that he loved me. Brother Summer was a liberal man. He gave cheerfully of his means to the cause of Christianity. With very little help he built Summer's Chapel, which stands a monument to his consecrated life. Next to his family, will his pastor miss him. We shall miss him, but we will meet him. The disease which brought about his death was blood poison, resulting from a wound inflicted by a nail piercing his foot. His illness covered a period of forty-six days, and was marked with intense suffering, which he endured patiently. We buried him at China Grove in the presence of a large concourse of people, and the deep grief manifested by all testified to the respect and esteem in which he was held. May God comfort the sorrowing ones and may his mantle fall upon one who will carry forward the work to which he so devotedly consecrated his life. His pastor. JAS. E. WILLIAMS.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

We, the committee appointed by the Third Quarterly Conference, Ponchatoula Circuit, Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, to draft suitable resolutions of respect in memory of Brother Adolph Rousseaux, beg leave to submit the following:

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Adolph Rousseau, our church has lost one of its most worthy and devoted members. As a steward, in which capacity he served many years, he was always faithful in the discharge of every duty devolving upon him. As a Sunday school superintendent it would be hard to find his equal in his devotion to this department of our Lord's cause. He loved the children and was ever ready "to go out into the highways and hedges and bring them in." He loved his church and was ready and willing to work in all its departments.

Resolved, That the presiding elder and members of this Quarterly Conference tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them as a token of the same; that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that they be recorded with the minutes of this Third Quarterly Conference.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 23, 1906.

SOME THOUGHTS IN REVIEW.

Golden Text: "And they were astonished at his doctrine, for his word was with power."—Luke 4, 32.

In the beginning of our Lord's ministry he was in the town of Nazareth, "where he had been brought up." It is supposed that he mingled daily with people who had known him since his early childhood. He must have been known among them as a man who would become prominent in the future of his country and nation. On a certain Sabbath day he was in their synagogue at the usual hour of worship, and the ruler gave him the book of the Prophet Isaiah to read. After reading the first verse and part of the second of chapter lxi, he gave the book to the ruler, or minister, and sat down. In reading, he had verily outlined his great mission on earth, and when he had truthfully interpreted their thoughts in regard to how he was received by his own townsmen, they were filled with wrath and took measures to put a cruel end to his life. Notwithstanding, "they" were astonished at his doctrine, for his word was with power." How well have we seen in our studies what great power was in his word and in his works. In his loving deeds there were the blessings received by those who came to him for physical aid; and a blessing to all who take the spiritual lesson of every work of love that he bestowed. With a sad heart he turned away, driven from his native town by those who should have been proud that they were neighbors. He knew what was in man, all the distrust and doubt, and ingratitude. So the faith and trust of childhood was prominent in his teaching. Some one has said: "He that loves children has a large portion of the Spirit of the Master." In teaching children, the teacher is taught many truths not to be learned elsewhere. This love for children must have attracted the attention of one of the apostles more than the others. John, in his writings many years afterwards often used the loving words, "my little children."

After speaking of humility as a requisition becoming a member of the kingdom, he showed that it could be learned from children. Then forgiveness was taught as a duty; that we would be forgiven on condition that we forgive others, and the pardon must be from the heart. If we sincerely desire God's pardon, we will ask it after having pardoned others. How easily could we do this if we loved our neighbor. Our neighbor is not only the one that needs help in world matters, it is also he that is looking for peace through Jesus Christ; and it is neighborly to show him the way that we have been blest in finding. In our endeavors to be forgiving and loving, we have need of prayer, and as the Master has taught us to pray and the "Spirit helpeth our infirmities." When "we know not what to pray for as we ought," we have powerful help in approaching the throne of grace.

It is very difficult to preserve a pleasing attitude in the presence of those who do not feel kindly toward us. Jesus' conduct when he accepted the invitation to dine with the Pharisee was the same as if he had come to partake of the hospitality of a friend. It was on the Sabbath, and the Pharisees watched him to see if he would heal the afflicted on that day. He did, and he also taught them that the best way in which to keep the Sabbath was to be engaged in works of love and benevolence.

This dinner at the Pharisee's house was a memorable event. Jesus had the attention of the host and guests, for "they watched him." He gave them much to think of, teaching them then, and all who have pharisaical tendencies since then. He used parable after parable, and "they were astonished at his doctrine," as were all who heard him, "for his word was with power." His very presence among them he compared to a feast to which all were invited, and to which they were ready to offer various kinds of excuses. The meaning of the parable to us is, the Holy Spirit presents to us the Gospel of salvation, and in our hearts we turn this way and that to find the most available excuse for not accepting; or if we have already accepted Jesus as our Savior, we want an excuse for not living a more active Christian life.

A wonderful picture, a heavenly truth painted in words that appeal to our tenderest nature, is the parable wherein a poor boy that becomes dissatisfied and thinks his home a cage, and goes away and gets into trouble. We love the poor boy because "the great artist" has so drawn the picture that he appeals to our pity and compassion. As a model for the father in this picture he took his own Father in heaven. As a model for the elder brother he could have taken almost any of us.

We know the Father, for "the Spirit witnesseth with our spirit that we are the children of God." We know that he is infinitely more ready to hear and answer than is the unjust judge; yet to strengthen our faith we must be persistent and "always pray and not to faint"—not as the Pharisees that thanked God for self-righteousness, but as the Publican, who sought a righteousness by faith in Jesus Christ.

Let us earnestly desire to have that within us that would call forth the love of Jesus, as did the rich young ruler. Though when we know what we must do to have treasure in heaven, let us do it with our might. Let us deny ourselves, and whatever the cross may be, it is laid on us by loving hands; we will gladly take it up and follow the Master.

Bartimeus was blind and sat by the wayside and begged, yet he listened and heard of Jesus. If all would listen to what the Savior of the world is saying to-day, through his holy Word, and through the lives of his consecrated followers, they would hear of a rest and peace not found in serving mammon. What a miracle was performed in the case of Zaccheus, as well as Bartimeus. Zaccheus was a miracle of grace, such as are we all. Praise the Lord!

Wherever Jesus enters, let him enter with triumph, for he is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." He first cleansed the temple, then taught there. He has cleansed our hearts from sin, and now we learn of him, for "he is lowly in heart." "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this King of Glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of Glory."

Jesus leads us among spiritual things, and helps us to spiritually discern them. He also teaches us of earthly things. To properly render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's we must be well instructed and long accustomed in rendering unto God the things that are God's.

The Master tells so much of life in heaven, and of leaving our present abode in the flesh. At the time of planting, the seed is put in the ground, the body of the seed decays, but the life springs forth into growth upward toward the Giver of Life; so is the resurrection. "And we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii, 2.

FROM REV. H. W. MAY.

My Dear Doctor Boswell: On July 24 your scribe had the pleasure of beginning a protracted meeting in Mer Rouge, La., with our pastor, Rev. C. T. Munholland. The meeting was continued eight and one-half days, growing in interest and power at each succeeding service, resulting in quite a revival in religious matters, and in an increase of six souls in our membership.

I found the pastor suffering very much from sore throat, and unable to preach, but in high favor with the people, and the happy recipient of every kindness his congregation could possibly show any one. Our people at Mer Rouge are a first-class, high-grade "society," and are laboring in loyalty and love with their pastor. They said many kind things of the good men we have sent to them—Hoffpauir, Denson, Barr, and many others are held in high esteem. Brother Munholland is doing a good work. Let prayer be made for his recovery. We need such men very much in Louisiana. His type is not found every day. He belongs to the "manly and faithful" class. I hope that no good man who reads these words will strain out an invidiuos comparison through the sieve of sensitiveness, fleeing while no one is pursuing—"charity thinketh no evil," "is not easily provoked." The church at Mer Rouge is a praisworthy little pack, and its pastor is a true, good man.

Brother Ivey, for many years a member of the Louisiana Conference, lives in said community, worshipping with us, and is ready to do anything our pastor calls upon him for. I had not seen him in twenty years. We met first at Ruston in 1886. He was then in the full strength of manhood; I, a novice, having my first view of an Annual Conference. Brother Ivey is the same dignified, scholarly gentleman—"his bow abides in strength."

My meeting at Waterproof closed Sunday last. It was continued twelve days, resulting in much good to the flock, family and pastor. Rev. R. A. Davis, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, did some good work for us. His preaching had the old-time "trumpet-sound," and was to the edification, exhortation and comfort of my little flock.

The health of our brother has improved, and he will, I think, be ready for work this winter. He is now traveling the Tensas Mission, and making full proof of his ministry. The Monroe District is in good shape. The pastors, to a man, as far as I have been informed, are all (save Doctor Wilkinson, who is spending a month in New York) at their posts, and abundant in labor.

My little patch prospers. The fruit of the sowing of my praisworthy predecessors I am reaping. The people of Tensas parish are largely the offspring of the ante-bellum families, proverbial for that kindness, generosity and that broad hospitality peculiar to the South. My prayer is for piety to exercise and govern the broad and splendid powers of the people of this parish. Yours fraternally,

H. W. MAY.

Waterproof, La.

VIENNA CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: We have held revival meetings at all our churches but one. Our meeting at Salem was postponed for two weeks, for a plural number of reasons.

Brother John G. Sloane aided us in meetings at Simsboro and Vienna. At Pine Grove we had Brother Wynn with us. Rev. T. S. Randle, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, assisted us at Antioch. We were successful in all of these meetings. Twenty-seven were added to the Church by baptism and vows, and two by certificate, with more to follow soon. In two of these meetings I baptized twelve infants.

Our new Church at Antioch is complete save the altar, which we hope to place soon, so as to have if dedicated in September. We hope to carry up a good report in December. Pray for us. Yours very truly,

G. W. HIVELEY.

Vienna, La.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

The new edition of the Discipline is now ready for delivery at 30 cents per copy post paid by mail, or $2.70 per dozen, by express not prepaid.

It contains the revisions and additions made by the last General Conference, also the latest Episcopal decisions, and should be possessed by all the Church members, especially the preachers and officials, as soon as practicable. Let orders come quickly and rapidly. Also, don't neglect to send 50 cents for a copy of the Methodist Armor, if you have it not already, and read up on your doctrines, while the subject of restatement is being discussed.

I am present at Lake, Miss., ready for service in the campmeeting which begins August 24. There is promise of an unusual number of tenters and a large attendance of people. All indications are propitious for a good meeting. The camp meeting at Shiloh closed last night. For several reasons there were not as many tenters as heretofore, nor as large attendance of people, nor as great visible results, as at times previous. But much good was done, and there is no doubt that the faithful preaching, good singing and earnest praying during the occasion will bear fruit in time to come.

Week before last I assisted Brother Eckles at Independence, Cockrum Circuit, where there were seven accessions to the Church—two of them on profession of faith.

Your brother and in haste,

G. W. BACHMAN.

MRS. MARTHA BRUMFIELD was born in Robinson County, N. C., Nov. 18, 1830, and moved with her parents, Lemuel and Polly Lewis, to Marion County, Miss., when quite young. She joined the Methodist Church very early in life, and was a faithful member the rest of her days. She was married to Andrew Jackson Brumfield on September 11, 1851, who preceded her to their heavenly home twenty years ago. Sister Brumfield was a good Christian woman. She was a Methodist after the old type. She enjoyed religion. She loved her church and was a true friend to her pastor. Her children, a son and two daughters, she trained for the Lord, and they are on their way to meet her in heaven. For more than sixty years she was a member of Water Holes Church, and she will be missed there, but we know where to find her. She was taken seriously ill on the first day of July, and, after eleven days of intense suffering, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. She requested to be buried beside her great-grand-baby, Orison F. Robins, infant son of Dr. E. D. and Martha Robins, who preceded her to the better land only three days. May God comfort the sorrowing ones. Her pastor,

J. E. WILLIAMS.

The following resolutions of respect were adopted by the Woman's Home Mission Society of West End M. E. Church, South, Alexandria, La., Aug. 28, 1906:

Whereas our Heavenly Father has removed from our midst to her home above our faithful Second Vice President, MRS. FLORENCE V. SMITH,

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to His holy will.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with her bereaved family in this their great sorrow,

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of our Society, and that a copy be sent to the family of our deceased sister and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

MRS. J. W. BOOTH.
MRS. LILLIE WEEKS.
MRS. LIZZIE GRIFFIN.
MRS. N. M. STEWART.

Brother BUFORD A. SUMMER was born June 14, 1850, and died July 23, 1906. His parents were members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and were Christians of the highest type. Hence, it is not strange that their children early became church members and grew up devout Christian men and women. Brother Buford joined the church at 11 years of age, and, growing up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," it was but natural that he developed a strong religious character. In his young manhood he was a photographer, but in 1876 he moved to China Grove and settled down to farm life. About this time he became a member of the M. E. Church, South. On Feb. 6, 1878, he married Miss Celia Yarborough, with whom he lived happily until his death. A few years after his marriage he moved to Marion County, where, for more than twenty years, he lived and wrought for the good of his community. His labors were not in vain. He lived to see his community uplifted and advanced along all lines. The people trusted him in all things and always found him worthy of their confidence. He was, therefore, a good citizen. He was a model husband and father. His home life was beautiful. A strong man in every way, he was confidently trusted and looked to by his entire family. They loved him devotedly and obeyed his directions gladly. He was of an affectionate and considerate disposition, and consequently there was peace and happiness in his home. "A better father never lived" was truthfully said of him. He represented the highest type of Christian manhood. His devotion to his Church and the manner in which he discharged his religious duties attest to his religious character. At the time of his death he was steward, trustee and Sunday school superintendent of his church, and a delegate to the next Annual Conference. He never allowed his secular business, which was very extensive, to interfere with his religious duties. He never missed a quarterly conference. He enjoyed the services of his church. He was a sweet singer and able in prayer. It was a privilege to preach when he was present. He loved his pastor. Never a word of harsh criticism came from Brother Summer. His comfortable home was the pastor's home, and to visit his home was one of the delightful privileges of the writer. I loved Brother Summer and was sure that he loved me. Brother Summer was a liberal man. He gave cheerfully of his means to the cause of Christianity. With very little help, he built Summer's Chapel, which stands a monument to his consecrated life. Next to his family, will his pastor miss him. We shall miss him, but we will meet him. The disease which brought about his death was blood poison, resulting from a wound inflicted by a nail piercing his foot. His illness covered a period of forty-six days, and was marked with intense suffering, which he endured patiently. We buried him at China Grove in the presence of a large concourse of people, and the deep grief manifested by all testified to the respect and esteem in which he was held. May God comfort the sorrowing ones and may his mantle fall upon one who will carry forward the work to which he so devotedly consecrated his life. His pastor.

JAS. E. WILLIAMS.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

We, the committee, appointed by the Third Quarterly Conference, Ponchatoula Circuit, Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, to draft suitable resolutions of respect in memory of Brother Adolph Rousseaux, beg leave to submit the following:

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Adolph Rousseau, our church has lost one of its most worthy and devoted members. As a steward, in which capacity he served many years, he was always faithful in the discharge of every duty devolving upon him. As a Sunday school superintendent it would be hard to find his equal in his devotion to this department of our Lord's cause. He loved the children and was ever ready "to go out into the highways and hedges and bring them in." He loved his church, and was ready and willing to work in all its departments.

Resolved, That the presiding elder and members of this Quarterly Conference tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them as a token of the same; that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and that they be recorded with the minutes of this Third Quarterly Conference.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 23, 1906.

SOME THOUGHTS IN REVIEW.

Golden Text: "And they were astonished at his doctrine, for his word was with power."—Luke 4:32.

In the beginning of our Lord's ministry he was in the town of Nazareth, where he had been brought up. It is supposed that he mingled daily with people who had known him since his early childhood. He must have been known among them as a man who would become prominent in the future of his country and nation. On a certain sabbath day he was in their synagogue at the usual hour of worship, and the ruler gave him the book of the Prophet Isaiah to read. After reading the first verse and part of the second of chapter lxi, he gave the book to the ruler, or minister, and sat down. In reading he had verily outlined his great mission on earth, and when he had "truthfully" interpreted their thoughts in regard to how he was received by his own townsmen, they were filled with wrath and took measures to put a cruel end to his life. Notwithstanding, "they were astonished at his doctrine, for his word was with power." How well have we seen in our studies what great power was in his word, and in his works. In his loving deeds there were the blessings received by those who came to him for physical aid, and a blessing to all who take the spiritual lesson of every work of love that he bestowed. With a sad heart he turned away, driven from his native town by those who should have been proud that they were neighbors. He knew what was in man, all the distrust and doubt, and ingratitude. So the faith and trust of childhood was prominent in his teaching. Some one has said: "He that loves children has a large portion of the Spirit of the Master." In teaching children the teacher is taught many truths not to be learned elsewhere. This love for children must have attracted the attention of one of the apostles more than the others. John in his writings many years afterwards often used the loving words, "my little children."

After speaking of humility as a requisite for becoming a member of the kingdom, he showed that it could be learned from children. Then forgiveness was taught as a duty; that we would be forgiven on condition that we forgive others, and the pardon must be from the heart. If we sincerely desire God's pardon, we will ask it after having pardoned others. How easily could we do this if we loved our neighbor. Our neighbor is not only the one that needs help in world matters; it is also he that is looking for peace through Jesus Christ; and it is neighborly to show him the way that we have been blest in finding. In our endeavors to be forgiving and loving we have need of prayer, and as the Master has taught us to pray and the "Spirit helpeth our infirmities." When "we know not what to pray for as we ought," we have powerful help in approaching the throne of grace.

It is very difficult to preserve a pleasing attitude in the presence of those who do not feel kindly toward us. Jesus' conduct when he accepted the invitation to dine with the Pharisee was the same as if he had come to partake of the hospitality of a friend. It was on the Sabbath, and the Pharisees watched him to see if he would heal the afflicted on that day. He did and he also taught them that the best way in which to keep the Sabbath was to be engaged in works of love and benevolence.

This dinner at the Pharisee's house was a memorable event. Jesus had the attention of the host and guests, for "they watched him." He gave them much to think of, teaching them then, and all who have pharisaical tendencies since then. He used parable after parable, and "they were astonished at his doctrine," as were all who heard him, "for his word was with power." His very presence among them is compared to a feast to which all were invited, and to which they were ready to offer various kinds of excuses. The meaning of the parable to us is, the Holy Spirit presents to us the Gospel of salvation, and in our hearts we turn this way and that to find the most available excuse for not accepting; or if we have already accepted Jesus as our Savior, we want an excuse for not living a more active Christian life.

A wonderful picture, a heavenly truth painted in words that appeal to our tenderest nature, is the parable where in a poor boy that becomes dissatisfied and thinks his home a cage, and goes away and gets into trouble. We love the poor boy because "the great artist" has so drawn the picture that he appeals to our pity and compassion. As a model for the father in this picture he took his own Father in heaven. As a model for the elder brother he could have taken almost any of us.

"We know the Father, for the Spirit witnesseth with our spirit that we are the children of God." We know that he is infinitely more ready to hear and answer than is the unjust judge; yet to strengthen our faith we must be persistent and "always pray and not to faint"—not as the Pharisees that thanked God for self-righteousness, but as the Publican, who sought a righteousness by faith in Jesus Christ.

Let us earnestly desire to have that within us that would call forth the love of Jesus, as did the rich young ruler. Though when we know what we must do to have treasure in heaven, let us do it with our might. Let us deny ourselves, and whatever the cross may be, it is laid on us by loving hands; we will gladly take it up and follow the Master.

Bartimeus was blind and sat by the wayside and begged, yet he listened and heard of Jesus. If all would listen to what the Savior of the world is saying to-day, through his holy Word, and through the lives of his consecrated followers, they would hear of a rest and peace not found in serving mammon. What a miracle was performed in the case of Zaccheus, as well as Bartimeus. Zaccheus was a child of grace, such as are we all, praise the Lord!

Wherever Jesus enters, let him enter with triumph, for he is "King of kings and Lord of lords." He first cleansed the temple, then taught there. He has cleansed our hearts from sin, and now we learn of him, for "he is lowly in heart." "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this King of Glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of Glory."

Jesus leads us among spiritual things, and helps us to spiritually discern them. He also teaches us of earthly things. To properly render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's we must be well instructed and long accustomed in rendering unto God the things that are God's.

The Master tells so much of life in heaven, and of leaving our present abode in the flesh. At the time of planting, the seed is put in the ground, the body of the seed decays, but the life springs forth into growth upward toward the Giver of Life; so is the resurrection. "And we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii:2.

HAMBURG CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I take this opportunity to report from Hamburg Charge. After considerable moving around after the Annual Conference adjourned, I was finally placed by my presiding elder in charge of the Hamburg Circuit. I have not, by any means, been idle since I came on the circuit. There is always a plenty for a Methodist itinerant pastor to do, if be will do his duty.

I have about completed our church here at Hamburg, put in new pews and paid for them; repaired another church at an expense of some fifty or sixty dollars; preached ten times a month, and conducted prayer meetings once, and sometimes twice, a week. We have the financial part of the work well in hand, and, all things considered, we are doing fairly well.

We have a Sunday school at every appointment on the charge and two extra schools—that is, we have eight Sunday schools.

We have not done as well in taking subscriptions for the New Orleans Christian Advocate this year as we did last year; but have sent in twenty-two new subscribers.

Our protracted meetings this year have been good. The meeting at Woodlawn Schoolhouse deserves special mention. We had about one dozen or more genuine conversions. Some of the young people who were converted said if their parents would not hold family prayer, they would. Great good was accomplished there. The meeting at McNair was good and edifying to those who attended. Brother J. H. Foreman did the preaching. The meeting at Knoxville bids fair to be a good one, but we had to close on account of the sickness of the pastor before the time limit set for the meeting had been reached.

Our meeting at Hamburg was the best, so the people say, they have had for several years. Twenty-two joined on profession of faith, one by letter. Our meeting at Bethel was good.

The meeting at Ebenezer was fine. Twelve joined by profession and five by letter, and a new Sunday school was organized at this point.

We have one more meeting to hold at Ebenezer; then we will be through for this year with protracted meetings. Brethren, I desire to ask special interest in your prayers for our success there. The Lord helping us, we want to be able to go to the Annual Conference with a full report.

I forgot to mention that Brothers W. H. Lewis, M. B. Sharbrough and R. W. Thurman assisted me in the meetings mentioned above. And more faithful, earnest preaching I have not heard in a long time. And last, but not least by any means, Brother Ira B. Robertson, a superannuate of our Conference, came in with a bold stroke of bis lancet and did us some very efficient service. He has not forgotten how to preach yet. God bless Brother Robertson.

God bless you, Brother Boswell, for giving us such an excellent paper to read. More anon. Yours cordially,

W. L. BLACKWELL.

Hamburg, Miss., Aug. 31.

LAKE CAMP MEETING.

The Lake Camp Meeting began on the night of tbe 24th of August and closed the night of the 30th. There were twenty-five sermons preached to large and attentive congregations. Tbe preaching was done by I. L. Peebles, I. W. Cooper, G. W. Bachman, Waldo W. Moore, John A. Moore and L. E. Alford. Tbe sermons, as a whole, were as able as we ever heard in any meeting here. There were thirty-nine new members received, one by certificate and two applicants to be received. There were three children baptized. The meeting was probably the best ever held here. According to the plan of the Presiding Elder, he could only be with us a day or so, and the pastor in charge was sick part of the time, but the good work went on.

There were present of the local ranks Joe Hall, Earnest Eaddy and Geo. W. Huddleston. L. J. Jones, a superannuate, was here at the close. L. E. Alford preached a sermon from John vi, 70, that we hope he will put in pamphlet form for a wide range of usefulness. Methodism and the cause of God received a great benefit from the meeting. Brother Peebles was with us from first to last, and did nearly half of the preaching, some of the best he ever did. To God be all the glory. C. McDONALD.

TEACHING SCHOOL.

"I don't like doing housework,"
Said little Milly Brown;
"I don't like washing dishes
Or sweeping cobwebs down.
I do not like the ironing,
Or making bread and pie;
I hate to do the scrubbing,
And sewing makes me sigh.

"But there's one thing I do like
In weather hot or cold—
From morning until evening
I just love teaching school.
So, early every morning,
I take my little broom,
And teach him how to hurry
And sweep the sitting-room.

"And then I teach the duster
The furniture to clean,
Till everything is shining
That room's four walls between.
Each day I teach the dish-cloth
To wash the cups and spoons,
And all the time we study
We sing the gayest tunes.

"I teach my little flatiron
To gallop here and there,
And leave the clothes behind him
All shining, smooth and fair.
I teach my little mopstick
To scrub the kitchen floor.
He says his lesson better
Each day than ever before.

"I teach my little needle
To hem, to stitch, and run;
And, oh, he smiles so proudly
When well the lesson's done!
At night, when school is over,
And lessons all are said,
I teach my feet to carry
The teacher off to bed."

BERNICE CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have finished our protracted meetings on the Bernice Charge. My meetings at Dubach, Bernice and Harmony Chapel having been reported, I will give you the results of our two last meetings, viz.: I held my meeting at old Alabama Church. That church is where Brother J. D. Harper and his brothers and sisters were reared and Rev. W. E. Akin was dedicated to God and went forth to preach the Gospel. We had Rev. J. R. Sanders, of Little Rock Conference, to help us. We had a very fine meeting. The Church was graciously revived and nine added to the membership—all grown people but one. We went from this meeting to Sharon Schoolhouse, three miles above Harmony Chapel, in what is generally conceded to be a Baptist community in full. We really had nineteen Methodists there already. The Baptists had turned me out of their church about three months before this meeting, for I had been preaching there for those few Methodists the third Saturday of each month. So we hauled benches from the chapel and engaged in the fight. The Baptist state evangelist, W. J. Quisenberry, had preceded me by ten days, and had wiped up the Methodists on baptism, and defied the whole Church to prove to him that infant baptism was taught in the Bible, etc., and my people were about to take to the bushes. We commenced on Sunday night, the 19th ult., with Presiding Elder Carter in the stand. He preached a very able sermon that night and Monday morning at 11, and had to leave Monday evening for Ruston to hold his Quarterly Conference. Brother Carter won the hearts of all. His preaching was very effective.

Brother John G. Sloane, of Farmerville, came to me Monday evening. He preached, prayed and shouted Thursday night and Friday morning, when the services closed. We had a veritable Pentecost. Many were reclaimed, many precious souls swept into the kingdom, eleven joined by baptism, one mother of 60 years with a grown son and daughter being graciously saved, shedding tears of rejoicing.

A more genuine revival, I think, I have never held. I am very much indebted to Brother M. C. Torpley for his faithful services in leading the choir with his consecrated voice. A noble, useful man, indeed, to the church; he is a true friend to the pastor in charge.

The young folk tried themselves. Miss Sallie Torpley and Miss Mattie Eula rendered faithful and efficient services at the organ. All did what they could to make the meeting the success it was. We have had 126 to join to date, and prospects good for a fine year along all lines. Pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

W. T. WOODWARD, P. C.

FROM REV. W. W. MURRAY.

Dear Doctor: On the 7th of July I went to Mt. Vernon to assist that consecrated local preacher, Rev. C. A. Hastings, who is doing supply work on the Homo Chitto charge. It was with some difficulty that we persuaded the people that they had time for the meeting there, but they did not want it to close Friday. There were ten additions to the church and the community much revived.

On the 18th of August I assisted him at Homo Chitto Chapel, the best point on the charge. We found the people in a good shape for a meeting. It was one of the best I have been in for some time. There were several bright conversions. I sold several books, and secured two new subscribers and two renewals to the Advocate.

They had the best music that I ever heard, I believe. Dr. Jones made no mistake when he placed Brother Hastings on that charge. He is consecrated and true to the church, and his people like him.

I have had some good meetings on my charge (Wilkinson) assisted mostly by Rev. J. L. Griffin, who is a very promising young preacher and is going up for admission next December.

I have had twenty-seven accessions on profession this year and quite a number of conversions, and several agreed to erect family altars.

My meeting for this week was a failure, owing to the serious illness of my baby, and the preacher who was to help me was sick also.

Respectfully, W. W. MURRAY.

Gloster, Miss.

PONCHATOULA CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor: Our third Quarterly Conference convened at James' Chapel, Aug. 18-19. Rev. R. W. Tucker, P. E., was on hand and preached to a large congregation on Saturday at 11 o'clock, after which a beautiful dinner was spread, and after all had satisfied the inner man, we repaired to the church where the Conference was called for business.

The reports on all lines were encouraging. The presiding elder remarked that he thought it the best that was ever given at one quarter in the history of the Ponchatoula Circuit.

On Sunday was brought together the largest congregation ever seen at James' Chapel. The presiding elder preached at 11 o'clock, after which another good dinner was spread. Bro. Tucker left us immediately after dinner, and this writer preached at 3 p. m., and continued the meeting till the following Friday night. Three were added to the church, and the membership greatly revived.

We rejoice over the success of our Lord's cause in these parts, and we give him all the praise.

Yours fraternally,

F. N. SWEENEY, P. C.

Glances at the World.

The Department of Information of the American Bible Society under date of September 1, 1906, furnishes the press the following note: "The visit of Mr. Elihu Root, the Secretary of State, to our sister South American republics and the meeting of the Pan-American Conference in Rio Janeiro have awakened a widespread interest in this country in our nearby neighbors. The American Bible Society has been quietly and unobtrusively weaving a bond of interest between these republics and the United States for more than forty years. Last year its forty-four South American representatives visited 1,129 towns and villages in South America and circulated among the people 98,225 volumes of Spanish, Portuguese and other Scriptures. All of this work is under the care of two agents, one residing in Rio Janeiro and the other in Buenos Ayres." No religious agency of the country has accomplished greater things than the American Bible Society during its ninety years of existence. And it is still at work giving the Word of God to the world. It is an agency of untold good.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, who has been traveling in the old world for nearly a year, reached New York on 29th of August. His home coming was marked by such an ovation as was never before tendered a private citizen. The people gathered from all sections of the country—from, perhaps, every state, to do him honor. The grand reception was held in Madison Square Garden, New York. Addresses of welcome were made, to which Mr. Bryan responded. Preparatory to this reception, Democratic state conventions, and state legislatures have been endorsing Mr. Bryan for the Democratic leader in 1908. This Mr. Bryan knew, and his speech was in part an outline of the policy which he desires his party to adopt in the campaign for the Presidency. The meeting of the National Convention is nearly two years off, but at this early moment it is plain that the party is nearer to agreement on Mr. Bryan as their leader than it was six years ago. It looks now as if he will be the candidate, and he is more popular to-day than he ever was. What his chances for success cannot be foretold. Much will depend on the election for congressmen to take place in November. If the Democrats carry the Lower House, as they now expect, Mr. Bryan will be the candidate. If not, then it is likely they will turn to some other man.

We have always been in favor of doing everything for the negroes that will help them materially and spiritually. Whatever is done for them in these particulars, if properly appreciated and used, will put them on a self-sustaining basis, and in a way to the fullest development of which they are capable. We believe this sentiment is general among our Southern people. Not only so, as we have seen within the last week in one of our religious journals (north of us), that "the Southern people hate the negro." They no more hate the negro than do the people of the North, and their charities are fully as practical and helpful. As partial proof of this we quote from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of Atlanta: "Mr. Joseph Baynard, of Guyton, Ga., has donated to the negroes there a lot of land on which to build a hospital. Unable to erect the building, he has gone as far as he could and given the land. This he does to show his appreciation of the faithfulness to him of those who were once his slaves. The older negroes are to have the first claim to the privileges when it is opened. Now let those who question the Southern people's kindness of feeling toward the negro make a note of Mr. Baynard's gift."

Not every man goes into politics for his health. Something else is in view. The majority of politicians are content with office to which is attached a little pay. A few aim at something higher. Others care nothing for office if they can succeed in putting their friends in, and otherwise directing affairs to their own advantage. This is the case with that class called "bosses." There is money in being a boss—more or less. There is much of it to the boss of a big city. How such large fortunes get into their possession is a mystery to the public. How one rises from the obscurity of a common saloon keeper to a recognized millionaire in financial circles, and the virtual director, legislative and executive, of city government, is one of the marvels of modern times. It is reported that the present boss of Tammany Hall, New York, has made money faster than any man that has ever filled the place, and, if he should be retired soon, will go out the richest man that ever left, except Richard Croker. And this man four years ago, outside of Tammany, was an unknown East Side liquor-seller. To-day he has a secret office in one of the biggest buildings in New York, from which he directs his affairs, and can command all the credit he asks from conservative banks without being required to give a dollar's worth of collateral. How did he secure such position? Knowing ones answer the question in one word, "graft."

The question of separation of Church and State in France seems hard to settle. What the outcome will be no one can foretell. The present state of the matter is thus presented by Zion's Herald: "The quarrel between the Church and State in France has reached an acute stage, now that the Pope's encyclical has forbidden the French ecclesiastical authorities to obey the law which places the direction of public worship not in the hands of the bishops, but of certain lay associations. While the encyclical is perfectly consistent with the previous document in which the 'law of separation' was condemned, it fails to offer any hope of a mutually agreeable settlement of the vexed question at issue, unless the French Government will come over to the position of immovable Rome. The Pope says: 'Concerning the associations of public worship, described by the law, we decree, in the most absolute terms, that they cannot be formed without violating the sacred rights which are essential to the very existence of the church.' The Pope is willing to agree only to such an arrangement by the civil powers as will protect the 'divine constitution of the church, the immutable rights of the Roman pontiff and the bishops, and their authority over the temporal affairs of the church, particularly the sacred edifices.' The Pope counsels forbearance and patience. Confiscation now looms up as a menace for the French clergy, although it is not clear that the Pope is justified in declaring that those who oppose his plans in France are making 'atrocious war against religion,' for not all of them by any means are agnostics or utter secularists. The French bishops are not likely to take any decisive action before Dec. 9, the date when the encyclical becomes operative, and by that time Parliament may make some relieving declaration with regard to the points of the obnoxious law which have been criticised by the Pope."

One of our exchanges, a good Baptist paper, says: "No preacher will come to the Baptists from any other denomination except under the conviction that he for himself should obey Christ in baptism, and set forth in that beautiful and impressive symbol his faith in a burial (buried) and risen Savior and his own death to sin and resurrection to a new life. The good conscience gets its appropriate answer in baptism and is satisfied as to that ceremony."

We have no disposition to question the statement of our brother editor as to the conviction of those who go into a Baptist Church from another communion. But may we ask: "What of the brother who goes from the Baptist to the Presbyterians or some other denomination, and in going repudiates the doctrine and practice of exclusive immersion? Such a thing happens often. In going does he lose the answer of a good conscience, and forfeit his relation to God? It would be equivalent to writing them down as deceivers. And what about those Christians who have accepted another mode of baptism than of immersion? Are they without conscience and conviction? Nobody will say they are.

As well as we are able to determine, those Christians who prefer affusion are quite as well satisfied with their baptism as any body possibly can be with immersion. They say less about it. But baptize more people than do the Baptists.

WALNUT GROVE CIRCUIT.

We had the pleasure of assisting Rev. M. L. White for a few days, including the second Sunday in August, at Zion Church, of the Walnut Grove Circuit. Zion is a new church, located in a most excellent farming country. The church was organized one year ago with eleven members; it now has about seventy, twenty-four of whom joined the church during this meeting. Among the active members, we met Bros. Sharp, Brooks, Austin, Sheppard, Oxner, Hanna, Russell and many others, to whom we are indebted for numerous courtesies extended. Brother White is winding up his fourth year on this circuit. No preacher in the Mississippi Conference has accomplished more good during these last four years. He is an ideal pastor, and he looks after every interest of the church; church paper, church school, Sunday school literature all claim his individual attention. The preacher who succeeds him in his work will find a well-organized circuit, guaranteeing the pastor a good support. Fortunate indeed is the charge that will have Rev. M. L. White as pastor.

"SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH."

Rev. W. B. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference, has an article in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of Aug. 23, under this caption: "How Can We Promote the Spiritual Growth of Our People?"

His scriptural presentation of Christian attainment, made possible by the Divine atonement, is correct and demands attention. If it is the will of God that redeemed souls shall possess an enduement of grace and power so full and in every way complete, making the possessor more than conquerer over the powers of darkness caused by sin, will there not be a fearful account to render for every day spent in a state of wilful neglect? Satan, in this day among Methodists, does not contradict the fullness of the atonement to cleanse from all sin, but has been quite successful in cerating a difference of opinion as to mode of attainment, until the heat engendered by controversy has produced a state of truce that gives prominence to phases of Christian work, all legitimate and helpful in their proper sphere, but never a substitute for the essential. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." The spiritual state of the church—quality, not quantity of service—was the leading item of investigation when the Holy Spirit investigated the record of the seven churches in Asia. See Revelations. I have yet to learn of change in God's standard.

1st Samuel, 15 Chapter, records the rejection of Saul as king, because Saul thought that choice gifts for sacrifice would atone for a wilful disobedience of orders, commanding the absolute surrender of the will of the king to that of the Creator.

When Bishops preside over conferences and fail to exhibit a soul-burdened concern about the spiritual attainments of the under shepherds and yet give great prominence to matters of church finances and statistics, allowing a session to be held unmarked by a Pentecostal baptism upon the preachers, it is but natural that pastors returning to the toils of service should fail to realize the pre-eminence of the spiritual state of their flocks over every other phase of Christian life. Our Bishops are but brethren set apart from conference ranks to be chief shepherds; they need encouragement. While it is within the power of a conference to chill, almost freeze out a Bishop, I thank God it is in the power of a conference to warm him up until coat, vest and collar will be laid aside in the fervency of his administration.

Why not determine that the approaching session of the Annual Conference, to be held at Laurel, Miss., next December, shall be made most memorable on account of the attainment of perfect love by every member and visitor not already wholly the Lord's?

Pastors, why not call the membership, including yourselves, to enter into a covenant of fasting and prayer that said session shall "be filled with all the fullness of God?" While I am sure my incapacity prevents my comprehension of the cubic measurement of God's fullness, I do believe that our pint-cup capacity will be full to overflowing and from that Conference will proceed a tidal wave of glory that will fill every hungry, open-hearted vessel in the Methodist Church, and Brother Lewis' question will find answer. Brother Preacher, won't you covenant now with me to pray and do all within your power to make the Laurel Conference a Pentecostal occasion? If so, drop me a postal card.

A PREACHER'S CLOTHES.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I wish to thank you for your editorial on "About Ministerial Dress" in the last issue of the ADVOCATE. It was the best I have seen on that subject. Much senseless ado has been made about that matter, and therefore I hope what you wrote will enlighten and settle the disturbed on that subject. Brethren have appeared more egotistical and ridiculous on that matter than they were able apparently to perceive. They remind us of those unfortunate ones who oppose denominations and all organizations, and still wish to limit everybody to their little narrow circle of thought and action, overlooking the fact that they themselves are the most narrowly denominational of all heretics.

A brother said to me once: "Peebles, why don't you buy a suit like mine and not spend so much money for such a long tail as that to your coat?" I asked him how much his short-tail suit cost him, and he replied by saying: "Only $16. What did yours cost?"

I replied: "Only $12, tail and all."

I imagined he looked and felt very much like the one about whom I heard when a boy—the calf ran over and left him without one word to say.

Even if a tail did cost something extra, it is more decent and tidy than those pants whose visible seats appear as the only parts that are ironed daily with a very smooth, rusty or dusty iron, or both.

Other things could be said, but enough is said to enable the most stupid to see that if the class with long-tail coats were to indulge as freely in witticisms as the others they would be more triumphant in the sense of acceptable appearances. Although it is possible for one to be unaffected by cuts and styles of clothes, yet they may have to do with his self-respect and also his respect for others.

If one's dress distinguishes him as God's minister, is that not far better than the dress that does not? It seems to me that it is, when one is his minister in reality. To be distinguished as God's minister in heart, life and clothes too, is better than otherwise, I think. It has always been thus, and why object to its continuance?

May God help us to indorse and enjoy any life and even clothes that will distinguish us most surely as his ministers! Let us not be ashamed of such a distinction, lest our Savior is ashamed of us in the judgment.

Of course, those who are not his ministers should not want such a distinction, and should not wear clothes that would thus distinguish them; but they should not oppose ministers for such distinction.

EVILS OF THE MODERN DANCE.

The article in the ADVOCATE of last week, from the pen of P. O. Lowery, with the above caption, brings to my memory an incident in my experience a few years ago. After preaching in a certain city church, of another denomination, on the Church versus the World, a gentleman sought an interview with me. He proved to be the city physician. After binding me over to secrecy, he began: "I was reared to consider that there was no harm in dancing; my parents were of ——— church. I heard your sermon yesterday, and I want to read you some pages from my note book." Taking from his pocket a rather large diary, he began to recite the history of many young women who had come under his care as physician of the city, with their confessions of their down-fall. (It is proper that I should state that he read me only the facts and confessions, withholding the names.)

As he read page after page, and instant after instant, I suggested that his list was a long one, to which he replied: "These and many more which I could recite from all circles of society from the lowly to the most influential and wealthy, have come under my observation, and all from the ball room." He concluded with the statement that in his opinion the ball room was the greatest factor for evil in our modern social life.

It is enough for me to state in this connection that the physician was an honorable gentleman, and reputable practitioner in a large city; but that many of the cases cited had come from elsewhere to hide their shame.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MARK XI. 24.

In the common verson the words are: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." This is out of harmony with the general teaching of Scripture. How can a man believe that he has before he receives?

The revised verson (Oxford, 1881) has: "All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them." A little different in words, but the same teaching.

Mr. Wesley's version is "All things whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believe that ye shall receive, and ye shall have them." This, to my mind, is the better version, as it is in harmony with the general teaching in the New Testament. Clark and Benson are silent on this text. Summer's comment in part is, "The present tense is used to intimate the assurance of faith, which "calleth those things which be not, as though they were"—not that we must literally believe that we have the things in possession before we ask for them, or persuade ourselves that we have received, or are receiving them, which is absurd!"

Suppose the Professor of Greek at Millsaps, and Dr. Mounger and any others see if they can throw some light on this text. X

THE BOTTOM OF THE WHOLE AFFAIR.

Dear Doctor: I want to, in the first place, commend all your editorials on the "restatement" of our Articles of Faith, and I am glad you have spoken so freely and explicitly on this question. But Dr. W. C. Black, in the last ADVOCATE, hits at the bottom of the whole affair. As long as such men as Bishop A. W. Wilson, Dr. Collins Denny, and Dr. R. H. Mahon have the matter in hand I shall never be alarmed. These men are too well acquainted with the real spirit of Methodism to err in an important matter like this position they hold. Every word, sentence and paragraph will be thoroughly weighed and passed upon before they reccommend its adoption, and then we little fellows can have a lick at it. So if we can only exercise patience we will have our say yet. Yours truly,

W. T. WOODWARD.

MRS. S. S. KEENER.

Anna Mildred Boatner, wife of S. S. Keener, was born in East Baton Rouge Parish near what is now called Baker Station, Dec. 27, 1854; departed this life Sept. 8, 1906. She was the daughter of Hudson Boatner and Anna Young, the eldest of three children. Two brothers, Joe B. Boatner and I. H. Boatner, passed away in April and December, 1902. As daughter, she was most devoted and dutiful, full of unwearied self-sacrifice in nursing a father in a long illness of three years' duration, and a mother who was an invalid for a decade, love newing her for long and protracted periods of nursing and comforting her parents in their illness. With the same untiring love and devotion, she cared for her mother-in-law through infirmities of age and long periods of illness.

In October, 1880, she was married to the Rev. S. S. Keener and gave nearly twenty-six years of active and effective work as the wife of a Methodist minister. With great sympathy, unaffected sincerity and a heart full of love for the Master, she moved among the church members, doing in unobtrusive modesty a work for the Lord, which was lasting. A number were converted while she was talking with them at the altar, who were waiting to welcome her home when she passed over the river.

What a re-enforcement she was to her husband in the difficult periods of ministry! When he was discouraged, heartsick and ready to grow weary in well-doing, she was full of cheer and hope, and heartened him for new and more vigorous efforts. When there was a period for a strong stand on principle she was ready to suffer any sacrifice and stand with unblanched cheek and rooted firmness with her husband for the right in God's name. In the midst of the yellow fever epidemic she refused to be separated from her husband, stayed in New Orleans and endured the fever, and, after long illness, was restored to health. In 1898, as the presiding elder's wife, she helped to nurse Sister Denson and daily ministered to her comfort. At every appointment there are those who remember her tender, loving instruction in the Sunday school.

During the first ten years of her career as a minister's wife, she organized a children's missionary society, which was carried on for the Mexican Mission. In the revivals she was found trying to lead some penitent soul to Christ, and urging others to seek salvation.

Her long and painful illness of two months she endured with Christian fortitude, thinking more of the expense, care and sorrow her illness was causing her loved ones than of herself. Without dread or fear of death, but agonizing over the thought of the loneliness of her husband if she was taken, she gradually came down to the end. Morning and evening, in concert with her husband, she prayed and poured out her soul to her Heavenly Father. Conscious up to the last hour, just before ascending, she prayed for ease, rest, peace in the midst of great exhaustion and labored breathing. The Lord heard and answered her prayer in twenty minutes by taking her home. Who can describe the transition to her from pain, exhaustion and agony to peace, life, joy, the happy greetings of "those long loved, but lost awhile." Now she looks back from those experiences of the "more abundant life," and we are more dead than she. She is alive forever more!

"My company before is gone,
And I am left alone with thee."

I thank God for nearly twenty-six years of loving association with this noble woman as my devoted wife and helpmeet in the Lord's work, and feel the best points of my Christian character have been developed, enlarged and fixed by her influence.

"Oh, for the touch of a hand that has vanished
The sound of a voice that is stilled!"

S. S. KEENER.

DEATH OF BROTHER JOHN THOMSON.

On last Friday, Sept. 14, 1906, at the Seashore Camp Grounds, where he had spent the summer months with his family, Brother John Thomson entered into eternal rest. He was well known in the Louisiana Conference, having been for many years an active and useful worker in the Methodist community of New Orleans. Converted in 1868, he joined the Felicity Street M. E. Church, South, under the pastorate of Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Parker, and later placed his certificate with the Louisiana Avenue Church, where his membership remained until the day of his death. His official connection with that church was marked with the devotion of a faithful and zealous servant of our Lord.

Brother Thomson was the founder of the well-known carriage manufacturing firm of John Thomson & Bros., which has for many years conducted a successful business on Rampart Street, this city. Being a man of sterling character and of kind and considerate disposition, he won for himself a high place in the esteem of all who knew him.

Brother Thomson was a native of Ireland, and was in the seventy-first year of his age at the time of his death. Besides his wife and children, he leaves two brothers and five sisters, Messrs. Geo. and W. B. Thomson, Mrs. Mary Randolph, Mrs. Dr. Crebbin, Mrs. Van Valkenburgh, Mrs. Coffrey, and Mrs. Blakeley of Kansas, all of whom are enlisted in the service of God.

Rev. J. C. Sligh, pastor of Louisiana Avenue Church, conducted the funeral services from the family residence and at the church, and at the grave the Masonic Fraternity did him honor.

Brother Thomson wrought well, and has entered upon a glorious reward. May the benedictions of the Lord be upon those who mourn. C.

REV. ANSON WEST, D. D.

AN APPRECIATION BY REV. THEO. COPELAND.

Among the eminent leaders who, during the last fifty years, have figured in Methodist history Dr. Anson West holds a conspicious place. Endowed by nature with a strong physical constitution, and gifted with more than ordinary intellectual powers, he might have truthfully said, with Jean Paul Richter, that he had made the best possible use of the material with which he had been intrusted.

When the North Alabama Conference was organized, more than thirty-five years ago, Dr. West identified himself with the fortunes of those intrepid men who went forth to conquer the hill country for Christ. At that time he was in the flush and vigor of manhood. With steady aim and lofty devotion and unswerving integrity he marched to the forefront of the advancing columns, till he ceased at once to work and live. "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord," was a precept which he constantly enforced both by precept and example. In all his undertakings he was careful, painstaking and thorough. Dr. West was perfectly familiar with the Methodist discipline. As an expounder of our doctrines and polity he had but few equals. His executive ability would have reflected credit even in the Episcopal chair. In the absence of a Bishop during the session of an annual conference he was regarded as the most suitable man to hold the reins and direct affairs of the Church. Had he chosen the legal profession as his life-work, he would doubtless have reached the highest attainments. Being a strict disciplinarian, he sometimes provoked opposition; but with conscientious rectitude he hewed to the line, and seldom stopped to calculate where the chips would fall. While he was not the most popular preacher, in the modern sense of that time, all men admired him for his correct motives, his lofty ideals, his irreproachable conduct, and his sublime devotion to duty. As a proof of the entire confidence which his brethren reposed in him, he almost invariably led the delegation to the General Conference, where his ability and integrity brought him into prominence, and he was recognzed as one of the leaders of that ecclesiastical body. many years he was on one of the examining committees in his Conference, and the undergraduate who safely passed the "West" gate felt secure for the rest of the journey.

Dr. West was strongly conservative in his theological views and opinions. He strongly opposed all innovations of Methodist faith and practice, and stood like a stone wall by the old land marks, defending with invincible logic the doctrines and usages which had made Wesley the leader of a new epoch in the history of the church.

Thomas Carlyle was never more intolerant of shams and humbugs than was Dr. West. Pretense, affectation, insincerity and duplicity were abominations which he utterly loathed. He admired transparency and uprightness of character, and esteemed moral excellence as of more value than thousands of gold and silver. While he did not in youth enjoy the full benefits of a collegiate training, he fully appreciated the value of Christian education. He was for a long time a member of the board of trustees of the Vanderbilt University, and regularly attended its meetings, and was deeply interested in the welfare of that great institution. In his own Conference he was one of the promoters of the North Alabama College, and fostered that struggling institution with all the devotion of his ardent nature. During his last visit to that college he stood on the rostrum, and, with a prophet's voice, depicted the heroic and enduring work which would be accomplished there in the coming years, and emphasized the fact that the church must keep pace with the mighty movements which looked to the material development of Alabama, or our country will inevitably meet the fate of the nations whose temporal prosperity has been their ruin.

His first venture in the field of literature was "The State of the Dead," a work written to refute certain arguments adduced in a sermon by Bishop McTyeire relative to the intermediate state, or the condition of the soul of man between death and the resurrection. So far as my knowledge extends, this book fully accomplished the purpose of the author, as it was a strong presentation of the views held by the great Protestant world upon that obscure subject.

"The Old and the New Man," another production of his pen, is a restatement of Wesleyan-Arminian theology, in which the doctrines peculiar to Methodism are emphasized, elucidated and strongly enforced. Sin and salvation constitute the particular themes of the book.

His last work, "The History of Methodism in Alabama," fills an important place in the annals of our church. In graphic terms, Dr. West portrays the early heroes and their abundant labors and traces the planting and gradual expansion of the gospel among the early pioneers in Alabama. This great production has rescued from oblivion many vital and interesting facts, figures and incidents; and will furnish a rich store of information for the future historian.

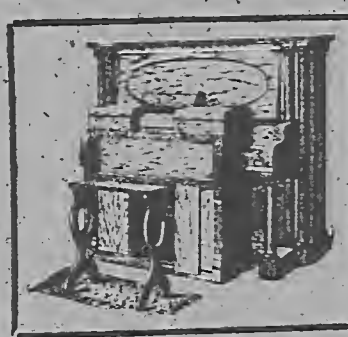
As a preacher of the gospel, Dr. West made the deepest impression on the generation which he served. In this field he had few superiors. Studiously avoiding everything that smacked of cant or hypocrisy, abstaining from all forms of sensationalism, he expounded the Word of God, believing that the gospel of Christ is the greatest drawing power in the world, the sovereign and only remedy for the ills which inflict the race. His style was lucid; his thought coherent; his logic was cumulative and impregnable. His theme embraced and clustered about the three R's, Ruin by the fall; Redemption through Christ; and Regeneration by the Holy Spirit. His trumpet gave no uncertain sound; he fed the people; he edified the church of God; he faithfully warned the ungodly to flee from impending wrath. When, through physical disability, he was no longer able to stand and deliver his message, he sat and discoursed upon the great themes of gospel grace with a pathos and an intensity which moved the hearts of his hearers. The scaffolding which supported the immortal part has fallen to the earth, but the disembodied spirit answers to the roll call in heaven.

THEO. COPELAND.

"LET ALL THAT YE DO BE DONE IN LOVE."

The crimes of the tongue are many. Words of unkindness, of anger, of malice, of envy, of bitterness, of harsh criticism, of gossip, of lying and of scandal. "The second most deadly instrument of destruction is the dynamite gun—the first is the tongue." The havoc of the gun is immediate and visible; the full evil of the tongue lives through all the years. "A simple motion of the hand may destroy the delicate geometry of the spider's web, spun from his own body and life, and all the united efforts of man could not put it back as it was." So a flippant remark, a careless word, a cruel smile, may ruin, in a moment, a good name that has been building for years.

Judging is a divine prerogative. We mortals are too weak and frail to arrogate it to ourselves. The quality necessary to fit us for sitting in judgment on our fellows is omniscience. We want to know all the facts of the case; and to have a perfect understanding of all the phases of character. To undertake to judge another without these is to assume a fearful responsibility. Hence God has commanded us not to judge; and charity in its greatest manifestation is obedience to this divine injunction.



Character is not easily understood. It is subtle and elusive. Besides, most people study character as a proof-reader studies a printed manuscript. The proof-reader is watching for an inverted comma, a mis-spacing or a wrong-font letter. His eye is trained for imperfections. "We do too much watching of our neighbors' garden, and too little weeding in our own." "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" Those who find the most faults in others are generally the most faulty themselves. If there is a place in life where the attitude of the agnostic is commendable it is here. The courage to say, "I don't know; I must wait for further development; I must know the other side of the question; till then I will suspend judgment"—this is the supreme form of charity.

"Charity is not a formula, but an atmosphere." It has high and pure forms of manifestations. It is ever reaching out for justice in life. It is tender with human weakness. It is not a natural, but a gracious passion. "We love because He first loved us." "The love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost given unto us." This transforms us and enables us to live a transfigured life. It eliminates pride, passion, prejudice, personal feelings and pettiness. It lifts us above selfishness, self-seeking, self-conceit, and self-consciousness. It fills the mind with high and pure emotions. It is Christ in you, the hope of glory. This blessed work of grace is free to all. Without it we shall often fail to measure up to our duty and opportunity in life.

GROWING PECANS.

The trade in pecans is large and growing. The business is profitable. Those interested will do well to send to the G. M. Bacon Pecan Co., Dewitt, Ga., for information on the "Pecan Tree, How to Plant It, How to Grow It and How to Buy It." We have examined the pamphlet and find it packed with the necessary information given by one who has made pecan growing a success.

RESTATEMENT OF DOCTRINE NEEDED.

Whatever of discussion as to the restatement of our doctrines is to be had should not, it seems to me, be delayed, but the Commission should have the benfit of any light discussion may afford as they enter upon the great work which has been assigned them.

There are some general truths which have application to the question of restatement at this time. One of these is that all human productions are imperfect, and are, therefore, susceptible of improvement. The creed of the Methodist Church is certainly no exception to this rule. This fact does not, however, prove that we are now called upon to restate our doctrines. We may not now be prepared to improve them; yet this should not deter us from inquiring whether it is not our duty to adapt the statement of our creed to the demands of the times in which we live. For this, as I understand it, the Commission was appointed.

The church stands as the interpreter of God's Word to the nations, and while every heresy, from Mormonism to Eddyism, quotes the Bible in its support, the Church cannot be too careful to discover, state and defend those forms of sound words which shall embody the truth as it is in Jesus. No doubt a man may be saved, in spite of some errors in his creed; yet this fact can by no means justify any man in being indifferent as to what he believes. Our General Conference did not appoint that Commission of wise and good men on a fool's errand when it instructed them to undertake the restatement of our creed.

That our Articles of Religion need revision it requires no very profound examination to discover. Take the second article. It reads, in part, "Whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men." Now, as to the mysteries of "original guilt," whatever it may mean, I do not now inquire; but I question the statement that the prime object of Christ's death was "to reconciled his Father to us." I do not say it is not true, and ought not to be believed, but I do say that it fails to state that view of the great doctrine of reconciliation upon which the New Testament invariably lays strong emphasis. God may have needed to be reconciled to us, but the often reiterated doctrine of the New Testament is, that we need to be reconciled to God. Take a single passage, II Cor. v. 18-20: "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to-wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now, then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

Here, as in a score of other places, the object of Christ's death is stated to be to reconcile us to God; and I do not recall a single passage which even implies that it was intended to reconcile God to us. The doctrines of the New Testament is not that God's wrath needs to be appeased, but that man's waywardness and willfulness needs to be abandoned.

The emphasis here, as elsewhere in our Articles of Religion, laid on the wrath of God, may doubtless be traced to the awful view of the Divine character which is especially prominent in the writings of Augustin, and finds more elaborate statement in the writings of John Calvin. The mind of the world seems for ages to have been overwhelmingly impressed with a sense of God's wrath, to the exclusion of any adequate appreciation of his love and mercy. The forbidding doctrines of predestination and reprobation taint the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England and the universal dread of God's displeasure finds an echo in John Wesley's alarming call to "flee from the wrath to come," while the tender invitations of God's love lack due appreciation.

Why should it be declared, as is done in our tenth article, that "good works, which are the fruits of faith, and are pleasing and acceptable to God in Christ, cannot endure the severity of God's judgment?"

Why should "the severity of God's judgment" be supposed to be directed against our good works which are the fruits of faith?

These illustrations will, I hope, suffice to show the need of revision in the Articles. The Commission will doubtless find much needed work in this direction. May the Spirit of all wisdom guide them in the execution of their most difficult and momentous task.

THE WINONA DISTRICT.

This has been a very properous year in the bounds of the Winona District. The presiding elder has been a wise leader of the hosts in a forward movement in all departments of the Church's varied interests. Salaries have been increased, houses of worship and parsonages have been repaired and new ones undertaken, and best of all, every charge has been blessed by gracious revivals. Some good meetings have been held with the aid of evanglists, better ones by the pastors. Many of the pastors had the valuable assistance of the presiding elder, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, who has given many weeks to assisting in revival meetings. Hundreds have been converted and added to the Church.

There has been a great awakening in the Carrollton and North Carrollton charges. Meetings of remarkable power and wide influence were held at Longview and at Marvin before the transfer of the Rev. H. W. Whitnell. His successor, the Rev. J. A. McKee, has held his fine meetings at MacAuerney, Enon and Bethel and is now engaged at North Carrollton, assisted by the Rev. L. A. McKeown. The house of worship there has been painted, a sum sufficient to thoroughly repair the house of worship at Enon has been subscribed, and a large sum to build a new one at Longview.

Rev. C. P. Moss has conducted fine meetings at Cola, Smith's Chapel and Valley Hill, doing his own preaching except for the help rendered by the presiding elder at Valley Hill.

Many conversions and additions, a number of infants baptized, and an awakening of interest in foreign missions are among the results of these meetings, the last mentioned arising largely from free distribution of Dr. Allen's "The Gospel Liberating China." The Rev. C. W. Green has given faithful assistance in some of the meetings mentioned. By all tokens this is a great year in the Winona District. In addition to the regular claims, the contributions to specials in missions, etc., and gifts to our colleges runs well into the thousands.

REVIVAL AT BAKER, LA.

Dear Brother Boswell: I have just returned from a protracted meeting of five days' duration, helping Brother Lee at Baker. The meeting was very successful, considering the short time it was conducted. Seventeen members were added to the Church on the last night of the meeting, and several more will be received later.

A touching incident was the reception into church membership of the entire Sunday school class, taught by Sister Lee at the time of her death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Brother Lee is concluding his fourth year on his charge. Faithful and consecrated, his people love him and his work has been a success. His dear wife, who was the moving spirit of the Sunday school in Baker, who served faithfully in the many duties of a preacher's wife, and who made friends of all is deeply mourned by all classes of people. The kindness and hospitality of the people at Baker make my visit a pleasant memory. The preacher who succeeds Brother Lee will have a goodly heritage. Your brother,

WHEN MARIAN TRAVELED ALONE.

"Cousin Morris, will you do something for me, please?"

The senior member of the law firm of Woodell & Brown glanced from his office desk to the innocent, eager face.

"Sit down, Marian," he answered, smiling. "I shall have to tell you the whole story," she began, breathlessly. "You know I came home alone from my New York visit? Well, a man had the other half of my section—a fine, scholarly-looking man about your age—and when we were delayed by that wreck—ten hours late, you know—he saw I was nervous; and he was so kind about sending my telegram to mother, and everything, that I just couldn't help letting him talk to me.

"He was a New York lawyer, Richard Ferry, going to Kansas City on a business trip, and he mentioned knowing the Chippendales here in Chicago. Of course, that reassured me, and, Morris, you can't think how well-acquainted we got in one day! It was the strangest experience. He told me the story of his whole life—childhood home, school days, college experiences, everything! He's so much older, and he knows so much more than I, it seemed strange he should think I was worth talking to, but he did, and, Morris, to show you the kind of man he is, he quoted a lot from Wordsworth's 'Ode to Immortality,' and from Lowell's 'Vision of Sir Launfal,' too. And oh, I wish you could have heard how beautifully he spoke of his mother!"

"Well, what happened next?" Morris Woodell asked, indulgently.

"He went on to Kansas City, and—please don't smile—he wrote to me that in the few hours we had spent together I had given him back ideals he thought were lost forever. He asked me to send him a line at his Kansas City hotel, and—well, I did it before I told mother. She didn't like it, because she doesn't trust my judgment. She can't realize that I'm eighteen, you see. This morning I had another note, saying he was passing through Chicago to-day on his way back to New York, and wouldn't I meet him for luncheon at the Atlante Hotel."

The indulgence suddenly vanished from Woodell's manner.

"Wait, Morris! I'm sure he didn't mean any disrespect. He's just unconventional."

"Is he married?"

"Why—no."

"Told you he wasn't?"

"He told me so much he couldn't have helped telling that if it had been so, and, Morris, this is what I want: Won't you go over to the hotel and bring him to luncheon with you and me? That would be proper, and you could see yourself how nice he is, and if you were in it I'd dare tell mother when I went home. I haven't told her of this morning's note for fear it would prejudice her. She thinks I'm down-town shopping. Please, Morris!"

Woodell shook his head. Then with a sudden thought he turned to his desk telephone and called Tom Chippendale.

The answer came promptly: "Ferry of New York? Well, not intimately. Just at the club. Brilliant fellow, but mighty vain of his conquests over the other sex. Oh, yes, wife and two children living out in Kansas City. No, domestic life isn't just in his line, I fancy. Glad to serve you. Woodell. Good-by."

Woodell hung up the receiver and repeated the words to his cousin, but he generously dropped his eyes while he waited for the answer. It came at last.

Hurt, chagrined, forcing back the tears, she said, under her breath, "Oh, I'll never trust anyone again!"

"I hope you will, Marian," said Morris Woodell, gravely, "I hope you'll trust one person a great deal more—your mother."—Youth's Companion.

THE CLERK WITH A CONSCIENCE.

I was in one of Boston's largest dry goods stores the other day. In my hand was a sample of a certain piece of black dress goods, which I wished to procure. The friend who was with me also wished to purchase black dress goods; so we decided to look for hers first, since I already knew what I wanted.

After trying in vain to receive courteous attention from two different clerks, one of whom was busy with invisible specks on his coat, we turned to a third clerk rather timidly, for we were not sure of the reception we would receive.

He was making out a sale slip, but he turned at once: "Certainly, madam. I have just what you want. I will wait on you in a moment."

His tone was so different from what we had come to expect, that we would willingly have waited half an hour for him to finish what he was doing. In a few seconds, however, he was at leisure, and piece after piece of dress goods was displayed for our inspection.

My friend made her selection, and then I showed him my sample. At once he glanced at the slits cut in the side of the tiny piece of goods.

"That isn't one of my samples," he remarked. "I will ask the clerk who mailed this sample to wait on you."

"But I don't want any other clerk to wait on me," I responded hastily, fearing that my sample might have come originally from one of the discourteous clerks whom we first encountered. "I want you to have this sale."

"If you had asked for goods of that quality, width and price, without showing me the sample, I could have found it for you at once," he replied with a smile; "but now this sale belongs to the clerk who sent out the sample."

"Then I won't give you this sample to hunt it up by," wishing to see whether I could carry my point. "No one knows except my friend that you have seen it," and I proceeded to tuck it away in my purse.

"But I know that I have seen it, and my conscience knows it," and he laughingly laid his hand on his heart as he turned to look for the other clerk.

In a moment he returned. The other clerk was at lunch. What a sigh of relief we gave!

"I will make out the sale and turn it over to him when he comes in," our salesman said, displaying the shining black folds of the goods I desired.

As he made out his sale slip, crediting the goods to "the office," instead of to his own number, I could not but admire the fine quality of that man's honesty. In a matter where no one would have been the wiser, he was true to himself. He did as he would have been done by. And in making future purchases in that department, I shall always look for my "clerk with a conscience."—Ellen T. Maynard, in Christian Endeavor World.

BEAUTIFUL TABLE CUSTOMS.

Quite recently I visited a German widow living in a delightful country seat, with a little son of 8 and a daughter of 5. As we sat down to the well-spread table, the little boy, folding his hands and closing his eyes, thanked our Father in heaven for the food before us, and asked him to bless it. Then the little girl, in childish accents, repeated: "Lord Jesus, be our guest, come, and this table bless, and do us good." The little ones were taught by their pious mother to think whom they were addressing.

At several places where we visited in Scotland the youngest child at the table asked the blessing and the memory of those sweet, low, reverential childish voices haunts us yet as the echo of some rich carol.

In some families there prevail the beautiful custom of joining in the Lord's Prayer at breakfast; and in one that we visited oft last summer this was sometimes omitted and in its place the twenty-third Psalm recited. For a Sunday morning, after a week of plenty and joy, what can be more suitable?

In other families the silent blessing is the custom; and very touching it is, too, for it seems to make us realize that God is indeed near, when we can give him thanks though our lips move not.—Selected.

The expression "sound bigotry" may be a misnomer, as suggested by Zion's Herald, but a vast amount of bigotry finds expression that has in it far more sound than sense.

"It is good for a man that he bear the yoke of Christ in his youth." Not until he puts it on does he experience the happiness of obedience. When the fit is perfect the yoke is easy and the burden is light.

The brother who was guilty of wearing a gray suit and green neck-tie of vivid hue "acknowledges the corn," but insists that he was no more guilty of violating "the proprieties" than the preacher who wears a big leather belt and is always pulling it up and trying to keep it straight.

It is a dangerous thing for one to assume that he is on a safe moral basis because he has adopted what he believes to be a sound ethical code. He has no right to assume anything of the kind. It is his business to know that he is right. This he can determine by the light of God's word. "Know ye not your own selves how that Jesus Christ is in you except ye be reprobates?"

Brother Rankin, of the Texas Advocate, pronounces enthusiastically in favor of the reform method of spelling. It has long been his method, and he follows it in his writing, but he says the printers and proof-readers will not let his spelling stand. They are a contrary lot of fellows, set in their ways. If Brother Rankin is not "fully up" in the method, we can direct him to one or two preachers who can give him all the points he needs. He will have nothing to do but write a letter or two and ask them to answer in full.

The Professor deplores the fact that while there is "unanimity, rapidly tending to perfection" among Baptists on the subject of immersion, there is an "enormous amount of misinformation (pure ignorance) among our people on the New Testament institution of the Church. * * * The average Baptist conception of the Church is a combination of Catholicism, Pedoism, Protestantism, and Bible (Baptist) truth." The Professor has about all the missionary ground he can cultivate inside the Baptist Church.

THE GOOD HAND OF GOD.

The preachers in our patronizing Conferences are just entering upon the fourth quarter of their year's work. The time between now and the meeting of the annual sessions will be devoted almost exclusively to gathering in the harvest. With few exceptions, the protracted meetings have all been held. How short the time seems since the reading out of the last appointments, and yet how much labor has been expended and how much good has been acomplished. The good hand of God has been upon us for good—both upon the preachers and the people.

The people have been blessed. The early and the later rains have fallen, the sunshine and the heat have been given, and in return for diligent cultivation the earth has yielded her increase and our land abounds in plenty. All have been bountifully fed, and for produce going to feed the towns and cities our farmers have realized a fair profit. Sugar and rice in Louisiana, and cotton in Mississippi, will soon be on the market, and all are rejoicing over the prospect of paying prices. For these blessings we are indebted to our Heavenly Father. He gave the increase.

These blessings bring every man and woman under obligation to God. Doubtless all are thankful. But God requires more than gratitude. He demands the first fruits of the ground and of the flocks. Under the old dispensation the requirement was literal—for literal use was made of it by those who ministered at the altar of sacrifice. We have no altars now for burnt offerings, but the Lord's demands are none the less, and His ministers serve Him and carry on the work quite as systematically and as effectually as did the priests in the tabernacle or the temple. To sustain His ministers in their work, and to maintain the various agencies for good is the duty of the Church. The easiest and most natural way to do this, considering the commercial facilities of the age, is to turn produce into cash and turn into the Church's treasury the proportion demanded—not by the law, but by an enlightened conscience and the circumstances of the case. Considering the goodness of God, let every brother do what he feels is right. No man living to-day on God's bounty and enjoying his smiles can repudiate his obligations or neglect to meet them, and live in the enjoyment of religion.

The preachers have been blessed. Many of them went out in the beginning of the year "not knowing whither they went," save they knew they were going among strangers, but, like Abraham, they literally went into "the land of promise." Not one of them who has been faithful has failed to verify the words of the Lord Jesus, who said: "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold." The promise of "everlasting life" will be realized hereafter.

God has blessed the preachers' labors. They went forth weeping bearing precious seed; in season and out of season and everywhere they have proclaimed the Word, and in this likewise the Lord has verified His promise not to let the Word return unto Him void, but to prosper it in the thing whereto He sent it, and thousands of souls have been converted and added to the Church. We want no better evidence that the hand of God is upon a man for good than to make him a chosen instrument in the conviction and salvation of souls. We do not see how any man can crave a greater reward than to have souls rise up in the day of eternity and call him blessed. This honor will be accorded hundreds of our faithful brethren before the Father and before His holy angels, brethren who are to-day

Little and unknown,
Loved and prized by God alone.

God's good hand is upon us all. Let us recognize it, and be led by it. "O! that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." And let all the people say: "Amen!"

TANGLED AND CONTRADICTORY IDEAS.

Brother Burrow, of the Midland Methodist, has, we dare say, started a train of reflections in the mind of hundreds of readers, which, if put into questions and given him to answer, would keep him busy, from now until Christmas, and longer. He talks heresy, as some men understand heresy, concerning "Children and the Church." He is defending himself against the objections of a brother who "took him to task for advocating the organization of classes of children for church membership."

Brother Burrow asks some questions himself: "What is natural depravity? What is regeneration? * * * What does regeneration do for human nature? If it extracts the roots of original sin, then the children of regenerated parents should be born in a regenerated state, there being no taint of inbred depravity to inherit." But "converted men and women still have high tempers, quick tongues and susceptible appetites." Brother Burrow goes deeper: "If some enthusiastic second blessing brother rubs his hands and declares that sanctification alone can remove the lingering remains—the rootlets of sin—we answer that those persons, too, have quite enough intolerance, harshness and irascibility. If extraction leaves the old nature's weaknesses still apparent, what was extracted?"

About these things, involving, as the reader readily sees, the moral status of infants and their relation to Christ, Brother Burrow justly says: "That many tangled and contradictory ideas are held by many minds is quite evident. Who of us has not been perplexed? In the investigation of so important a matter there is little room for dogmatism. Intolerance is bad enough on points where all are agreed; but where there is manifest variance of views, liberality of spirit is becomingly apropos." Even so. Yet Brother Burrow zealously supports the call for a statement or restatement, or an addition to, or enlargement of the creed of Methodism to include a dogmatic declaration on the very points concerning which "tangled and contradictory ideas are held." On all the points involved we quite agree with Bro. Burrow, but if, in the interest of peace, we agree to disagree about these things—the status of infants, the importance of training them for Christ and the Church, the doctrine of sanctification, etc.—we can see no necessity for any deliverance more than we already have. Better not press the matter too far, Brother Burrow.

A little word at the wrong time, in a wrong manner and to the wrong person, has often started a blaze that ended in a conflagration. "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

PERSONALS.

We acknowledge our obligation and tender thanks to Brother J. L. Lay, of Alberta, La., for a nice list of subscribers.

Bishop Hoss, after a protracted stay in Brazil, reached his home at Monteagle, Tenn., on the 8th. His stay there will be short, as the Conferences soon to be held will call him away.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, who has been assisting Dr. W. C. Black at Hattiesburg, Miss., has returned and reports "a good meeting."

Bishop Atkins begins his first round of Conferences at Deer Lodge, Montana, on September 13. He will close at Santa Ana, Cal., Oct. 31.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, of Ocean Springs, Miss., has been spending a month with his son, Rev. Frank E. Singleton, in Grandview, Tex.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, writing from Gulfport, Miss., says: "We have had a great revival." As one of the fruits he sends us a fine list of new subscribers to the ADVOCATE. We are grateful.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., our preacher at Jennings, La., though serving a new charge where 110 copies of the ADVOCATE were in circulation, has succeeded in securing a club of twelve. That is good work.

Rev. J. H. Grice, of Perch, Miss., has brought us under obligation for a club of twenty subscribers, and he promises more before Conference. We thank Brother Grice for his co-operation in the good work.

Rev. J. H. McCoy, of Alabama, is at this writing representing our Church as fraternal messenger at the General Conference of the Canada Methodist Church. If he does as well as he did in making the welcome address before our General Conference at Birmingham he will make a fine impression on the Canadians.

Rev. B. F. Jones, soon to begin the fourth round on the Natchez District, says: "I think this fourth round will reveal the fruits of a year of earnest and faithful work by the preachers and members of the district. It is confidently expected that the district will make a gratifying report in all things at the Annual Conference."

The sketch of Dr. Anson West in this week's ADVOCATE by Rev. Theo. Copeland will be read with great interest by all of our patrons who had acquaintance with that solid and loyal old Methodist, who had much to do in shaping Methodism in north Alabama. Dr. West was of the "old guard," ever faithful and ever reliable.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, of Grenada, was sick last Sunday and unable to fill his pulpit. His place was supplied by Rev. T. G. Freeman, who, Brother Jaco says, "preached two splendid sermons, very much to the pleasure and profit of the congregation. He has been real poorly this summer, but is now active. His sermons always have an element of personality and independence in them that secures attention and provokes thought."

Rev. H. S. Spragins is doing excellent work at Oxford, Miss., and succeeding. The Church is in fine condition. It has recently sustained a great loss in the death of Prof. Eugene Campbell, for several years connected with the University of Mississippi. The Church also suffers loss on account of the removal of Governor Shands from Oxford to New Orleans, where he comes to take a Chair in the Law Department of Tulane University. What Oxford loses New Orleans gains.

The following item was clipped from the Carrollton (Miss.) Conservative and sent to us by Brother J. R. Bingham: "Rev. J. A. McKee, assisted by Rev. L. A. McKeown, is conducting a successful meeting at North Carrollton. Mr. McKeown is a most attractive preacher and gets at his subject in an original and quite unique manner. He has attracted the largest audiences in the history of meetings held at North Carrollton, and the general verdict is that no more interesting and helpful sermons have been preached there."

THE CONNECTIONAL ORGAN.

We are immensely pleased with the enlargement and general improvement of the Christian Advocate, the general organ of our church. We say this, notwithstanding we are unable to agree with some editorial utterances occasionally put forth. The paper is a credit to all concerned—editors, publishers and printers—and the proof-reader. We congratulate the whole craft and urge our preachers everywhere to extend its circulation. It ought to go into ten times as many homes as it now visits. We hope it will.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: It will be gratifying to the friends of Whitworth College to know we have one hundred and fifty-five boarders already engaged, and applications for rooms are coming in daily. We can accommodate only one hundred and seventy, besides our teachers, and we feel sure we will have this number of boarders. It is very necessary that all students, both old and new, reach here Tuesday, September 25, as we hope to begin regular class-work Thursday, Wednesday, 26th, being spent in the classification of the students. We will have the largest local patronage we have had for years. The grounds and buildings were never in better condition.

On Tuesday, September 25, the president will meet all mid-day trains in Jackson, and Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson all trains at Silver Creek, seeing the young ladies transferred to the Mississippi Central, and arrangements will be made with Rev. Dr. Black and Rev. R. Selby to meet all day trains in Hattiesburg.

Let the friends of Whitworth remember us on our opening day, September 26, 1906.

I. W. COOPER, President.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

President Sligh reports as follows on the opening of the college:

The college opened on the 5th instant, with a fine lot of young ladies from all over the State present, and a liberal number of local pupils, in all about seventy. This means that we shall make a better enrollment this year than we have ever made, as we generally more than double our enrollment the first day. The college is well equipped now, we have a good faculty and we are looking forward to a fine year's work.

THE ORPHANS' HOME.

Dear Brethren: Kindly notify any town that may desire to offer us a location for the orphanage to get the offer ready before the last of this month, as I expect to call a meeting of the board to decide on a location about Sept. 28. Please remind the Sunday school superintendent of each school that the 30th is Work Day. Help me, brethren. Fraternally,

C. C. WIER.

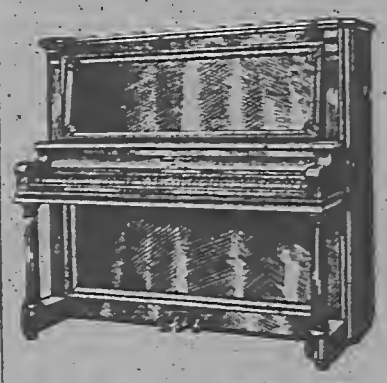
MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The fifteenth annual session of Millsaps College will begin Wednesday, September 26. The occasion will be celebrated with appropriate ceremonies, and all friends of the college are cordially invited to be present. The executive committee of the board of trustees will meet on the opening day to inspect plans for our new library building.

W. B. MURRAH, President.

SOUTHERN METHODIST HAND-BOOK.

The edition of the Hand-Book for 1906, which was very large, is about exhausted. It is remarkably popular. Dr. Ivey is busy preparing the edition for next year. It will be ready by Jan. 1, 1907. Advertising solicitors and selling agents are wanted in every Conference. Address Dr. T. N. Ivey, Raleigh, N. C.



NOTICE.

There is a report given currency by some unknown party or parties that I have resigned the Presidency of the Grenada College and gone to Monteagle. There is absolutely no foundation for such a report. The object held in view by the perpetrator of the rumor should not be guessed at by me, since I do not know the author and the setting from which I could guess at motive. If you should hear anyone repeat the rumor, you have my authority to assure the person that he is misinformed.

W. L. CLIFTON.

The Christian Scientist "Lookout" for Louisiana, whose business seems to be to watch what the papers say about Mrs Eddy and her church, clipped from the Advocate, of August 16, a paragraph concerning some of the regulations of the Christian Science congregations, and sent it to headquarters for reply. And we have on hand a reply all the way from Boston—from the office of the Publication Committee. It is accompanied with a request to give it space in our paper. According to the "reply," we published the truth, and we see no reason why we should give it space.

The Century in 1907 will have a strong Civil War flavor. Already in preparation are a series of articles on "How the Civil War Was Financed," by Ellis Paxson Oberholzer; an account of "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," by David Homer Bates, and General O. O. Howard's recollections of distinguished men, Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Grant, Lee and others.

GLENMORA CIRCUIT, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Since our last writing events have come to pass, I think, worth mentioning. We held our first meeting of eight days' duration at Glenmora, which embraced the first Sunday in July. Rev. N. E. Joyner, of Alexandria, preached the three last sermons, closing Wednesday night. The meeting was not what it should have been; however, some good was done. There has been about a half-dozen accessions as the results of this meeting and our efforts since the Second Quarterly Conference.

Our Melder meeting began on Saturday before the second Sunday in July. Rev. J. W. Booth came to our assistance Monday and preached through the meeting, closing Sunday night, resulting in thirteen accessions on profession of faith and one by letter.

Rev. Walter A. Hoffpauir, my brother, lately from Centenary College, was on hand, rendering valuable assistance to us. The meeting was a spiritual uplift to our church here.

On the Fourth of July our missionary Rally Day services were held at Spring Creek, where Rev. N. E. Joyner preached to a large and attentive audience an eloquent and inspiring sermon on the subject of missions—a subject to which only men of Joyner's attainments can do justice. A collection was taken, amounting to $36.30 for our Conference collections.

At 3 o'clock Bro. Joyner addressed the audience on Mexico, which was both instructive and interesting, and was enjoyed by all who were privileged to be present.

Last, but not least, was the long trip of sixty miles to Dry Creek, accompanied by our presiding elder, Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer, at which place our Third Quarterly Conference was held on the 21st of July. The Doctor preached three fine sermons, in which truth was ably and fervently presented to the minds and consciences of the hearers, as is characteristic of Dr. Sawyer.

The work of the past quarter was inquired into and showed some decided improvement, notably that of Question 18—the one you are interested in, and in which all Methodist preachers ought to be. Our Sunday schools were reported as doing good work, those at Glenmora and Dry Creek having observed Children's Day. A splendid library and case was purchased at a cost of about $31 for the Glenmora Sunday school.

Well, Doctor, I am glad that, while I am only a beginner, I can do the work of an itinerant in the grand old Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose present and existing fundamental standards of doctrine and articles of faith I love and believe are sufficient. May God bless our church, her ministry, our work and the dear old Advocate and its readers. Pray for us. Fraternally,

A. R. HOFFPAUIR.

Glenmora, La.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am through with my protracted meetings on the Trenton charge. The result was several conversions and thirty-seven added to the church. I was assisted by Bros. Will Lane, J. C. Lang, H. Mellard and M. J. Miller at four of the churches, who did all the preaching and did it well. At the other two churches Bros. R. A. Sibley, Sr., and Drummonds each preached once. Bro. Hall, a Presbyterian, preached twice, and the writer the balance. The congregations were well pleased with the services those brethren gave us. The churches are all to some extent revived. I have added some improvements to the parsonage and five of the churches. I expect to bring up all the collections ordered by the Conference.

My people are taking and reading our church organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate. I send you three more subscribers. I am happy in the work. Pray for us. Yours fraternally,

R. T. NOLEN.

On the [illegible] of January, Mrs. NANNY [illegible] PASMORE, the Pasmore died at the [illegible] of her daughter Mrs Isaac Be[illegible] in Rankin County, Miss. Sister Alice was born in Jackson, Miss., the [illegible] February, 1841. Her father, Francis Pasmore, came from Maryland. Her mother, Nancy Patterson, came from Maryland. Her parents [illegible] to Rankin County, Miss. when she was a child. Here she spent the [illegible] of her life. She joined the Methodist Church at Westville before she was grown. On the 15th of December, 1867, she was married to [illegible] Avery. To them were born eight children. Two of these died in infancy. The husband and two sons died four or five years ago. She loved God and his church. It was her pleasure to attend the services of the church and give of her means to advance Christ's kingdom. In her life she shone forth the graces of Christianity. She had that abiding faith in God that directed her in life's duties and sustained her in its trials. She leaves two sons, two daughters and one sister, all members of the Methodist Church; other relatives and a host of friends, who mourn over her departure. But they weep not as those who have no hope. She was ready and wanted to go when the Master sent for her. Several days before she died she told her sister and daughter that she was going to die, and that she was ready to go and wanted them to meet her in heaven." As I saw her peacefully fall asleep in Jesus I thought—

It is not death to die.
To leave this weary road,
And mid the brotherhood on high
To be at home with God.

Her pastor, M. H. MOORE.

CLIFFORD, son of Rollie and Mrs. Lavincie Mathis, was born in Wilkinson County, Miss., near Sankum, on April 25, 1904, and died Jan. 25, 1906, after an illness of five days. Loving hands and medical skill did all they could to keep him here, but God took him to make heaven brighter and more homelike by the presence of one more child, with his smiles and childish voice. Though only 21 months old, he could talk well and showed intelligence beyond one of his age. He was loving and obedient.

W. W. MURRAY, P. C.

SYNTHIA LAURA KIZER, wife of Thomas D. Kizer, died Jan. 22, 1906, near Strayhorn, Miss. Sister Kizer gave her heart to God when she was quite young; throughout her life was one in which no sacrifice was too great for the Master. A devoted wife, a fond mother, a good neighbor, a noble Christian woman has gone to her reward. Reared in a Methodist home, her life has always been one consistent with her early training. She lived the religion of her Lord Jesus in her every-day life, and was ever happy in the service of God. She was resigned in sickness and sorrow and always ready to sacrifice for the welfare of others. She gave testimony on her deathbed of her assurance of faith and glorious hope in Christ. Her memory will be treasured by a host of friends, a monument to the fact that the blood of Christ saves from all sin. She is not dead, but living in a higher, fuller and more glorious life. Amen!

The subject of this sketch, G. W. LEWIS, son of Lemuel and Polly Lewis, was born and reared in Marion County, Miss., ten miles west of Pearl River, near where Waterholes Church stands. Death came gently, like one going to sleep, only noticed by close watching. She had joined the Methodist Church in her early womanhood and was consistent, a part of suffering in much affliction. She was one of our best members at Lawrence, Miss. She awaits a blissful resurrection.

C. McDONALD.

The subject of this sketch, JAMES HENRY CLINE, was born in East Feliciana Parish, near Blairstown, on Oct. 10, 1880, and passed from this world Feb. 23, 1906. His death was a great shock to his family and host of friends. He died from the effects of a wound he sustained while attempting to board a street car. He was married to Miss Myra E. Facundus on the 16th of July, 1901. This proved to be a most happy union. Their lives blended beautifully together. They were admirably suited to each other. He leaves a devoted and true wife, a mother and four brothers and a host of bereaved friends to mourn his death.

A FRIEND.

VELMA CORNELIA, only child of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Brookshier, of Belden, Miss., was born Oct. 22, 1905, and died of congestion June 6, 1906, at her grandfather's, Mr. T. J. Seal. The mother's heart-broken moan as she knelt by the little white casket, of "oh baby, if mother could only go with you," was sweetened by Christian faith in God's will. The recollection of her dear presence will be a blessing to her bereaved parents through all the long days that must be lived out. The lovely body is laid away to sleep in Fairview Cemetery, but her spirit is safe in the arms of Jesus. We know where to find her in that day.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 30, 1906.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

(Gal. v, 15-26; vi, 7-8.)

Golden Text: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging."—Prov. xx, 1.

In the year that is now drawing to a close we have seen, from the study of the life and works of the Master, how he was steadily and surely laying the foundation of his kingdom, and how gladly the common people heard him; how they flocked to him from the mountain-side and valley, and from the river to the sea; and all that came went away with the blessing they desired. We have also seen how active Satan was in trying to counteract the good, aiding the evil, using as his instruments the more intelligent, principally the Scribes and Pharisees. Our lesson to-day is a study of one of the many ways in which the devil tries to accomplish the destruction of man for time and eternity. The war between good and evil began with our first parents, and the weapon used against them was a lie, and it was strong enough for the purpose. Satan suits the weapon to the purpose and the opportunity. While the lie has been in constant use, and is wielded with telling effect in our day and time, yet there is a much more powerful evil that the devil has been sagacious enough to select for its far-reaching influence, not only on the souls of mankind, but on the body also—that is intemperance.

Our golden text suggests that the lesson be a study of the drink habit. Let us reflect on the danger that lurks in a liquid that is bought and sold the world over as a beverage. Usually, when anything is taken into the stomach only the physical nature is affected. There are medicines that affect the pulse, the respiration, or the vision; but there is in intoxicating drink a power over the mind, so that one under its influence is completely changed. Unreal things become real. That is perhaps why Solomon writes, "wine is a mocker." Under the influence of whisky, the evil in man's nature comes to the surface and finds utterance and action. It is fearful that such an effect can be produced by a decoction that has become so largely a part of the world's traffic. It seems that the nations supply weapons for the devil to wage war on mankind. The ship that takes the missionary to foreign lands also takes in the hold in barrels the enemy he has been accustomed to fight at home. Legislation can never counteract the punishment inflicted by this weapon of the devil. The only remedy is the religion of Jesus Christ. "Our weapons are not carnal," "for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against spiritual wickedness." This fact must have been impressed on the mind of Miss Willard, when she gave the name "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" to the association she founded.

Paul admonishes to "be not drunken with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." Inferring that if wine is taken, it drives away the Spirit — the two cannot occupy our bodies at one and the same time. If the Spirit is driven away, what are we? For "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." God says he works within us, "both to will and to do of his good pleasure;" and he works through the Spirit. There is always a fight between the flesh and the Spirit. If we drink anything that weakens our reason, then we aid the flesh in dominating the Spirit, and we do not hesitate to do the works of the flesh that are enumerated one after another in verses 19, 20 and 21 of our lesson. If we have the Spirit, this hideous list of the works of the flesh will make us turn away in horror when we read it. Who will risk losing the inheritance of the kingdom of God by aiding the flesh to overcome the Spirit? How do I know I have the Spirit? Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Read verses 22 and 23 for the fruits of the Spirit: "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance." Both fruits are put before us—which shall we choose? Shall we let appetite decide such a momentous question?

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked." A drinking man thinks he can hide his habit. It cannot be hid from God or man. "If a man love God, the same is known of him," and if he is a thoughtless, weak slave to habit, the same is known of him. No one can use whisky and have religion; one or the other must be given up. No man can serve two masters. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God," and are safe through Christ, who strengtheneth them. Yet temperance is to be learned so as to be able to help the weak. Teaching and admonishing that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap." If he soweth intemperance, the fruits will follow, and the array of them is repulsive. If he soweth to the Spirit, the fruit is life everlasting.

In this day and time the arguments against intemperance do not come only from a religious standpoint. There is a powerful influence against the use of whisky in the business world. It is almost universally the case that when it is known that a man drinks he is soon told that his services are not desirable, and in a cold, business way, he is given his time, and he goes his way. While that is a strong lesson to others, yet a Christian will, or ought to, go further, and look after the discharged man, and, with the help of the Master, try to reclaim the lost one and gain him for Christ. Hence the attitude of the Christian must be one of gentle forbearance and sympathy. In this way many can be saved and our Lord glorified. To them let us go, as Jesus did, among the lost and fallen ones, quietly gaining their confidence, and not pointing them to Jesus, but leading them by the hand to the helper of the helpless, remembering that part of the mission on earth of the Son of God was proclaiming liberty to them that are bound.

DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Denham Springs camp meeting is over, and now lives only in the memory of those who have had the pleasure of attending it. On Friday night, Aug. 24th, Rev. A. W. Turner of Grand Cane, La., preached the opening sermon to an attentive congregation, and, with the aid of the visiting brethren of the ministry, did the preaching until Monday, Sept. 27, when his co-laborer, Rev. R. W. Vaughn of Morgan City, La., arrived.

We desire to commend the wisdom of the committee in soliciting the labors of these brethren. They are tireless workers, and their preaching does not lack the one essential thing—power.

It has been the writer's privilege to attend many camp meetings in several different states, but has never seen a more brotherly spirit prevail among those who stood behind the sacred desk.

The sounds which they, in the deep emotion of their souls, drew from the harps of the prophets and the apostles, were blended together in an enchanting harmony.

Bro. Turner deserves much credit for what, by the help of the Lord, he has already accomplished, and Bro. Vaughn's deep piety, his meekness and humility, has won for him the love of all the people who heard him, but I shall not say any more concerning them because their extraordinary ability is known by all our readers.

President C. C. Miller of Centenary was with us one day, and preached one sermon to the delight of all who heard him. Among the visiting preachers were Cargill, Patterson and Howard. There are a few facts about this meeting to which we wish to call the attention of our readers. The number of tickets sold, granting admittance, exceeded that of any year previous to this, the attention given to the preached word was by far the best in the history of the camp, and more were received into the church than at any previous meeting at this place. So, we are encouraged, and intend to press the battle on.

We do not want our readers to lose sight of the fact that the devil also had his representatives in our midst. The spirit of politics was at a high tide. Sabbath desecration and devilish schemes of different types which hindered greatly the work of God among us.

The preachers were entertained in the hospitable home of Rev. J. F. Waltman, the pastor of this place. Rev. Waltman is a grand, whole-souled man that loves and serves God, and rendered effectual service in prayer and song. Notwithstanding the reasons that we have for deeming it a success, we realize that it could have been much better. Many hearts, though helped, are still unsatisfied; many souls, though awakened to their opportunities and responsibilities, are still not guiltless; and we trust and pray for better results in the future.

J. C. DUPLANTIS.

FULTON CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am glad indeed to see such good reports from other charges, and feel that we might say something about Fulton Circuit. We have six churches and Sunday schools at each place. We are through with our protracted meetings, and had good revivals at most of our places. We had ten conversions only and twelve were added to the church. For which we thank God and take courage.

We have now 540 members, and most of our people own their homes and are out of debt. We have some of the best people I have ever met. They have a building spirit, and will soon repair some of their church houses.

I see no reason why this should not become one of the leading charges in the district. We desire the prayers of all Christian people. Respectfully,

A Bumper Wheat Crop.

To produce a "bumper" wheat crop, it is absolutely necessary that you supply to your land one or more of the three elements of plant food which your soil so badly needs: phosphoric acid, nitrogen (or ammonia) and potash. The liberal use of

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers,

(say 200 to 500 pounds to the acre) will meet this deficiency. You know the highest grades are always cheaper, as they produce greater yields. These fertilizers on account of the phosphoric acid they contain, promote the growth and development of the grain and hastens maturity; the nitrogen or ammonia of which they are a part, increases the growth of leaves and stalk and its potash gives strength to the stalk and assists in the development of the grain.

So use VIRGINIA-CAROLINA FERTILIZERS and greatly "Increase your yields per acre." Don't buy any substitute brand, which some dealer may tell you "Is just as good." If he cannot supply you, write us direct for the goods and tell us your dealer's name.

CASEYVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: It is very sad indeed to know that one of the jewels of earth has left us, our dear and beloved friend and brother, M. R. McEwen, of Topisaw Camp Ground, who leaves a precious wife and eight dear children and friends to mourn over the loss of the loved one. We ourselves are glad to say that we have known the friend who lies in a new-made grave. He has been a means of grace to my soul. He was one of the best men that ever lived. He was justice of the peace in the county in which he lived. What he said about matters was all right.

It was the happiest moment of life when I could call to see him and family and see the love that existed between him and his family.

"But leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set, but
Thou hast all seasons for thine own,
O Death!"

I ask the prayers of all for the ones who are left to mourn. Yours very truly. ROBT. HOWSE.

RALEIGH CAMP MEETING.

New Orleans Christian Advocate: The Raleigh camp meeting has just closed. It was a victory for Jesus from start to finish. Three girls were saved in the first service and nearly every service a number was converted, reclaimed or entirely sanctified. Bros. C. M. Dunaway, of Atlanta, Ga.; R. A. Breland and H. A. Wood, of Meridian, Miss., did the preaching. They are real Holy Ghost preachers. Bro. Wood conducted the singing, which was fine. Mrs. Riggs, of Meridian, assisted the home workers with her valuable services at the altar and in prayer services.

It is wonderful what the Lord has done at the Raleigh holiness camp meeting. Surely there must have been a hundred and twenty-five reclaimed, converted or sanctified; some were both converted and sanctified. The last day it rained, so Bro. Dunaway could not preach at 11 o'clock, but souls were hungry and the altar was filled, and some prayed through. Afternoon service was fine, shouts of victory and rejoicing rang out through the stately pines until the devil was run out on the edges. Some people gazed on in amazement, while others left the pavilion, but those who love the truth felt it was good to be there and just gave themselves into the Lord's hands. The last night was a good time in the Lord, a number being saved, and a goodly number still seeking Jesus and said they were determined never to stop until they found Him. If the Lord wills, we expect Bro. Dunaway again in the future. He wears well and is full of the Holy Ghost. Praise God for holiness camp meetings and men and women who preach and love Holy Ghost religion. Yours in Christ,

O. W. PITTMAN.

RALLY DAY PROGRAMMES.

Dear Brother: The Rally Day programme for 1906, prepared by the Board of Missions, is now ready for distribution. It has met with favor from year to year all over the Church, and we believe has been instrumental in interesting thousands of grown people, as well as children, in the great work of missions.

Responsive readings, appropriate recitations, dialogues, and familiar missionary hymns, in addition to the ten or fifteen-minute address by the pastor, or some one else, cannot help making this both attractive and telling.

Be sure to observe Rally Day, conferring with your superintendent as to time most convenient, and let us know the number of copies of the programme you need. They will be sent free on application to G. W. Cain, Nashville, Tenn.

The missionary spirit is steadily rising throughout the Church. Never were our people more intelligently informed concerning the evangelization of the world. Let us have the hearty cooperation of every Sunday-school superintendent, teacher and scholar in the entire connection, that we may claim the world for Christ. Cordially your brother,

WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

The Sweet-Toned Epworth Piano

A Piano good enough for these musicians; is good enough for any one.

Dr. WILLIAM WADE HINSHAW,
President Chicago Conservatory of Music.

"For the last ten years I have used an Epworth piano in my home, and a portion of that time also had one in my studio, where it was subjected to the severest strain and test. Both these instruments have stood the test in a surprising way. The tone of the Epworth is languid and sympathetic, making it a splendid piano to sing with. I can vouch for the durability, sweetness of tone, and general excellence of these pianos, and I gladly give them my unqualified recommendation."

whose music is sung around the globe.

"The Epworth piano I bought of you for my home is a superior instrument. There is a clearness, depth and richness in its tone which is particularly pleasing. I can safely recommend the Epworth to my friends."

Prof. CHARLES H. GABRIEL,
well-known composer of Sunday School music.

"For years I have used the Epworth in my studio, and now I have bought another for my home; they are exceptionally sweet-toned instruments. I feel that I can strongly recommend these pianos, because I know them to be good and believe them to be the best obtainable for the price."

Prof. GEORGE D. ELDERKIN,
Publisher Sunday School song books.

"The Epworth is a sweet-toned piano; I can say this without reserve, for I have used one in my studio for over three years. I can also recommend the Williams firm."

THIS pleasing picture was painted by a young lady from a photograph.

And no description can make clear to you the sweetness of the Epworth tone.

But place the Epworth in your home and the distinguished beauty of the design and the rich, mellow sweetness of the tone will not only delight you but will explain the popularity of the Epworth among musicians and music lovers.

It will pay you to read carefully every word of this advertisement, and then to send for our free Epworth piano book which tells how to get a satisfactory piano at a satisfactory price.

Our business was established in 1856 by our president, Mr. J. W. Williams, and we want to celebrate this, our fiftieth or Jubilee year by making and selling more Epworth pianos and organs than in any one previous year.

We own and operate two well equipped factories here in Chicago, one for making the artistic Epworth pianos, and the other for making the sweet-voiced Epworth organs.

We invite you to go through our factories so you can see the fine quality of the material we use and how our pianos and organs are made.

We think you understand that we do not sell our musical instruments through piano dealers or agents, but that we sell them all to homes and churches direct from our factory and at the factory price.

This direct-from-factory plan enables you to get a sweet-toned Epworth piano at a saving of about $100.00 and an Epworth organ at a saving of from $10.00 to $50.00.

Now, it is easy for us to make fine pianos, and it is easy to sell them, too, when we know who are wanting to buy, and to whom we ought to send our catalog.

It is still easier for us to sell an Epworth piano after we get a nice one in some home where we can refer to it as a sample of our work.

The Epworth is so beautiful in design and so sweet in tone that it sells itself—all it needs is an introduction to the prospective buyer.

There are people in every community who are thinking of buying pianos, but who, for both security and economy, prefer not to deal with middlemen, agents, dealers or supply houses.

These people would be glad to see an Epworth in the home of some neighbor and to learn from him about the satisfaction and the saving of dealing direct with us, the makers.

Now, here is where you can help us and we can help you.

We can help you by giving you a special reduction on a fine Sample Epworth Piano for your home and to which we can refer prospective buyers.

You can help us by showing your beautiful Epworth piano to your friends and neighbors, and by sending us the names of those who would like to receive our catalogs.

Now, if you would like to know what we are willing to do for you on a fine Epworth piano as a sample of our work, fill out the coupon at bottom of this page and send it to us at once.

We will then send our beautiful piano book and our Special Sample Piano Offer.

If you like our generous offer then you may select one of our fine pianos and have it sent on trial.

When the piano arrives you can give it a thorough trial to see if we have made a happy selection and have sent you the very piano you yourself would have chosen. And if you wish, you may have your friends "take a hand" in helping you to decide the question.

Then, if after a good trial you find the beautiful sample piano to be a nicer, sweeter toned piano than you can possibly get anywhere else for one half more, you may buy the piano on your own terms.

You may pay monthly, quarterly, annually, part cash or all cash or on any other reasonable terms. We like to accommodate our customers, and especially those who help us introduce our pianos. After you become the owner of an Epworth piano, we will pay you generously for sending names of piano buyers.

Now, if you would like a free copy of our beautiful piano book, with factory prices and our Special Sample Piano Offer, fill out the coupon and send it to us at once. Do not wait, but send the coupon in next mail or soon as you can.

MARY'S LOVE.

Contributed.

Worn sore with weary miles of toil,
His feet had trod the rugged land,
When Mary poured the precious oil
With tender touch and soothing hand.

With kisses to his feet she blest,
Who raised her brother from the dead,
And wiped them at her heart's behest,
E'en with the hair of her own head.

Let no false-hearted Judas speak,
Nor love's too costly worship stay;
The strong may always help the weak,
But Jesus needs love's balm to-day.

Where'er Christ's Word of Life shall go
Shall this wise-hearted act be told,
That all the world this truth may know,
That deeds of love outvalue gold.

Glances at the World.

The cotton crop always gives our people more or less concern at this time of the year. This year is no exception. Rain in one place, dry weather in another, the ravages of the boll-wevil, and the work of speculators all conspire to cause uneasiness. The price has dropped a little and the fear is that it will go lower. The Cotton Association is trying to hold the farmers to ten cents. Whether it will succeed depends altogether on the farmer's needs. He will sell for less than ten cents if he needs the money. Of the present situation the Picayune of the 17th inst. says: "As the month of September advances it becomes more and more evident that the cotton crop, as a whole, is a late one, even though the yield of southern Texas is unusually early. The movement to date—that is, the amount of cotton forwarded to market—is well behind both last year and the year before last. While some of this shortage may be due to holding back by farmers unwilling to accept present prices, the shrinkage due to that cause cannot be but a moderate proportion of the total. There has been, moreover, little bad weather of late to interfere with either picking or moving the crop."

Several times recently we have seen notices of the gathering of Jews in the Holy Land—not going as pilgrims or sight-seers, but as permanent residents. It will be remarkable if the unrest in Russia, and the wholesale massacre of Jews in that unhappy land should result in turning whole colonies to their native soil. Such a thing is possible. The Review of Reviews notes the situation as follows: "Quite recently the Jerusalem) correspondent of the London Daily Mail telegraphed that the influx of the Jews into Palestine during the past few months had been remarkable. Many thousands are coming from Russia every week. They are settling east of the river Jordan, and, in the opinion of this correspondent, are gradually, but surely, regaining possession of the land of their fathers. British and American consular officers, in their recent reports on the Holy Land, record evidence of prosperous conditions, and British trade annals for 1905 show trade improvements at all Mediterranean ports in Asiatic Turkey. At Jaffa, especially, business has greatly increased. There are good crops, and exports of cereals, fruits and wines, and the land seems to be again literally enjoying the proverbial milk and honey."

A paragraph in this department last week was devoted to Mr. Roosevelt's order in spelling reform. We take occasion now to say that the President meets with comparatively little sympathy, and has become the target of the jokers and cartoonists, as well as the victim of the critics. The criticisms are innumerable. The president of a great university says: "Neither Mr. Carnegie's cash or Mr. Roosevelt's command can make English over again." The New York Evening Post says: "We have already expressed the opinion that some of the short list of new spellings proposed are sensible changes, and may in time be trusted to work their way into use. But we never expected earthquake literary reform by executive decree; nor do we think that the President's official example will have much effect except to excite laughter. We doubt if the practice of a single printing office will be changed in consequence of Mr. Roosevelt's order, except that of the public printing office at Washington. Into it great confusion will be introduced. Two systems of printing and proofreading will be necessary—one for the White House output, another for all the rest. This will surely mean delays, with higher cost, and, if we know anything of printers' nature, much profanity at the President's expense." And Bryan's Commoner says: "The shades of Messrs. Artemas Ward and Josh Billings will now line up on the White House grounds for their vindication." Many such notes could be multiplied indefinitely.

The situation in Cuba has been growing more and more serious. The insurgents are gowing stronger all the time, and the indications are that damage will come to the republic unless peace is speedily restored. Some three weeks ago President Palma proffered pardon to all offenders who would throw down their arms and return to their homes. The insurgents would not accept his terms. Since then the President determined to conquer a peace and withdrew his offer of amnesty. The affairs have been closely watched by the administration at Washington, hoping the difficulties would end without intervention. There being no hope of such a thing, and the situation constantly growing worse, intervention has been determined upon. Accordingly Secretary Taft and Assisstant Attorney Bacon have been sent to Havana to study the situation. In the meantime a few warships are hovering around, and others will be sent if necessary. But the army will not be called into action if matters can be arranged otherwise. It is now reported that President Palma is endeavoring to secure terms with the insurgents—showing a willingness to make concessions for the sake of peace. The demand for the annexation of Cuba to the United States is growing—annexation, it is declared, being the only way to preserve a permanent peace on the island. Of this, however, we are not prepared to give an opinion.

TWO GOOD MEETINGS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just finished our meetings on the Haynesville Circuit. We had two that deserve mention—one at Dykesville, where twenty-six joined the Church by baptism and profession of faith: at Colquitt, eight by baptism. At both of the above places the people quit work and went to church day and night. There is only one way to have a good meeting, and that is for the people to meet.

Yours in Christ, S. J. DAVIS.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

(FROM THE GENERAL OFFICE.)

"No city, except the heavenly, is safe without a temple."

World-wide Methodism was never more aggressive than in the year of our Lord 1906. It brings to completion every week more than forty houses of worship.

Our missionaries at home and abroad are multiplying. Their converts are many. The congregations called into being by their message must be housed. Nothing short of this will conserve their success.

The Denver Conference, as usual, paid more than 100 per cent on the assessment. In addition to this they made a subscription of $163 for the new church at Aztec, New Mexico. The last year was a good one with the Denver Conference brethren.

Have you ever taken time to consider the relation of Church Extension to the other benevolences of the Church? Every missionary, educational and charitable agency of the Church looks for support to the housed congregation.

* * *

Rev. J. B. Henry, of Buena Vista, Va., writes under recent date as follows: "With gratitude to God for the help he has given me in my labors and to the Board of Church Extension, the value of whose services I appreciate as never before, I send my check to settle the debt of St. John's Church in full."

* * *

The Western Virginia Conference has just closed a pleasant session. The Board has been generous with those brethren. They are not high up in the list of per cent paid on assessment. This year marks a decided advance. They will come to the front in spite of many difficulties. Their offering to relieve a suburban church in Huntington of an embarrassing debt was $129.50.

* * *

The congregation at Liberty, Mo., placed in the hands of the Secretary, on a recent Sunday, cash and subscriptions amounting to $100, to be used in assisting a church in the Indian Mission Conference. Ten years ago Church Extension funds to the amount of $800 were invested in a building for our people at Liberty. They have prospered from the day they entered the new building. The $100 referred to was given as a thank offering.

The Missouri Conference made a fine showing. Nearly 100 per cent was paid on the assessment for Church Extension, and $406.34 was given in cash and subscriptions to buy a lot for a church building in one of the new towns in Southwest Oklahoma. The "big pastures" will be open for settlement this summer. Choice church lots must be secured in all of the towns of the 500,000 acres to be opened for settlement. The Missouri Conference leads the way.

* * *

The first church building especially designed for institutional work is in Kansas City, Mo., located at the corner of Admiral Boulevard and Holmes street. It is valued at $75,000. Rev. C. W. Moore is pastor. The building is a model. Those who contemplate erecting an institutional church building would do well to avail themselves of an opportunity to examine this plant. The Secretary, through the kindness of Dr. Z. M. Williams, presiding elder, spent a profitable hour recently studying the building and the work.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF REV. FRANCIS M. WILLIAMS, OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Doctor Boswell: For nearly four years Rev. F. M. Williams, an honored and useful member of the Mississippi Conference, has been an intimate friend and near neighbor of mine here in Waynesboro. In private conversation I have heard him relate many interesting and thrilling experiences that came to him as a pioneer Southern Methodist minister in Kansas. Although urged to publish these incidents for the benefit of his many old friends, as well as for the younger people who know little or nothing of such trying times and experiences, he modestly and persistently declined, his wife agreeing with him. During the early part of this year, however, an old friend in Missouri prevailed upon him to furnish certain data for a book he was preparing. Having finished the sketch he showed it to me, whereupon I seized the opportunity, earnestly besought him and secured the original manuscript.

I feel sure the members of the Conference will enjoy reading this sketch, especially as Brother Williams intends to go on the honor roll at the approaching session of his Conference, after fifty-eight years of continuous service as an itinerant. Truly yours, W. L. LINFIELD.

Waynesboro, Miss.

There was nothing of any importance in my life up to the time I joined the Kansas Conference in 1856 more than is found in the life of any other loyal Methodist minister; so I will give you a brief sketch covering fifty years beginning with the first session of that Conference which I attended at Kickapoo City, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding.

My first appointment was Kickapoo City Circuit, where we had some good meetings, gathering many into the Church. The next session of the Conference was held at Leavenworth City in 1857. No Bishop being present, Thomas Wallace was elected president and F. M. Williams secretary. I was appointed to Mt. Pleasant Circuit, where I preached two years with good success. In 1859 I was appointed to Brownsville Circuit, which carried me fifty miles from my home. During the year 1860 I secured the contract with the United States Government for the Kickapoo Manuel Labor School, turning it over to the Conference which met at Wyandotte City that year. At that session of the Conference Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh presided, and I was appointed to take charge of the school and mission.

Before the memorable year of 1861 closed the sectional strife became so great that it became necessary for me to abandon the school and go back to my home in Atchison County to save my property from confiscation.

Our last session of the Kansas Conference was held at Brush Creek, about twenty-five miles west of Atchison City. Thomas Wallace was again elected president and J. Spencer, secretary. It was during this Conference and after we had elected our delegates to the General Conference that a resolution was offered, instructing our delegates to the General Conference to vote for the term "South" to be stricken from the name of our Church. The vote being taken, all voting in the affirmative except myself, I arose and said: "Mr. Secretary, you will please do me a favor if you will please record my name as voting in the negative." The majority laughed; but I thank God I have lived to see the day that I am prouder of that vote than any other I ever cast.

From this Conference the preachers began to scatter, some in one direction, and others in another; so that at the close of 1861 there were in our Conference territory only about six preachers left. The persecution was now on. Until peace was made we had no rest from the "Loyal League," the fanatics who howled lustily at home, but never went to the front, and the "Jayhawkers," who preyed upon the Southern people first and afterwards took in the loyal Unionists.

The first time I came in contact with a mob was in 1861, about seven or eight miles from Leavenworth City, where Brother J. King and I were holding a meeting. On Sunday evening, while Brother King was preaching, in walked twelve or thirteen men, one of whom carried a satchel. I afterwards learned that the satchel contained eggs, and that a rope was carried by them, it being their purpose to use these instruments of torture on us. Fortunately we escaped both. The next in order was a mob composed of both men and women, whose avowed purpose was to tar and feather two other men and myself. They succeeded with the first man and got to the second, but at that point Providence sent a thunderstorm which switched them off their purpose so far as I was concerned.

My third experience occurred about ten miles south of the city of Atchison at a schoolhouse. I had been preaching about five minutes when in walked an orderly sergeant with a United States flag on a staff. I stopped preaching and the congregation turned pale. He fastened the flag to the wall, so that it floated over my head, then took his seat. I broke the silence by saying: "Here floats the flag representing the Constitution of the United States, which instrument guarantees to every man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, while no man dares to molest or make him afraid. Under this flag no one will be hurt here to-day, and I hope no one will be alarmed." I then took up my subject where I left off and proceeded to finish my discourse in good order.

My fourth experience took place at Mt. Pleasant, where I always had good congregations. It was said by my enemies, "If a loyal man had an appointment here there would not be present a corporal's guard; but let old 'Sesesh Williams' have an appointment and there will be a house full." As soon as I had arrived at the church I saw the mob, and knew that something unusual was on hand. They handed me a note propounding the question, "What was the cause of the division of the M. E. Church, and what is the difference in their doctrines?" I then asked them if they wanted the question answered publicly or privately. Demanding a public reply, I read the letter from the pulpit and proceeded to answer the question. In less than fifteen minutes I had scalded and burnt them so badly that they arose en masse, crying: "Shoot him! Put him out!" And in view of pistols drawn upon me, I thought best to desist. Then came a scramble and a little fight. One of their men, who seemed to be the bully of their crowd, slapped Brother Jones, one of our ministers, in the face. Then trying his hand on me, I struck him in the face; but he was barely in reach. He then threw a rock at me, but I fended it off with my hand. The services were closed that day very unceremoniously.

About two weeks after this little episode I received a note from the "Loyal League," signed by the president and secretary, notifying me to leave the State in twenty days. A young lawyer belonging to the League by the name of David Sprang interviewed them in my behalf, and they recanted by sending me a note, stating that if I would desist from preaching at Mt. Pleasant I might stay at home.

Twice they had plans laid to assassinate me; and once they came into the neighborhood to carry out their purpose, but were thwarted. Twice Union officers were sent from Fort Leavenworth to interview me. My reply was, "I have always been an honest man, and I had rather die than to live with a lie in my mouth; were I to tell you that I did not sympathize with the South you would know it was a lie. My Bible teaches me to be subject to the powers that be. If I were in the South I would be loyal to the Southern Confederacy, but I am here in the Federal lines and I propose to be loyal to the government of the United States." They would say one to another, "there is no danger in such a man as that."

I think it was in the winter of 1863, and at Kickapoo City, that I had an appointment to preach. The week before I was to preach there a regiment of soldiers were quartered there for the winter. My friends insisted upon my not going. They thought it dangerous. When I reached the place I found the soldiers in possession of our church, and their chaplain occupying the pulpit. I walked down the aisle, taking my seat just behind the chaplain, and listened to a political sermon, or war harangue; finally he closed by saying that he would give place to this other gentleman, alluding to me. I arose and after referring to their being in possession of our church, tendered them the use of the church during their temporary stay, requesting them not to abuse it. I then stated to this houseful of soldiers that for the first time in my life I had listened to a political sermon; that Jesus Christ said to his apostles, "As ye go, preach and say the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and that he did not authorize them to preach politics. A few more similar quotations, and I dismissed the congregation; whereupon Gov. Woodson came down the aisle and shook hands with me very cordially, the colonel also seeking an introduction. There were only three citizens present and they thought I would be arrested immediately; but the colonel complimented me very highly for what I said, remarking that he could hear enough of politics elsewhere, and that when we go to church we want to hear the gospel. I hope some good was done, if not to the soldiers, to the chaplain.

At another time at my home church the rumor was circulated that I would be mobbed if I attempted to preach there on that occasion. There was a good congregation assembled, and I had been preaching about five minutes when four soldiers rode up and dismounted. The congregation was very much agitated, but I continued the discourse. The soldiers walked in, came down the aisle and took their seats around me. Two of them were my special friends, and having heard of the plan to mob me, pursuaded the other two to accompany them to my appointment in order to protect me. The mob did not show up that day.

In 1864 the college at Mt. Pleasant conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity upon me, and the president proposed to give me a certificate to that effect. I politely declined, stating to him that I was not worthy of the degree, and that his college was not large enough to confer it, notwithstanding it was a chartered institution. I left the honor where I found it.

We will now transfer the scene to the South. On the 18th day of December, 1865, my wife and I, with our five children, left our home in Kansas to visit our old friends in Tennessee, intending, if things were favorable, to make our home there or in North Alabama. We finally landed in Brandon, Miss., on the 16th day of February, 1866. In December of the same year Bishop Doggett transferred me from the Missouri to the Mississippi Conference. At this Conference Bishop Paine appointed me to Fannin Circuit. I afterwards traveled the Shiloh Circuit. In 1871 I was appointed to Brandon District. In 1874 I was appointed to the Edwards charge. In 1875, while serving Edwards Circuit, the negro riot at Clinton took place. This was within the bounds of my work. This occurred the day before we were to begin our protracted meeting; but instead of beginning a meeting I was doing military duty. In 1876 I was sent to the Warren Circuit, which embraced the territory immediately around Vicksburg. Here in 1878 I came in contact with yellow fever for the first time, and here the best record of my life as a Methodist preacher was made. I was with the fever in all stages and at all times during the whole siege. I even slept in beds where fever patients had died, but did not take the dread disease. For three months I went day and night among my members and others ministering to them as best I could. At the close of the epidemic I held a memorial service at each church in the charge.

The result of these services was far-reaching in its influence, especially as it was among an intelligent and cultured people; and to this day that people call me "blessed."

In 1880 I was on the Vicksburg District. I have gone hither and thither in my ministry for fifty-eight years without a vacation, and am still on the effective list.

Before I close this sketch I will give one more incident which occurred since I have been on this, the Wayne Mission. At one of my appointments there was a man who had broken up the congregation of my predecessor, and undertook the same with me. I came out of the pulpit, walked out doors, where two of my members were holding him. He refused to submit to arrest, whereupon I took my halter from my horse's bridle and tied one hand; but he refused to let me tie the other. I gave the word to throw him down, and in double-quick order it was done, and my knee was placed on his neck. The tying process was completed and he was sent to jail, whereupon I called my congregation back into the church and finished my discourse in the usual way. Since that day we have had the best of order at that church. This happened in my eightieth year.

THE CORRELATION OF OUR SCHOOLS IN MISSISSIPPI.

"The need of Alabama Methodism, a need which cries aloud to high heaven, is the correlation of her educational institutions, and the liberal equipment of them with money. The first must precede the second; without the first the second is in the dim and misty future, if ever."

These ringing words from the gifted pen of Dr. F. P. Culver, of our sister State, also properly characterize the situation in our own beloved Mississippi. That our colleges are all needy, is a proposition that admits of no argument. None of them are equipped as they ought to be. Only one is endowed at all, and its endowment is only a respectable beginning. Standing, as our institutions do, for the maintenance of a high curriculum, and refusing to do any but the most thorough scholastic work, it is almost pathetic to see them struggling in the midst of the difficulties by which they are beset. Take, for illustration, the situation at Millsaps College. We are there required to do with an income of $15,000 per annum the same character of work that a competing institution does with a yearly income of $60,000. And to succeed in this unequal contest we are having to demand of our professors a sacrifice that ought to put our Mississippi Methodism to shame. We are asking men who hold post-graduate degrees from the leading universities of America to serve us at a yearly salary of $1200 each, and at the same time provide their own homes. They are even more poorly paid than the average minister. Those professors for a time may be willing to sarcifice themselves upon the altar of church loyalty, but we cannot hope to retain them permanently upon such terms. There is for them no superannuate endowment fund, and they must have some regard for their own interests and the interests of their families. The truth is, we must have more money for the maintenance of Millsaps College, or an acute situation will confront us at no distant day. That the needs of our other institutions are also pressing, I have not the slightest doubt. I know something of the heroic struggle that Grenada College has had to make to breast the waves of financial embarrassment, and I feel assured that the stress of an inadequate income is also keenly felt by historic old Whitworth.

And now in view of this all-but-distressing situation the question arises, what are we going to do to bring relief to our worthy educational institutions and place them upon a surer and better basis? From every quarter comes the cry, "We must endow them!" That this proposal, if successfully carried out, would remove the exigencies which now confront us and make sure a splendid future for our colleges, all must admit. But whether the proposition is feasible and expedient is quite another thing. It is very easy to endow an institution on paper—how the thing can be done, can be figured out theoretically in a few moments. But when it comes to putting the theory in practice, to turning figures on paper into hard cash, the task is an exceedingly difficult one to perform. Those who think that we can easily endow three or four institutions in Mississippi need to study the history of the past. They should remember the tremendous amount of toil and struggle it took to raise $50,000 for the endowment fund of Millsaps College a few years ago. And that, too, when the movement was led by our peerless Bishop Galloway, and Major Millsaps was furnishing the mighty leverage of his well-known conditional gift of $50,000. A very large part of Dr. Lowery's endowment for Clinton, of which some of our Methodist brethren have had so much to say, is on paper, and there is scarcely a doubt that not a little of it will never be anywhere else.

Let me not be misunderstood. I have no wish to sound a discouraging note. I believe with all my heart in endowing our institutions of learning. I do not believe that any institution can exercise a commanding influence in the future that is not endowed. As Bishop Hendrix has so strikingly said: "No church is stronger than her colleges. Not only must the church educate, she must give the best if she would get the best. Neither the best instructors nor the best students can long be retained, if the shrunken ideal of education finds place. A true college is like '203 Meter Hill;' it does not win the battle, but it shows how it can be won. Without such heights, won with blood, the Port Arthurs of life are not taken." If Methodism is to have a future worthy of her illustrious past, she must have educational institutions second to none in the land. Only by influencing the thought of the world, can she continue to be the foremost of the Protestant churches. As I see it, we now have before us no duty more immediately pressing and imperative than that of enlarging, equipping, and endowing our schools.

But in undertaking this important task, I think that we should proceed with some system. Our plans should be well and wisely matured. We can ill afford the wastage consequent upon misdirected effort. It was chiefly to prevent such wastage that our General Board of Education was created. It is manifestly better to concentrate and endow one institution adequately than to scatter our money among several, giving no one of them enough to amount to anything. Our Methodism is a unit, and its interests should not be allowed to languish and suffer because of a lack of unity in our plans and purposes. By all means, our schools should be correlated. We should have our central institutions where the highest teaching and training are to be done, and make all of the others tributary to these. We have use for all our schools, if we could only relate them properly to one another, and assign to each some definitely prescribed sphere of work. Hurtful competition between them should never be permitted. If two or more of them are to be endowed, it seems to me it would be wise to agree upon some plan of division and ask our people to subscribe to one common endowment fund, instead of confusing them by presenting the claims of first one, and then another. Such a course must necessarily result in more or less friction and ill-feeling. It has already unhappily brought this about in some sections of the State.

It seems to me that the time has come for our two Mississippi Conferences to confer concerning this very important work. I should like to see a committee of seven appointed by each body, with Bishop Galloway as chairman, with instructions to consider this question of the correlation of our schools and report to the Conference sessions immediately following. I should like to see upon the commission Drs. Murrah, Clifton, Cooper, and other college presidents. And if they should see fit, they might invite the trustees of our several colleges to sit in consultation with them. It seems to me that such a meeting would result in the accomplishment of much good, even if no complete plan of correlation could be agreed upon. At any rate, it surely could not do any harm. I should like to hear from some of the brethren on this subject.

I suppose it is hardly necessary to add that I have not made this suggestion in the interest of any particular school. I am friendly alike to all of them, and stand ready to do what I can to promote the prosperity of each. I have never struck a blow, or spoken a word against any Methodist institution. Whatever may be my individual views, I shall always be ready to subordinate them to the wishes of our Boards of Education. I despise all artifice and cunning, and consider nothing more contemptible than to try to achieve a selfish or sinister end under the guise of a pretended devotion to some noble cause. The only purpose I have in view is to promote the general prosperity of our connectional Methodism in Mississippi. In my humble judgment, the hour has now fully come when we need to put aside all local differences and jealousies, and march shoulder to shoulder along the pathway blocked out by our wise and far-seeing General Board of Education.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Our District Conference Secretaries are doing fine work. Mrs. Riggs, of Baton Rouge District, is acting in the capacity of both Moses and Aaron, lecturing to large crowds on different occasions and organizing new auxiliaries in old places. The new Press Superintendent has received revised lists from all save one. That one knows who she is. Mrs. Gillman, of Arcadia District is planning a district conference at Gibsland Oct. 3, 4 and 5. Everybody is invited to come and bring all the children."

Our financial condition is better than ever before, but not so good that it cannot be improved upon.

Mrs. F. M. Williams, of Mer Rouge, is acting as secretary of Monroe District, on account of Mrs. Carr's feeble health. Correspondence should be addressed to her.

More changes to report. Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, secretary of New Orleans District, now resides at 7926 Elm street, New Orleans. Please address her there. Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, State Correspondent, has changed to 2262 Carondelet street. These changes are important and should be noted by our women.

Mrs. Kennedy returned to her home, in Lafayette on Sept. 3rd, after spending several weeks in New York with her daughter, Mrs. Olliphant, who was called upon to furnish a precious lamb to the heavenly fold. The only comfort for those with empty arms folded across aching hearts comes through hearing the same sweet voice saying: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." When we see Him face to face we shall dwell forevermore with those we love so dear. MRS. ALICE CARY MCKINNEY.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Centenary opened on Sept. 12 with an enrollment three times as large as last year. Students are coming in gradually and our present enrollment is as large as during the entire session last year. We have a thoroughly competent faculty, and everything is moving off smoothly.

Prof. Melville Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., is in charge of mathematics and modern languages. Prof. Smith is a record-breaker at Vanderbilt University, having made the highest all-round average four-year's mark at that university in twenty-seven years. Prof. W. F. Monteriet, of Rock Hill, S. C., is an experienced educator, having attended several leading universities in the United States. Prof. Eugene Miller, son of the undersigned, occupies the chair of ancient languages. He is an A. B. graduate of Centenary, and has taken one year in post-graduate work at Vanderbilt. As Centenary is co-educational, we have secured the services of Miss Eva Munson as assistant. Miss Munson is an A. B. graduate of Centenary and was valedictorian of her class.

Now brethren of the Louisiana Conference and lay brethren of Louisiana, my appeal is to you. We want students and money. I am in the field for both. I am ready to go anywhere and everywhere, whenever and wherever I can, in the interest of Christian education and the maintenance of Centenary College. Will you help me? Let every preacher send us one, two or three boys from his charge. Let every friend of Centenary in Louisiana who has means and to spare send us a check. Our friends are numerous, and we get many kind expressions, for which we are very grateful. Please indulge me in a brief statement of conditions at Centenary. The new Board of Trustees of Centenary met in New Orleans, organized and requested me to provide a faculty, organize same and open up the institution. You see at once that this was an arduous task under existing circumstances, but it has been accomplished. We have a number of applications from worthy young men who want help. Some of our ministerial students are doing manual labor at Centenary to secure an education in order to preach the Gospel of Christ. There are at least ten Methodists in Louisiana who could remit us $100 each to assist us at Centenary. There are at least one hundred Methodists who could remit $10 each and never feel the loss. Any amounts sent us will be applied to paying tuition of young men, and by this means we shall be able to pay our faculty full and adequate salaries, and contributors will assist worthy young men in securing a Christian education. Brethren, the Lord will provide for Centenary College. Let him provide through you.

Respectfully, C. O. MILLER,
President Centenary College.

NOTES FROM JACKSON, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: A few items of news have come my way and I thought you might be in a receptive mood. Of course the waste basket is at hand for easy relief when you have enough or the kind is not agreeable.

Dr. W. H. LaPrade is back from a visit to his preacher-son in Georgia. He is fresh and fine and hard at his work.

Rev. O. S. Bradley assisted his brother, Rev. T. M. Bradley, in the meeting at Rankin Street Church, Jackson, and did some good preaching. Results were meagre, but neither preacher nor pastor were to blame.

Bryan is to deliver a political address here Saturday, and, as he never travels on Sunday, will remain over and give us his lecture on "The Prince of Peace" Sunday afternoon.

A jubilant card from Dr. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., states that already 170 boarders, besides teachers, have engaged rooms, and there are 20 or 30 more, for whom there is no room. This is as it should be, except the lack of room. Whitworth merits the highest confidence of Mississippi Methodists, and Dr. Cooper deserves the success he has achieved!

Sam Jones is to begin his meeting here Oct 15.

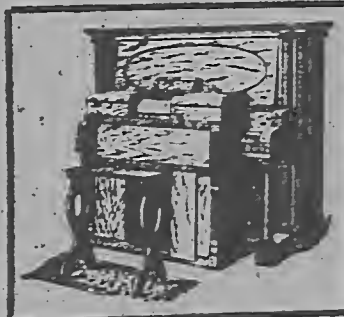
THE INSPIRED HISTORY OF THE BIBLE.

The history of the Bible is not of individuals, nor of nations. As such it is incomplete. It often begins after the maturity has been attained, and ends before its conclusion is reached. So that to call it history, as we understand the meaning of the word, is only perplexing.



It is a history of God's dealing with sin and righteousness in the individual and in the nation. And the same is true of the poetry of the Bible. It deals in neither fancy nor theology; it simply records facts, and the effects they should produce upon the thought and the life of man.

As such, therefore, the history and the poetry of the Bible are as much inspired, and are as valuable to man as in any other part of the Book. For this reason our Fifth Article of Religion concludes as follows: "In the name of the Holy Scriptures we do understand those canonical books of the Old and New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church," and then names them.

And yet some of the wise men of the day are boasting that man could write better history and better poetry than is found in the Bible. Of what? Of individuals and nations? We admit it, because it was never intended to cover such a field. But if by their boasted cleverness they mean the history of God's dealing with sin and righteousness in the individual and the nation, we deny it, and challenge the attempt.

Is it not time to quit this foolish talking about what the Bible does not teach, and give to the people what it does teach, that they may be saved from sin and hell? Let the man who thinks of committing sin against God or man go to the history of the Bible and learn how God dealt with those who did the same thing in the long ago.

RESTATEMENT OF METHODIST DOCTRINE.

THE IMPORTANCE OF FULL DISCUSSION.

In a previous article the question of restatement was shown to be complex enough to enlist for and against it the strongest minds in the Church, and to lead even the College of Bishops to adopt methods unusual and all but unprecedented during and after the passage of the resolutions of the General Conference creating a commission for the purpose of enlisting world-wide Methodism in an effort in the direction of restatement.

A careful examination into all the connections and bearings of the measure and a cautious computation of its possibilities will enable the Church to act wisely when the time for action comes, and nothing else will. Only full and free discussion of the question by those who favor or oppose it will set before the Church at large the light that will enable it to such intelligent action.

On these grounds discussion is desirable; more than that, it is necessary.

Against the discussion of the question, it might be argued that the legislative body of our Church has acted; that the matter is in the hands of a commission; that the General Conference and the commission alone have access to the question until the matter at last comes back to the Church for ratification or rejection. Furthermore, it might be claimed that, when the matter does come back to the Church for ratification, it will not be the question of restatement at all, for to that the Church is committed by the action of its General Conference, but the question will then be whether or not the Church is willing to accept the particular form of restatement offered it at that time.

This sounds well enough, but this is not the true state of affairs. The Church has not acted through its legislative body, but a plurality of that body has acted for the Church, without asking the sentiment of the Church, and in that action this plurality could express no more than its personal opinion, except in instances extremely rare, for the simple reason that but a very small number of the delegates knew what the sentiment of any part of the Church was, and these knew the wish of only a small part.

In making the statement above no quibble is indulged. It is, of course, a principle of parliamentary procedure in all representative legislative bodies that the action of the majority is the action of the body. But the minority has still some rights. Among them it has the right to disclaim responsibility for what it considers an action inimical to the best interests of the corporate body represented. This disclaimer it may enter as a protest against the action of the majority, and, when such disclaimer is entered the minority cannot be held responsible for the action of the majority, nor can the action of the majority be considered as expressing the sentiment of the legislating body. Such a protest the minority did enter into, setting it forth as a disclaimer of responsibility for the act of the majority. The exact state of affairs, therefore, is that a majority of the members of the General Conference personally favor the proposed restatement, and have so expressed themselves by their votes, and in this action the minority disclaim a part, and have so expressed themselves in a protest.

The effect of the action of the majority on the Church at large, and on the next General Conference, has not been discussed, so far as I have seen. The action is not binding on the Church. The next General Conference may rescind the action of the majority of the last one. It is not maintained that it would be wise to do this. On the other hand, it is not contended that it would be prudent not to. The question is not on the merits of the issue, but of the right, the necessity of discussion in the Church prints at this time. The past General Conference acted without consulting the Church. The next General Conference may or may not represent the sentiment of the Church on this important question, but if it is to represent the Church—an intelligent opinion of the Church—the Church must be fully informed of the arguments on both sides of the question.

The resolutions provide that other Methodist bodies are to be asked to have a part in the work of restatement. Are we prepared to take such a step on ground so infirm as that on which the action of the majority is resting? Do we not owe it to these bodies to have an expression from the Church at large that they may know that the Southern Church will not disclaim the act of its delegates after the matter has been taken up by them?

The Church itself has rights which make full discussion of the movement imperative. It is unfortunate that the Church has only ex post facto discussion left to it; but the very fact that it was denied all knowledge of the contemplated action makes ex post facto discussion its very sacred privilege. The Methodist law, written and unwritten, makes the General Conference representative. It is not to make, but to express the sentiment of the Church. A college of cardinals may legislate to the Church, but Methodist General Conferences should legislate for the Church. If the time comes when Methodism surrenders this principle she will have sunk into an ecclesiasticism and sacerdotalism from which no reformation can rescue her.

The question itself is one that derives all its use from discussion that brings its meaning clearly to the heart and mind of the individual. If the action be the action of a few men appointed by a few more at a meeting of a General Conference, in which action the Church acquiesces because it has not enough interest to claim the part in it to which it has a right, then the action will amount to just that and no more. Far from being an expression of world-wide Methodism, it will be an expression of a few Methodists.

The question is, furthermore, one that is fraught with great danger. For, if the action be not the action of the Church in every matter, however trifling, where the expression of the Church's faith is concerned, one of two evils must result. Either the Church will look upon its expressions of faith as matters of indifference, which may be left to a few men to be altered, rearranged, and trimmed to suit the passing needs of changing eras, or the Church will give over the making of its faith to a few, surrendering its right of private judgment. The one extreme is skepticism, the other is fanatical sacerdotalism. It is useless to reply that the action of the majority contemplates no change in the articles, nor any revision. Admitting this without protest, in the face of all the statements apparently to the contrary made by the friends of the resolutions on the floor of the General Conference, the fact remains that, unless the Church express itself, the principle has been introduced into our Church that the faith of the Church may be touched without consulting the Church. From this it is but a short step to revision on the same principle.

A BOOKLET ON MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from a trip into Tennessee. In the Memphis Conference I found a booklet by Rev. W. J. Mecoy on missions which is said by preachers up there to be very helpful in stimulating missionary spirit and liberality. It would be well for our preachers to try it. It sells for ten cents, but preachers can buy it at four and one-half cents, if cash accompany the order.

A man can put it in his pocket and read it while waiting for a delayed train or a late meal. Brother Mecoy proposes to give the net proceeds to the cause of missions. While so many of our people are unwilling to read on the subject of missions, this short treatise may attract their attention.

It may be of interest to our people to know that the McFerren Training School, in charge of Prof. J. C. Roberts, formerly professer in Centenary and Mansfield Colleges, had a very encouraging opening last Wednesday.

The Home Circle.

WHICH WAY DO YOU TAKE?

There are ways and ways of being sympathetic. There is one where a person who stands close to his neighbor in need does so merely for the sake of being thought sympathetic. But such are not the truest comforters. It is he who not only speaks consolingly, but who "follows up the word with the deed," that is the true friend in need.

Mabel was standing on a street corner crying as though her heart would break, when Martha came trundling her hoop down the sidewalk.

"What's the matter?" asked Martha, stopping short.

"I'se lost my nickel down there!" was the sobbing reply as the speaker pointed to the gutter.

"That's too bad! Look very hard for it and maybe you'll find it," Martha said, as she gave her hoop a touch with the short stick she held in her hand, and followed it as it rolled away. The thought did not seem to come to her that she might have spared a few minutes from her play to aid in searching for the missing coin.

A little later, as Mabel was adopting Martha's advise to "look very hard," Nanette came briskly along from the opposite direction, and, seeing the small figure in the gutter, exclaimed: "Why, Mabel Marsh! What are you doing there?"

"I'se lost my nickel, and I can't find it at all!" was the tearful reply.

Now Nanette was on her way to spend the afternoon with a friend who had begged her to come early, and she was hurrying her best to make up for time already lost, when she discovered Mabel in trouble. The sight of the latter's distress aroused but one desire in Nanette's loving heart, and that was to offer practical sympathy to the little girl. And so, though she said almost the same words that Martha had spoken a short time before, she backed them up by stepping down into the gutter, where she diligently sought for the coin until she found it.

"You're just as kind as can be!" Mabel exclaimed, gratefully, when the money was once more safely in her pocket.

Nanette laughed merrily as she hurried away. "That wasn't much to do!" she declared.

But it was just the thing that was needed.—The Girl's Companion.

BOOK ON HAPPY WOMEN.

Some day, when I have time, I am going to write a book about happy women. It will not be a large book, the material is too scarce. But it will be very interesting. So much has been written, you know, about great, famous, talented and good women; but no one has ever thought it worth while to chronicle the story of the happy woman. And yet—now that I come to think of it, I only know two such women at this time. One is feeble-minded—the gentlest, most placid and most buoyant creature you can imagine, for whom life has no sorrows; the other is living the selfless life of the true and consecrated mother. I used to know one other happy woman some years ago; but she is dead. She loved a certain kind of work—it was of a very high order. And the sternest, unloveliest duty held her back from it 25 years. Then one day the barriers were rolled aside, happiness came into her life like a flood; and she died. Perhaps, after all, it was not happiness she knew, but rapture. But I am sure there are more happy women in the world than it 'wots of; and when I write my book I shall seek them out. I have an idea that people will be surprised to know them. They will not want to talk of themselves, but what strange things have the power to narrate.

And now tell me, if you were going to make this search, where would you make it?

Among the season's debutantes, those fair young creatures in whose pathway there is not a thorn?

Among the famous, whose value to the world is recognized, whose daily need is homage?

Among those who have never known the smallest physical want?

Among those who flatter themselves that they have a "mission"?

Among the very rich?

Among the very poor?

Well, you may be right. But I think that the happy woman of whom I am to write will be found among workers who love their work and do it for its own sake.

One may be found at the loom, another, perhaps, with the pen in her hand, and both consecrated to their tasks as much as though the sacred oil has touched their foreheads.—Exchange.

GIVE LIMPY A CHANCE.

"Here, boy, let me have a paper?"

"Can't."

"Why not? I heard you crying them loud enough to be heard at the city hall."

"Yes, but that was down t'other block, ye know, where I hollered."

"What does that matter? Come, now, no fooling. I'm in a hurry."

"Couldn't sell you paper on this here block, mister, 'cause it b'longs to Limpy. He's just at the furdest end now. You'll meet him."

"And who is Limpy? And why does he have this block?"

"'Cos us other kids agreed to let him have it. Ye see, it's a good run, 'count of the offices all along, and the poor chap is that lame he can't git around lively like the rest of us, so we agreed that the first one caught sellin' on his beat should be thrashed. See?"

"Yes, I see. You have a sort of brotherhood among yourselves?"

"Well, we're goin' to look out for a little cove that's lame, anyhow."

"There comes Limpy now. He's a fortunate boy to have such friends."

The gentleman bought two papers of him, and went on his way down-town, wondering how many men in business would refuse to sell their wares in order to give a weak, halting brother a chance in the field.—The Watchman.

WILLIE'S GOLD MINE.

"If I were rich I'd never go to school another day, there!" exclaimed Willie, as he threw his books and strap upon the sofa in the cosy sitting-room. "What's the use bothering away all one's time in school, anyway!"

"Well, Willie," inquired grandma, cheerily, from her pleasant corner, "how would you like to own a gold mine—your very own?"

"A gold mine! My! I'd like it awfully, grandma, but," continued Willie, slowly, "I don't s'pose I'll ever own one."

"I see no reason why you can't, if you really want one," replied grandma, smiling.

"How? Do tell me quick!" cried Willie, eagerly. "I guess Jim West won't feel so big if I get a gold mine," and Willie whistled gayly at the thought.

After a moment's silence, Willie continued, thoughtfully, "I can't buy a gold mine, for I've only two dollars in my bank, and a mine will cost heaps!"

"Sit down a minute while I explain," and as she spoke grandma fondly drew her pet to her side. "You can't buy this gold mine with money; and no one can give it to you; you must work for it, and work hard, too, Willie."

"Oh, grandma, I'll do anything, sure! See how big and tall I am!" and Willie actually grew six inches taller at once by standing on his tip-toes.

"You can't get your gold mine in a hurry, either," went on grandma. "You must get it little by little. It isn't like some gold mines that are full of wealth at the beginning—you must fill this mine yourself."

"Will it take long to fill it, grandma?"

"Yes, a number of years. Each day you can add some valuable bit to it, and by and by, lo! you will have an inexhaustible treasure. No one can steal your mine from you, Willie, and you can never dig it dry."

"My!" exclaimed Willie, with sparkling eyes. "When can I begin to get my gold mine, grandma?"

"At any time! You have already begun to fill your treasure house, and by going to"—

"I know, grandma," interrupted Willie, "it is an education that you mean; that's the gold mine."

"And isn't that a fine one, Willie?"

"Y-e-s, and I'm going to begin now to fill it up. Hurrah for grandma and the gold mine!"

"And the school, too," added grandma.

"Why, of course!" laughed Willie.—Southern Presbyterian.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1906.

It is easy enough for us to see the greatness of God's mercy. It is not easy to see how God could have mercy at all. Except in the light of the atonement, it would be impossible.

The moral of the old proverb, "Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones," is, if you do wrong yourself, be quiet about the wrong-doings of others. Otherwise you are justly chargeable with inconsistency.

If a man has both gifts and grace he need not put himself to any trouble to exhibit them. His friends will discover them and appreciate them at their true value. None but an egotist ever feels that he is undervalued.

* * *

As between man and man, a gift may pacify anger, and restore peace, but sin against God is not of such a nature as to be atoned for and wiped out by gifts. No matter how numerous or costly the gifts, God's eyes cannot be blinded. Men must repent and believe, and trust in God.

Whenever we feel called upon to pass judgment on the conduct of another we should not only take into consideration the action to be judged, but the motive that prompted it. This rule observed would often save men from hasty and uncharitable judgment.

Good works are always pleasing to God. Men can never do too much—the more the better. The mistake too many make is relying on their good deeds as "the ground of justification," rather than as "the measure of reward." The mistake is fatal. Read Matthew vii, 22-23.

Thousands of sons and daughters from this Christian land will rise up in the judgment and say, "I never heard my father pray." The plea will not be accepted as an excuse for a life of sin, but it will be a serious accusation for the father to face before God. And what excuse can the father give for his negligence?

* * *

The mercy of God in Christ Jesus calls for the gratitude and active service of every soul to whom the Gospel comes—such gratitude as will lead to the lavishing of the whole heart's affection on God, and employment of every ransomed power in his work. Those to whom gratitude appeals in vain will not be persuaded, though one should rise from the dead.

INGRATITUDE.

Ingratitude is one of the basest crimes of which a human heart can be guilty. One who has received favors at the hands of another is not only expected to be thankful, but in some way to give expression to the feeling. To receive favors as a matter of course—never pretending to make any sort of acknowledgement—is to incur the contempt of all right-thinking people. But multitudes are ungrateful. Hundreds, rescued from starvation by the hand of charity, instead of being thankful and taking encouragement, have grumbled because they did not receive more, or, like dogs and greedy swine, turn angrily upon their benefactors and abuse them for lack of liberality. Children who had the best of care when young and helpless, and were well started in life, not infrequently manifest the lack of gratitude when their parents grow old and feeble, and allow them to suffer, sometimes in ways worse than hunger. Such children are universally scorned.

But what is the lack of gratitude towards human benefactors and parents to be compared to the ingratitude of men towards God? He is their Heavenly Father, giving them their daily comforts—food and raiment and shelter, and everything necessary to happiness in life. Never a word of thanks escapes their lips. No act of any kind is performed to show that they recognize their obligations. He has given his only Son to die for them, and sent his Spirit to help them and guide them in the way of truth, but they count the blood of Christ an unholy thing, and say to the Spirit, Go thy way, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee. Here ingratitude reaches the lowest depth.

Human law devises no penalty for ingratitude. Only divine law takes cognizance of the sin, and punishes it as it deserves. "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden underfoot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord."

All such as are ungrateful to God "shall have judgment without mercy."

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.

The eyes of one of our brethren have recently been opened to the extent and depth of human depravity. Certainly he has all along been orthodox on the question, so far as belief in the Articles of Religion are concerned, but it seems he had the idea that the corruption, inherent and acquired, belonged mainly to men. He now confesses that women—some women—are capable of going as "far from original righteousness" as men are. Two women, in one of our cities, under the auspices of some sporting fraternity, engaged in a regular "prize fight" for the stakes, and a good proportion of the gate receipts.

To the mind of our brother, this was to descend almost to the very depth of human depravity. So it was. But why should he or anyone else be surprised that women engaged in prize fights. The quarreling and fighting of women are things of daily occurrence. Not only are broom-handles and cups and saucers used as weapons, but also knives and pistols. Of course, these disgraceful things are confined to women of the baser sort. But now and then respectable women are provoked and engage in pulling each other's hair.

But what of prize fighting? Well, that is respectable in sporting circles, and though not legalized under that name, it is legalized and licensed in many cities under the name of "glove contests," or "boxing." The name does not alter the thing. It is professional—followed for money's sake, just as men follow baseball for a living. And if women follow all kinds of trades, and professions, and engage in all kinds of business and callings—shop-keeping, and liquor-selling and other things—why should they not enter the prize ring, and pound each other, or gouge each other's eyes? Why not? They have just as much right to do so as their brothers have. True, if they engage in such fights, the evidence of depravity is undeniable and shocking. And it is just as deep and all-pervading as depravity in prize-fighting men.

But the fighting of the women was not so surprising to our brother as the fact that four hundred persons gathered around the rope to witness the brutal sight. He did not suppose that any number of men would tolerate such a thing, much less look on, and see the fight to a finish. That four hundred should take delight in the exhibition of shame, was beyond comprehension. And is that really surprising? Is it not altogether natural that sporting men should lose all respect for sporting women, and put them on a level, or lower, with their kind? and congregate in as large numbers to see one, as well as the other?

Nobody should be surprised that in a city of three or four hundred thousand men and women, a large proportion of whom are given to indulgence in the debasing games of the day, as many as four hundred can be brought together to see two women fight. There are some cities in our country, which, with free seats, or a small entrance fee, would furnish, not four hundred, but four thousand men to witness two women engage in a fight. There would also be a large sprinkling of women in the crowd, for many women, as well as men, like to see sights.

In the light of the facts here stated, and of facts revealed in other ways past numbering, we need not appeal to the Word of God for either proof-texts or illustrations setting forth human depravity. And, if brethren who are a little shaky on original sin will allow it, we will venture to say that "original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (as the Pelagians do vainly talk), but it is the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the off-spring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually."

As long as this is true, we may expect men and women, unrestrained by grace or law, to grow bolder and bolder in the manifestation of their evil propensities.

A WORD TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have in hand a number of excellent communications—a half dozen or more just received. We would be glad to accommodate our friends by printing their favors immediately, but it is impossible. We hope no one will grow impatient. We will do the best we can.

As a rule brethren and sisters who send us matter are very kind—allowing us to edit as we see proper, or consign to the waste basket. At long intervals we receive communications demanding insertion "just as written." We always read such documents very carefully. We have one at this time on an important subject, but contains things we do not care to print. The objectionable things were pointed out to the writer, and request made to recast. But the writer assumes to be a better judge than the Editor. There the matter rests.

PERSONAL.

"Things are moving on nicely with us" on the Baton Rouge District. So says the active Presiding Elder, Rev. R. W. Tucker.

Rev. W. L. Hightower, who has recently been placed in charge at Ocean Springs, Miss., writes us that "the work starts off fairly well." He has taken the place of Rev. H. R. Singleton, who is with a son in Texas.

We had a delightful half-hour with Dr. F. N. Parker, who was passing through the city en route to Baton Rouge where his family is visiting at present. He reports the work on Crowley District in a prosperous condition.

Rev. R. N. Meek, in his first year as presiding elder, is doing a fine work on Greenville District—popular among the people, preaching strong and edifying sermons, and we do not wonder that the district is doing well. He will carry a fine report to Conference.

Rev. A. L. Townsley has been with Rev. R. O. Weir in a meeting at Zachary. He did earnest and efficient work. Eight souls were added to the church. After closing at Zachary, he began at Slaughter, with Rev. J. G. Snellings, assisting.

Prospects for a large attendance at South Mississippi College, Hattiesburg, are good, but owing to delay in completing buildings, President Thames gives notice that the opening has been postponed from Oct. 2 to Oct. 23. On that date the institution will open without fail.

Rev. Briscoe Carter has treated the readers of the ADVOCATE as they should be treated by all presiding elders. He has written a full account of the work on the Arcadia District, under his direction. It is good matter and will be enjoyed by our readers next week.

Good revivals have been experienced throughout the Corinth District, and the preachers will be able to make unusually good financial reports when they go up to Conference. So says the Presiding Elder, Rev. W. C. Harris, who has regained his health, and is abundant in labors.

The many friends of Mrs. Watkins, who makes her home with her son, Dr. A. F. Watkins, Jackson, Miss., will regret to learn that she is quite feeble. She is in her eighty-ninth year, and the long, hot summer has doubtless been very trying to her. As cool weather comes, we trust she may regain her strength.

Rev. W. H. Huntley, now entering the last round of a quadrennium of service on the Vicksburg District, in a personal note to the editor, says: "We are winding up the busiest series of revival summer meetings since I came into the district. Prospects are pleasing for a satisfactory finish of the year."

Rev. C. C. Weir, Agent of the Louisiana Conference Orphanage, is energetically at work in the interest of the institution. He gives our readers this week a nice notice of the good purposes of some benevolent and kind-hearted business men, in the hope of stimulating others to like good deeds. We hope it will.

In a note to the ADVOCATE, Dr. A. B. Jones, President of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, Jackson, Tenn., says: "The school has opened better than ever before in its history. Notwithstanding I have been unable, on account of a spell of fever during the summer, to electioneer at all, I have the best school I have ever had. We have over 200 students, and a number are yet to come."

Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., on the eve of beginning a series of meetings, has addressed a personal letter to every family of his charge, urging them to attend, to pray for the work, and to put forth personal efforts for its success. Rev. W. G. Harbin will assist him. He confidently expects a good meeting, and promises to report at the close. Brother Ellis is happy in the work.

The following personal notes are added to a good letter from Rev. A. F. Watkins, Presiding Elder of the Jackson District: "The work of the district is moving on finely, with fair prospects of a good report this winter. Bishop Galloway is back much improved by his stay in the northwest. He visited Missouri last week for an educational speech; but is at home resting this week. He is announced to preach for Dr. LaPrade next Sunday."

Rev. C. C. Miller, President Centenary College, was a caller at the ADVOCATE office on Tuesday. Brother Miller occupied the pulpit at Felicity on Sunday, and is en route to the Talisheek camp meeting. He reports that Centenary opened on the 12th, and while the attendance is not as large as he desires, it is three times as large as last year on same date. There are as many students at Centenary now as there were during the entire session last year. Brother Miller is in fine spirits and predicts a very satisfactory and successful year. He has a fine faculty and everything is moving off nicely.

BROTHER COPELAND TRANSFERRED.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, this city, has been transferred by the Bishops to St. Paul's M. E. Church, South, at St. Louis, Mo., and expects to leave for his new charge in about ten days.

SOMETHING HANDSOME FOR WORK DAY.

The Baker-Wakefield Mills, Plattenville, La., have volunteered to observe Work Day, Sept. 20, and to give the earnings on that day to the Orphanage.

Everybody help on Work Day! Little boys and girls, men and women, let us have a great day by everybody helping some to make this a great day for the Orphanage. Carry your earnings to the Sunday school superintendent Sunday, 30th, and he will forward to me. Fraternally,

C. C. WEIR.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Our church at Silver City, Miss., in the Jackson District, will be dedicated by the presiding elder, Rev. A. F. Watkins, D. D., Oct. 7, (the first Sunday) at 11 o'clock. All former pastors and friends of the enterprise are cordially invited to be present.

Dear Brethren of the Mississippi Conference: When you send me your Bible money, if you remit by check on your local bank for ten dollars or fraction thereof, please send ten cents additional; if the amount is more than ten dollars, fifteen cents additional will be required for exchange. Please take notice and be governed accordingly, otherwise there will be a discrepancy in the statistical report and my receipt from the Bible House.

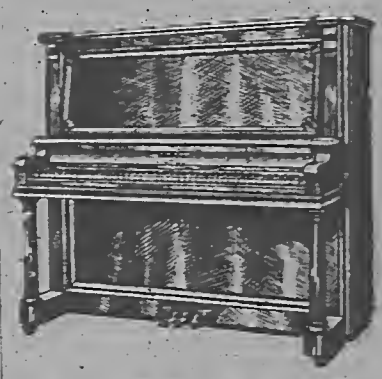
THE LEWIS FAMILY No. 2.

I have read J. M. Alford's account of one of the Lewis families with much interest. My family will come up second best, so far. I can count nineteen immediate relatives that have preached. My father, Rev. Wiley Lewis, was a prominent preacher for fifty-five years. Rev. S. L. Dobbs, of Alabama belongs to our family.



It was my good fortune to be present at the great Lewis Congress in St. Louis, in 1904. There were Lewises there from Lake Erie to the Rio Grande, and from the sunny States of the Atlantic to the Golden Gate in the far west.

Two characteristics of the great Lewis family were brought out. First, a large per cent. of the family are preachers. Second, the absence of divorces. To marry early and preach, is Lewis like.

Brother Alford, you can outcount us now, but give us a little more time, and we will count again.

GRAND CHENIER, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I feel it is my duty to write a short article for the Advocate, stating some things about our work down here.

On the 4th of September our Quarterly Conference convened at Oak Grove Church, though there were not very many present. Our beloved presiding elder was with us, and preached as though there was a large congregation present, which he is capable of doing at any time.

The reports from the circuit were not as good as we should have liked for them to have been. But one thing we regret very much is, our presiding elder could not stay with us longer, as it is an inspiration to any people to have such a man of God with them, and we hope he will be able to stay with us at least two days at our fourth Quarterly Conference.

I am sorry to state that the spiritual condition of the charge is not as good as it should be, though there are a few among our number as spiritual as I have seen anywhere. We are looking forward to the near future, when we can unite our feeble efforts in protracted meetings all over the circuit. As yet we have not held any meetings. We hope when we complete our round of protracted meetings to report a revival in the church, as there has not been any for some years past. Our membership is growing small; many have moved out of the bounds of our work. There are two enemies to fight, one of the body, another of the soul—the mosquitoes and the devil. We are praying that we may endure one (the mosquito) until his time has come to go; and that we may overcome the other (the devil), as he is ever present with his mighty forces—at work twenty-four hours in a day. We solicit a special interest in the prayers of all of the praying people that we may endure and overcome.

Dear Doctor, I was specially interested in the issues of the Advocate of Aug. 30 and Sept. 6—the latter because it was an educational one, and that is what we need, genuine "Christian education." The former, because it contained several good articles that should have been appreciated by all Methodists. The article on "Preacher's Allowance," by Brother A. C. Rider, was one that should be read and considered by all church officials and members; because, according to his average estimate, the clergyman's monthly salary is $16.35.

Brethren, please answer my interrogation: Who of you is willing to work for a salary of $20 per month, and out of that amount pay board or keep up a home and support a family, feed a horse, and pay all other expenses necessary for a man to travel and live on?

May God, by his ever-present Spirit, inspire our people throughout the entire connection to their duty concerning the temporal affairs of the church, as well as the spiritual.

Doctor, we would be more than glad to have you with us in our meeting at Grand Chenier Church, embracing the fifth Sunday in this month. Pray for us. PASTOR.

CORINTH CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As nothing has appeared from us in some time, I will give a few notes. We are serving the Corinth Circuit our second year, and we are moving on well. We have just closed a great meeting at one of our appointments, three miles from Corinth. Had thirty-four conversions and thirty-four additions to our church, and a revival in the church and community that was great. People promised to quit dancing and allowing it in their homes. This means much, as it has been one of our great hindrances.

The preaching was done by Brother Carlisle, of Houlka, with the exception of one sermon, which was preached by Rev. I. H. Felts, of Corinth Station. Brother Carlisle is too well known as a preacher and worker to need any praise. His preaching is practical and finds its way to the heart. He will live long in the hearts of my people.

The sermon preached by Brother Felts was strong, and made a great impression. He is a man that can come with a revival at any time and take the work in hand at once.

We are making progress along all lines, and expect to make the best report in the history of the charge. We ask the prayers of all.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Rev. G. D. Anders held two good meetings for me. One was held in April, the other in June. His preaching was of the highest type, and he just captivated my people. We observed Children's Day here, and rendered a most beautiful and impressive programme. I was assisted at Dodson in my meeting by Rev. E. C. Cargill, of Haynesville. He did good work and excellent preaching. I was alone in my meeting at Wyatt, and we had a good meeting. I have assisted Rev. Tatum Wafer in two meetings, one at New Prospect, and the other at Oak Ridge, and both meetings were fine and much good was accomplished.

I held a meeting at Old Castor Church, embracing the fourth Sunday in August. We had a great meeting, many souls being converted and sixteen joining the church, and others to follow. The meeting only continued five days, other engagements calling us away. Just ten years before, in connection with Rev. J. D. Harper, who was then presiding elder, I held a meeting. The meeting then was one of great power and influence.

We held our Third Quarterly Conference at Dodson on the 8th and 9th of this month, with Rev. C. B. Carter, P. E., in the chair, and he preached three very fine sermons, to the delight and benefit of all. We are always glad to have him with us. I have painted our church here recently, and will soon have a nice wire fence around it. Our membership is small, but my people are willing and determined to work. Pray for me and mine. God bless the Advocate and its readers. Yours to serve, S. P. HOWARD.

HOULKA CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I have never given you a note from Houlka, I will do so now. We have made considerable advance in the last year and a half. When I was read out for Houlka and Wesley, at Kosciusko, and went to my charge, I found nothing but a disorganized and somewhat dissatisfied people, and we have learned something of the life of an itinerant Methodist minister, and in some degree I have tried to enter into sympathy with the early, or pioneer preachers of our church, for we had no home to go to, and could not rent a house for a time; but one of our stewards, like a big-hearted Methodist steward, opened his home, and we boarded with him for two months. God bless Bro. Alexander! After boarding for two months, we succeeded in renting a very nice house, and moved in. The first night we had no bedsteads, so we just spread the bed on the floor and slept a good night's sleep. There was no table, but we ate canned goods off a goods box, giving thanks to God, and we felt that we were learning what it meant to be an itinerant. God bless the men that give up all for His cause. Faithfulness to God means victory.

Our good people soon made us comfortable in our rented house. While we were comfortable, we were not satisfied. So the next thing was to build a home for the preacher. Of course, we met the fellow that is usually on the scene. He said, "You can't do it." But (with the aid of a few faithful men) we have done it. We are able to do a great many things if we will. We are now comfortably domiciled in our new parsonage at New Houlka. We have a splendid piece of property, and the good ladies have just finished furnishing it with heavy furniture.

We had a very successful year last, and our prospects are good for a better one this Conference year. We have on foot a move to build a church at Van Vleet, to be worth about sixteen hundred dollars when complete. We are finishing another church now.

God has wonderfully blessed our feeble efforts on this charge. We have just closed a splendid meeting at Wesley Chapel. Notwithstanding the rain and mud, our people attended well and the Lord blessed them for their faithfulness, as he always does. The visible results were five conversions and eight additions, and the church was greatly benefited.

Rev. W. G. Burks, of Ripley, Miss., was with us, and did all the preaching, which was able and well done. Brother Burks is a good thinker, and preached to the satisfaction of my people.

We are expecting good revivals all round, and we feel sure of a good report at the Annual Conference. If this does not find its way to the waste basket, I may tell you something of our new town and more about our work.

God bless the Advocate. Long live the Editor. Yours for the work.

W. C. CARLISLE.

WATER VALLEY CIRCUIT.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just closed out our last revival meeting on our charge (Water Valley Circuit, North Mississippi Conference). We have held a meeting at each one of our churches, six in number. God has blessed our labors wonderfully. One hundred and fifty (150) professions, seventy-five accessions to our church with more to follow. We give God all the glory.

W. J. WOOD, P. C.

Tula, Miss.

PHILADELPHIA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will send in report of summer work. I have just closed my last protracted meeting.

My first meeting was at Sandtown on the first Sunday in August. Rev. T. J. O'Neil, of Philadelphia Circuit, assisted me in the meeting, and doing all the preaching in that earnest, consecrated, soul-winning way that is so characteristic with him. There were thirty conversions and two accessions to the church, several infants baptized and the church spiritually built up.

My second meeting in August was at Mt. Pisgah. Our beloved Presiding Elder, Rev. J. M. Morse, assisted me in this meeting. The meeting was held in connection with the Third Quarterly Conference. Brother Morse did a good work for my church, and for our God. His preaching had the old-time trumpet sound and was productive of great good. This is Brother Morse's last year on the district and oh! how we hate to give him up.

Our third meeting was at Cook's Chapel, the third Sunday in August. We were assisted in this meeting by Rev. W. W. Morse, of Forest. Brother Morse was not physically able to work, but nevertheless he did a great work for the meeting. He preached soul-stirring sermons and exhorted the people to flee the wrath of an angry God and pointed them to a haven of rest if they would love God and obey his commands. We hope to have Brother Morse with us again.

Our fourth meeting was at North Bend. We were assisted in this meeting by the boy-preacher of our district—Rev. J. M. Bennett. Brother Bennett, though young in years and young in the ministry, is a power in the church. When he goes into a meeting he takes up the sword of God, and with God as commander he fearlessly attacks sin and Satan and will not give over, but continues on and on, until he gains the victory. We had a glorious meeting, Brother Bennett doing all the preaching. Sinners were convicted, penitents converted and the church greatly built up. There were seventeen accessions to the church by faith.

We began our fifth and last protracted meeting for the Neshoba Circuit at Coy, the first Sunday in September. Rev. J. M. Bennett assisted us in this meeting also, doing all the preaching. Here, as at North Bend, with God as our leader, we gained another victory for the Master. There were a number of conversions and sixteen accessions to the church and the church greatly built up. All glory be to God for the great blessings we have received this year, and may God greatly bless the dear preachers who have labored so earnestly for and with us in these series of meetings. We expect to have all collections for our whole circuit paid in full by Conference. The work is in as good condition financially and spiritually as it has been in several years. We rejoice over the success of our Lord's cause in these parts and we give him all the praise. Pray for us. Yours in the great cause,

J. C. LONG.

LESSON FOR OCT. 7, 1906.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

(Mark xii, 28-34).

Golden Text: "Thou Shalt Love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart."—Mark xii. 30.

Our study of the events during the last week of the Lord's earthly life being interrupted by a review and by a temperance lesson; we turn again and find the Master in the temple in controversy with the scribes and Pharisees. In our great love for our Lord our sympathies are aroused as we see him surrounded by those who bitterly hate him, and who never abate one whit in their efforts to destroy him. There were some among them that were not entirely given to Satan. Some who, as the Master said, were not far from the kingdom of God. He it was that asked Jesus which was the greatest commandment of all. He had seen how Jesus had discomfited the scribes and Pharisees on a political question and the Sadducees on a question of doctrine. Jesus' words, in answer as to the greatest commandment, was an almost verbatim repetition of the instruction of Moses to the children of Israel in the wilderness. "Hear, O Israel!" their attention was solemnly invoked to the great truth on which all other truths are built: "The Lord our God is one Lord," and as they needed strong and strict measures in keeping them under control, God revealed himself to them as inspiring fear, awe and reverence; but he has revealed himself to us by his Son, who has taught us that his Father is our Father, and that he is love. The Israelites had been given the ten commandments, graven on tables of stone. Their besetting sin was idolatry. After the wonderful deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the wonderful guidance by day of the pillar of cloud and by night the pillar of fire, and even while Moses was on the mount communing with God, they made for themselves the golden calf and worshipped it. All through succeeding ages they went away from God and worshipped the gods of the nations around them. Such a stiff-necked people needed to have repeated to them over and over "The Lord our God is one Lord." They were to teach it to their children at home, as they went in and out, and as they sat down and as they rose up, so as the offense was great, this greatest of all the commandments was to be given them "line upon line, and precept upon precept."

"And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart." "My Son give Me Thine heart," writes Solomon, pleading for what is possession in right by creation. We are the work of his hand, and "In him we live and move and have our being." Our love for him should be supreme, and when our heart produces an undivided love for God our Father, all other loves that are good and commendable are but the fruits of the love of God that dwells within us. "If a man love God, the same is known of him." The attitude of our hearts toward God need not be proclaimed. In sweet communion with our Father, we can only say, as said Peter on that morning by the seaside, "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee."

"And with all my soul." "God seeketh such to worship him as worship him in spirit and in truth." We must love God in the spirit, and the fruit of that love will make us to "Hunger and thirst after righteousness." We will be longing to grow in grace. We will be striving to be spiritual to enable us to discern spiritual things. To love with all the soul is to love the Holy Ghost, the comforter and monitor that dwells within us. To love with the soul is to take pleasure and enjoyment in all the means of grace provided for us in God's word, in prayer and in public worship; but the sweetest pleasure of all is in that sweetly solemn hour, at the close of the day, when we gather the loved ones of our home in humble grateful prayer; then we love him with all our soul.

"And with all our mind." What glorious possibilities has God given to mental achievement! This attribute of man places him above all creation and "a little lower than the angels." In loving with all our mind we can leave the world, and soaring through illimitable space, on the wings of faith, behold the glory of God on the earth and in the heavens above. When we love God with all our mind, we will use its powers for his glory, for his cause and kingdom. We will not waste any mental energy that could otherwise glorify God or benefit his creatures. We will love men who have used their mind in making clearer to us the manner in which the intellect can be consecrated to God.

"And with all thy strength." Why does God bless us with health and strength unless it is to better enable us to be of use to him? As we go through the mills and machine shops, now and then we will see a great, strong blacksmith or mechanic, and hear him as he gently tells you of the sweet love of Christ. Or along the dusty country road we stop and wait for the sun-burned farmer as he drops his hoe and comes to the fence for a few words concerning the kingdom, with one who is like-minded; such as these make us rejoice that love and strength are gifts of God and we can have both, and consecrate them to his service. As to love of God and strength, we have examples to follow in the study of the pioneer days of Methodism, in such men as Asbury and others who even exhausted their strength for service.

So then let us sum this great commandment up by asking the Father that we may receive the answer to Jesus' prayer in John xviii, 26: "That the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them."

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Obedience is most difficult in this commandment, for selfishness predominates all. But if the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, we can, by his grace, love our neighbor as we love ourselves. The most perfect explanation as to who is our neighbor and our duty to him is given by our Lord in the parable of the Good Samaritan. The scribe commented on the observance of these two commandments as being more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices. In reply, Jesus' words should have made the heart of the scribe bound with joy: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." Has the study of God's word effected an entrance into the kingdom for us? If not, how far from the kingdom of God are we? "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves," and make diligent use of God's word, "for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness, that we may be perfect, thoroughly furnished for all good works."

WOLL MARKET, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Perhaps some of those who are interested in the Wolf River Mission would like to know how we are getting along spiritually and financially.

This is comparatively new territory, embracing a scope of country about forty miles square in extent, and until about four years ago no one had gone among these people to carry the Gospel, and a great many of them had never heard a sermon, or even a prayer offered—sin and ignorance run riot. We now have three organized churches and a membership of about eighty-five. We have had thirty-one additions this year, have had some good meetings. One of our meetings resulted in the addition of fourteen, three of whom had passed their three-score-and-ten, and a number of conversions, one recommended for license to preach and two granted license to exhort. This, however, is only the visible result. We think substantial and permanent results will follow that are not now visible.

Our Conference assessments have all been paid. The assessment for pastor in charge and presiding elder is somewhat short. We have one church-house built and clear of indebtedness. We are under obligations to Brother J. H. Long and his estimable wife for the gift of a new organ recently presented for this church.

We give God all the praise. Your brother,

E. FAYARD, P. C.

ABERDEEN CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have thought for some time of giving you a few lots from my charge, but have been so very busy that I have not taken time. I closed my last meeting on this work Friday night last; have had fine success at each, having had 147 additions to the Church to date with more to follow and most of these on profession of faith; have four Sunday Schools in operation, doing good work. The following brethren have assisted me during the summer: Brothers Lewis, Blizzard, Foust, Neblett and Gant, and all did me fine service, preaching convincing and heart-searching sermons.

At Greenwood Springs I had no help. We had a very fine meeting with seventeen additions. But I want to speak particularly of the meeting held at Soule's Chapel, where the Holy Ghost came down in old-style power and forty-nine persons were added to the Church and nearly all on profession of faith. Sinners cried out for mercy and converts shouted God's praises. "It was indeed good to be there." Also one at Pleasant Grove, where the power of God got hold of the people and twenty-six were added.

My collections are nearly all provided for and I hope to bring up a good report to Conference. Besides, we are building new churches, repairing old ones, buying Church organs and otherwise advancing God's interest in this part of his vineyard. To him we give all praise. Pray for me. Yours in Christ.

O. P. ARMOUR.

Greenwood Springs, Miss.

FOUR GREAT REVIVALS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Since writing to your excellent paper last I have conducted the following successful revivals: We had a fine revival in Guntown, with Brother W. C. Lester and his good people: sixteen additions to our church and the pastor's salary increased $67. Guntown certainly has some fine people, and a church-going community. We had good congregations three times daily.

Next, I was with Brother L. B. Hankins at Vardaman, Miss., where the people built a large bush arbor in the center of the new and growing little town of about 800 population. We continued eight days, and had a great meeting. Do not know the number of conversions; there were thirty-six additions to our church and four infants baptized and seven joined the Baptist Church. The pastor was helped financially. Brother Hankins is a fine young man, and will be an applicant for admission into the North Mississippi Conference in December, and if I am any judge, he is the sort the itinerancy needs. Conference will certainly make no mistake in admitting him.

On Aug. 19 we began with Brother Lester again at Pleasant Valley, which is one of the best country churches in North Mississippi. We had a powerful meeting of eight days' duration, forty-three additions to our church and five to the Baptist. We had Brother Gardner to lead the singing for us at this meeting, and he did it well.

Brother Lester is in his second year on his present charge and is the same intelligent Christian gentleman as usual. He will make a fine report at Conference.

Guntown charge will easily pay $1000 salary another year.

Finally, I am just home from Abbeville, Miss., where we had a great meeting with Brother G. W. Strickland, which continued eleven days.

Twenty-five additions and seven infants baptized. Brother Strickland is finishing a four-years' pastorate at Abbeville, and will have to move at Conference. The charge that gets him another year will be fortunate. He is a fine preacher and a faithful pastor.

May God bless all of the brethren and the thousands of people with whom I have labored during the summer. A few fall meetings will close my work for the year, with gratitude to God for many favors and blessings upon my humble efforts to do his will.

I hear many complimentary and kind things said of The Advocate, and of you, Dr. Boswell, as I go among the multitudes. You are loved by the people. God bless you in your work. Truly,

W. D. BASS.

Corinth, Miss.

HARRISON CIRCUIT, MISS.

Dear Doctor: At the session of the North Mississippi Conference in Grenada last December I was appointed to the Harrison charge, a four-appointment circuit, well scattered over the hills and valleys of Yalobusha and Tallahatchie counties. I have plenty of exercise, with no scarcity of miasma and some ozone.

The work this year has made some progress. I am now in the fourth and last revival for the season. I tried nine or ten preachers for assistance this week. All were busy. The Lord is with us, and is blessing every service. We have had five accessions and many others [illegible] in the welfare of their souls, and are thinking of joining the church ere the week closes.

My first meeting, at Ebenezer, was seemingly a complete failure. I could not get any ministerial aid, and other things hindered.

Our second meeting, at Bethel, was a great one. Our church there of 125 members was several degrees above freezing point, and Brother J. H. Bass, of Charleston, did some of the soundest preaching it has been my pleasure to hear in some time. He presented the gospel so plainly and so forcefully that sinners could not stand before his fire. We were rained out at the close, but, notwithstanding this, twenty were added to the membership. Bass is a most excellent gentleman and a splendid preacher.

Our third revival was at Enid (Harrison Station). There we united with the Presbyterians and Cumberland Presbyterians. The pastor of the former church is Rev. James Moss, of Courtland. The pastor of the latter is the Rev. Mr. Nunn, of Oakland. Both are scholarly, forceful gospel preachers. It was a rare treat for a hard-worked itinerant to associate with and listen to their well-prepared and carefully-delivered discourses. We had a splendid revival and half a score were added to the various churches.

God bless you, Doctor.

ABBEVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I send you herewith a report of Abbeville Charge. As you know, this is my fourth year on this charge, and it is the best year of the four. I began my revival meeting at Union Hill Church on the third Sunday in July. Brother H. C. Edmonson, of Toccopola, did the preaching. We had a good meeting of the old-time kind, with several conversions and six additions to the church. The second meeting was at Anderson's Chapel. We had only a three-days meeting, with the church greatly revived and built up. Next was the Oxford Camp Ground, and to say we had a good meeting does not do it justice. We had a great meeting—a baptism of power, — where old and young, together, shouted and praised the Giver of all good. There were about forty or fifty conversions and nineteen additions to the church. It was the best meeting of the four that I have held during these four years. The preaching was done in power and demonstration of the Spirit. Brother S. M. Thames, our presiding elder, was with us, and preached the 11 o'clock sermons, showing himself to be a great Gospel preacher, as well as a great presiding officer. Brother A. M. Robertson, of Washington, Ark., did some great preaching. Brother Dan Foust was present, and proved his ability as a preacher. Brother J. M. Wyatt, of Oxford Training School, came out and preached one excellent sermon. This scribe was also present, rounding up the corners. Next we went to Andrew's Chapel, where we had a great spiritual feast. Many promised to live more consecrated lives.

Next was Abbeville, where everything was moved up on a higher plane of Christian living. We had about thirty-five conversions, with twenty-five additions to the church. Brother W. D. Bass, of Corinth, did the preaching in his own forceful way. The preacher that doesn't want his people to hear plain gospel preaching without any reserve or equivocation had better not get Brother W. D. Bass to help in a meeting.

This closes my round of meetings, with fifty additions to the church, and most all on confession or baptism and vows. I have baptized thirteen babies.

Everything is in first-class shape throughout the entire charge. I earnestly prayed for this to be the best year of the four on Abbeville charge, and I feel my prayers are answered. I will turn it over to my successor in good shape, at Corinth, as it is a general talk all over the Conference that Strickland will have to move when Conference convenes.

Well, Doctor, I am perfectly satisfied with my four years' work here. God has been with me all the way through. I have tried to keep my hand in his in all this work. While it has not all been sunshine, yet God has led me in the dark, and in storms as well as in the sunlight. "Bless his holy name, and forget not all his benefits."

I have not done as much for the Advocate as I wanted to, but will promise better things in the future. Success to the old Advocate, and best love for Dr. Boswell. Fraternally yours,

G. W. STRICKLAND.

BIENVILLE CHARGE, LA.

Dear Doctor: Last Friday we closed one of the finest meetings that I have witnessed for a long time—sixteen accessions next to last service. Rev. S. D. Howard, of Jonesboro, La., preached ten sermons that were blessed of God in the conviction and conversion of sinners.

Brother Lay, of Alberta, preached the closing sermon, and it was very applicable and highly appreciated by the large audience who had assembled for the closing service. More than one hundred people stood up as an evidence that they had been blessed during the meeting. Salvation is rolling on. To God be all the glory. Amen!

Brother Franklin, one of our superannuates, was with us part of the time, and helped us much by his earnest and touching prayers.

Brother Lay was with us more than half of the time, and made himself very useful.

We are looking for many bright conversions before we close the revival season.

"Increase Your Yields" of Grain.

As 20 bushels of wheat takes from the soil approximately 14 pounds of phosphoric acid, 35 pounds of nitrogen and 18 pounds of potash—the necessity of using fertilizers is very plain. Green and stable manure can be sometimes profitably used on wheat, but then they are usually poorly balanced, and on some soils, those very rich in nitrogen, for example, would be positively injurious.

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers,

on the contrary, can be, and are, adapted in composition and quantity of ingredients to any soil or crop. Those most used, perhaps, contain 8 or 10 per cent. phosphoric acid, 2 or 3 per cent. nitrogen and 2 to 4 per cent. potash. Particularly on some clay soils, these furnish a well-balanced ration for the wheat. On some clay and most sandy lands, however, fully twice this percentage of potash should be used, while many soils need nitrogen. Buy only the high-grade VIRGINIA-CAROLINA FERTILIZERS, and you cannot make a mistake if your seed selection and cultivation are proper. They will "increase your yields per acre."

Miss ZELLA M. MARBLE was born in Hinds County, Miss., on April 29, 1886, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the summer of 1894. She was converted in the glorious old way, and her religion was a practical reality. Her influence for Christ in her father's home was something remarkable. Miss Zella was remarkably bright in her classwork in school. Her influence was felt in the Sunday school, at her home church, and it would seem to an observer that God had a long life of usefulness for her on earth, but He knew best, and, after five long, weary months of intense suffering, in which she demonstrated her perfect resignation to God's will and her perfect trust in Him, she glided out through the golden gate into a brighter clime on June 19, 1906. The writer asked her once, nearly a year before her death, about her personal relation to God, and her reply was: "Brother Gray, I am perfectly satisfied that I am a child of God." What more could we wish? During her long illness she had the best attention that skilled physicians could render, and the constant attention of loving hands, and never was she heard to offer a word of complaint. Her death was a triumphant one on account of the correct life back of it. Amidst a host of sorrowing friends and loved ones, we laid her to rest on June 20th in the Forest Hill Cemetery. The Lord comfort the sorrow-stricken family!

J. E. GRAY, P. C.

ALEXANDER McPHERSON, son of Alex and Melvina McPherson, was born in Sabine Parish, La., April 12, 1899. He joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of 12 years and lived a faithful, consistent Christian life until the Lord in his wise but mysterious providence called him home on Feb. 2, 1906. Young Alex, like Timothy of old, had many advantages in a spiritual way. He had not only a good father and a good mother, but his grandparents walked and talked with God. These two preceding generations of godliness gave him a mighty momentum towards the kingdom of heaven. Being reared in a Christian home and surrounded by an atmosphere of godliness and piety, he escaped many of the temptations that so often mar the lives of our young men. This young man had great promise of usefulness in this life, and his untimely death was mourned by scores of friends. He and his brother and their father were in the woods near their home in Montrose, Miss., and the young man was struck by a falling tree, from which he died a few hours later. He seemed to be conscious to the end, and left a bright testimony behind him, which is a great comfort to his bereaved ones. Dear friends, grieve not as those who have no hope, but put your trust in Him who doeth all things well.

W. W. GRAVES.

Sister M. E. WOODWARD PRATER was born April 10, 1855; died July 16, 1906. She was married to C. V. Prater Dec. 14, 1884; joined the M. E. Church, South; at Pine Hill, Toccopola Circuit, in 1873, under the ministry of the Rev. R. M. Davis. In the morning before her death, at night, she repeated the Lord's prayer with the family. I have been her pastor for nearly four years, and a more devoted, loyal member I never had. She was truly a Christian of the purest kind. Her home was always open to her preacher. A preacher was never appreciated more in any home than hers. It is always a treat to me to visit the Prater home. Sister Prater's life was filled with good works. No truer mother or wife ever died. She leaves three children, all about grown, bright, burning Christian characters, in and through whom Sister Prater will continue her work of love, blessing the world and saving humanity. Though her sickness was of long duration, yet she was never heard to complain. She died as she lived, in triumphs of the Christian faith. She leaves behind a devoted husband, one son and two daughters to mourn their loss. May God, our gracious, loving Father, comfort and bless the home, and finally bring father, son and daughters into the saints' eternal rest above, where they will join wife and mother in praising Him who gave himself for us.

G. W. STRICKLAND, P. C.

Mrs. Martha J. Hamil, whose maiden name was Smith, was born in Heard County, Ga., June 18, 1828. At the age of 12 she joined the M. E. Church, South. In 1857 she moved to Mississippi, and the next year married W. J. Hamil. This union was blessed with three children—two girls and a boy. Both girls are dead, the only surviving child being James L. Hamil, at whose home, near Walnut Grove, Miss., she died July 2, 1906. Her body was laid to rest in Walnut Grove Cemetery, appropriate services being conducted by her pastor in the Methodist Church. Aunt Martha's piety was remarkable, and her good works were without stint or limit. Peculiarly deep and strong was her loyalty to her church. The memory of her upright life will bless the son who loved and tended her so devotedly, the aged sister, the daughter-in-law and the grandchildren, by all of whom she was held so dear. Saintly in character, godly in life, steadfastly loyal to God and church, she is now at home—she has

Mrs. MARTHA THOMAS McGOWAN was born August 23, 1852, and died June 17, 1905, at Byram, Miss. Sister McGowan joined the Methodist Church in the year 1871, and was an acceptable member of the same till the day of her death. Her life was not a failure, as is evidenced by the honorable family of sons and daughters which she left behind—seven in number, viz., John T., Wm. W., Mrs. R. B. Stockton, Chas. S., J. C., Sam'l S., and Miss Gladys, besides a loving and devoted husband, Mr. Sam'l S. McGowan. Sister McGowan was a great sufferer toward the close of her life, but she bore it all with that type of patience and fortitude that becomes a true soldier of the cross. On June 18, 1905, we laid her tired body to rest among the silent forest pines in the Milligan Cemetery, near Byram, to be undisturbed in its peaceful rest till Jesus comes. God had gathered her patient spirit into himself. In the happy by-and-by we expect to see her. God bless her loved ones!

J. E. GRAY.

Little EFFIE MAE FELDER departed this life October 1, 1905, at the home of her grandparents, Rev. D. M. and Effie Miller. She was only eight summers old, and was so loving and sweet that all who knew her loved her, but God, in his wisdom, saw best to take her from this world of trouble, and the father and mother are left to grieve during her absence. Only think what a sweet little angel she is! All we have to do is to live in the service of God, and we will meet her in glory.

GARLANDSVILLE, MISS.

Dr. Boswell: As I have never seen anything in The Advocate from our little church at Garlandsville, I thought I would tell of the good meeting we had last week. The preaching was done by Brother Robt. Fikes in a plain, earnest way; no storm, nor excitement. He seemed so in earnest about the Master's business it made me feel that it was good to be there. Good seed were sown, and some harvest reaped—nine accessions on profession of faith and baptism. The meeting lasted only four days. I think it would have been for good had it lasted longer. A MEMBER.

SOUTH BOSSIER, LA.

Mr. Editor: We are coming very rapidly to the close of our fourth year on the South Bossier Circuit, where the Lord has been very gracious and multiplied his mercies. When we reached here and looked over the ground, we found the entire work in a state of evolution, resulting in many things, some good, some not so good. We found it expedient to abandon the old mother church, "Filmore," and open up a new appointment in "Bossier Point." Many changes have also been made in the membership, with a slight increase, and we feel sure that which "remains has been strengthened" and fixed upon a more solid basis.

The material changes are somewhat also. We have enlarged and painted our parsonage, making it one of the most comfortable homes in the town. We have remodeled and painted our church at Doyline this year. We have plans also on foot to considerably enlarge and change the style of our church here in Haughton, for which we have already about half the money in hand, and hope to finish the work before the Bishop reads us out for another place.

Our protracted meetings this year may truly be said to have been "revivals;" many professed conversion, a number of accessions, and the brethren were constrained to say: "We never saw it on this fashion."

In the last held at this place we had with us the venerable old soldier of the cross, Dr. M. H. Wells, of Birmingham, Ala., whose gentleness and sweetness of spirit won all hearts—a benediction to the pastor and his family. May his years be yet many in which to bless the world. I heartily recommend him to any brother needing good and efficient help in meetings. We had also one very strong and effective sermon by our Presiding Elder, H. G. Davis.

We hope to make the best report of the four when we shall come up to the Conference at Shreveport. Surely the "lines have fallen in pleasant places," for which we thank God and take courage.

W. F. HENDERSON.

WINONA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We finished our round of protracted meetings on the Winona Circuit August the 24th. We had a great revival of religion at every one of the five churches.

As a result we had fifty-six accessions to the church on profession of faith. We also have had thirteen accessions by certificate.

Many of the converts joined other churches and many more who were already members of the church claimed never to have been regenerated before. Many family altars were erected.

At Salem, where we were assisted by Brother J. A. Bowen, the young men organized a prayer meeting, which is still growing in interest and from which may come one or more young preachers. At Salem was also organized, as a result of the meeting, an Epworth League of more than forty members, and a Woman's Home Mission Society of nearly thirty members.

At Lodi, where the church was thought to be almost dead, the membership was greatly strengthened, a prayer meeting was organized and a committee appointed to raise funds with which to paint the church. The committee reported two weeks ago that they had about enough money to paint it and would let the contract for the same soon. They expect to buy an organ, too.

Brother R. M. Evans assisted in the meeting at Bluff Springs; Brother W. M. Young, at New Hope, and Brother W. S. Lagrone, at Bethlehem.

All of these brethren preached with power and in demonstration of the Spirit and with fine results.

The people of our circuit are taking forty-four more New Orleans Christian Advocates than they did at the beginning of the year.

The Conference collections will be paid in full and something will be done for the Orphans' Home at every church on the circuit.

The town of Winona and the surrounding country has had this year the greatest revivals of religion that it has probably had for years. For which, let God be praised.

T. H. PORTER.

Winona, Miss.

FROM COURT STREET, HATTIESBURG.

Our meeting at Court Street closed on the 19th. Besides Brother Theo. Copeland we had with us during the first few days Brother I. F. Bilbro, of the Alabama Conference. Brother Bilbro was no stranger to our people, he having assisted Brother Carpenter in a meeting here last year. His numerous friends were much pleased to see him and hear him again. We were greatly hindered at first by rainy weather. Later the weather improved and the attendance was good. Though the results were not large in the way of accessions, yet much good was accomplished. The Church received a decided spiritual uplift. Our people were delighted with Brother Copeland, both in the pulpit and in the social circle. His preaching was excellent—clear, strong, spiritual, tender, magnetic, tactful, effective.

Glances at the World.

The sensation in Mississippi political circles is the short speech delivered recently by Mr. John Sharp Williams, Congressman, at the close of Mr. Bryan's speech at Jackson. He does not agree with Mr. Bryan's "government ownership" views, and took occasion to express his disapproval. He ventured to say that Mr. Bryan, though an honest and fearless man, "is Quixotic, had made mistakes in the past, is making them now and would make more." The talk was marked by other utterances quite in keeping with Mr. Williams' character and ability. Mr. Williams is somewhat of a people's idol himself, the equal of Mr. Bryan in intellect, a finer scholar and with complete control of the English language. His speech was received with great applause. Had such a talk been made by any other man on the occasion, there would doubtless have been expressions of dissent, but nothing of the kind was apparent, and Mr. Bryan approved the speaker's courage and independence. The speech may have some bearing on Mr. Williams' campaign for the Senate.

There is also a sensation in Texas. A leader is in trouble. Mr. Pierce, in his testimony before a court, let out the fact that Mr. Joseph W. Bailey, United States Senator from Texas, and the Democratic leader in the body, is interested in a financial way in the great oil trust known as "the Standard." No news of any kind has so startled the Texas politicians, and the Democrats of the State are calling county conventions to take action. Some have already been held, and Mr. Bailey severely arraigned and condemned. Mr. Bailey's term will expire next March, and he must voluntarily retire, else take on his hands the hardest fight of his life. He will do the latter. His enemies say he is "politically dead." The case is somewhat similar to that of Mr. Lamar, of Mississippi, who, when in the Senate, voted for a measure particularly objectionable to his constituents. He was denounced on all sides, and the people were ready to put him in the political grave. It required but a short time and a few speeches to set things right, and Mr. Lamar lived and died the best beloved Mississippian of his generation. We predict, unless some crookedness can be shown, the like triumph of Mr. Bailey.

We noted the fact several weeks since that the American Federation of Labor, with Mr. Gompers, president, at the head, had gone into politics, and that the Federation's first fight would be against Congressman Littlefield, of Maine. Mr. Gompers put forth his full strength, and while Mr. Littlefield's majority of two years ago was cut down considerably, he was elected. The cutting down of the majority Mr. Gompers claims to be "a moral victory for labor." The leading papers of the North do not agree with Mr. Gompers. Another cause than Mr. Littlefield's opposition to the eight hour law operated against him. Mr. Littlefield is a strong temperance man, and a champion of the Maine Prohibitory Law. Prohibition was a State-wide issue, and Mr. Littlefield had against him the liquor forces of his district. This accounts largely for Mr. Gompers' moral victory. His attention will now be turned to Speaker Cannon, of Illinois, and one or two other Congressmen he hopes to beat.

Mr. Wm. J. Bryan is traveling through the country under the auspicies of the National Democratic Campaign Committee. He is now in the South, and is being received with the utmost enthusiasm—as the prospective candidate for the Presidency in 1908. The people seem not to know or care that he has been twice defeated for the office. He is still their idol. At this writing he is due in New Orleans, where great preparations have been made for his reception and entertainment. The ovation will be second only to that accorded President McKinley and President Roosevelt, and second only to those two receptions because they were not partisan, whereas Mr. Bryan represents not the Government, but his party. Mr. Bryan is also booked for "missionary work" in Ohio, where he will spend three days, and then devote his time to other sections in the Northwest. What effect his tour will have it is impossible to foretell. Unfortunately his party is divided on a question which he thinks of great importance—viz. Government ownership of railways. In this he will have the opposition of many of the strongest leaders of his party and the combined strength of the Republicans. It is probable, however, that Mr. Bryan will drop the question altogether or cease to press it as a party measure. Mr. Bryan is an honest man, clean in his public and private life, and well worthy of the confidence of the people.

When it was learned that President Roosevelt had sent Mr. Taft and Attorney Bacon to Cuba to investigate the situation, with a view to intervention, it was said that both parties, the administration and insurgent, made haste to get together before the United States representatives arrived. But the effort, if any was made, was a failure. Mr. Taft told them very frankly that their differences must be made up, and peace maintained. In the meantime preparations were made by our Government for armed intervention. Of course, there is talk of annexing Cuba to the United States, but there is no ground for it. We freed Cuba from the domination of Spain after long years of suffering at the hands of Spanish despotism, and gave the island its independence. No doubt annexation would be the best thing for Cuba, but we are pledged to its independence, and the pledge will be kept. The contending parties will patch up peace, but it will not last long. Those in office desire to stay in. Those who are out want to get in, and are willing to fight, and we may expect friction and conflict for years to come.

Since the above was put in type it is understood that all efforts at reconciliation have failed, and American troops have taken possession, and will restore order on the island. Let us hope the conflict will be short and bloodless.

BRAZIL MISSION ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The twenty-first session of the Brazil Mission Conference was held July 25-31 in Ribeirao Preto, State of Sao Paulo, which is in the heart of the richest coffee lands of the world. It is two days railway trip from Rio de Janeiro, but a special coach was placed at our disposal by the Mogyana (Brazilian) Railway, which greatly reduced the expense and added to the comfort of the long trip. I mention this unique fact in the history of Protestantism in Brazil as an encouraging sign of the times and an indication of an increasing appreciation of our mission.

Bishop Hoss was again gladly welcomed and directed the delicate deliberations with his usual tact, wisdom and humor; we trust that he will return next year. He asked the questions, put the votes, and ordained in Portuguese. We quote the following encouraging figures from the reports:

Total number of members in Brazil, 5172, of which 501 were received during the year. For the support of the ministry $4,500 more than last year. For domestic missions, $900; Conference claimants, $417.17; church extension, $450.00; for education, 548.79. This is a great stride towards self-support and represents heroic sacrifice on the part of our people, who are very poor. We have 67 Sabbath schools, with 2940 pupils; 39 Epworth Leagues, with a membership of 1751, and 1254 pupils in our day and boarding schools.

On Sunday night of the Conference we had to move out of the church into the theatre, which was well filled. On this occasion Bishop Hoss preached through an interpreter, and Dr. Chas. W. Drees, our honored guest of the Buenos Aires Conference, preached in Spanish. A large number of persons publicly accepted Christ at this service.

The constant widening of our borders necessitated the formation of a new district in the State of Minas, and the setting apart of the Rio Grande do Sul District, occupying a territory larger than Texas, and a week's sea voyage from the center of our work on the southern frontier, as a separate mission.

The only sad note of the Conference was the withdrawal from our church and ministry of two of our young native pastors.

Every branch of the work, evangelical, educational and publication, recorded signal growth and progress, for which we humbly thank "God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A CALL TO PRAYER FOR BRAZIL.

Protestant missions have been at work in Brazil for more than half a century. The pure seed of the Holy Word has been widely and faithfully sown by self-sacrificing missionaries and heroic natives. We believe that God is willing to fulfill the ancient promise in Psalm 126:5-6.

The Evangelical Alliance, composed of all the missionary forces in Brazil, at their recent meeting held in the city of Sao Paulo, resolved to send out a universal call to prayer for Brazil. It is suggested that the entire month of October be observed as a season of special prayer for Brazil, the heart of the Dark Continent.

Will you join with us in earnest, daily prayer for the following definite objects during this month?

First—For an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Second—For a realization of the need of Brazil: its helplessness; its poverty; its materialism; lust and superstition; the inadequacy of its religion; its spiritual hopelessness.

Third—For a truer conception of the mission of the Church.

Fourth—For the missionaries, that they may be kept in health of body and mind, and that they may have a continual sense of Christ's presence.

Fifth—For the native church, that it may grow in faith and fruitfulness, in love and service. For more native workers.

Sixth—For religious liberty and peace.

Seventh—For a full surrender to the leadership of the Holy Spirit.

Eighth—For a more perfect understanding and closer fraternal relations among the various branches of the Church in Brazil.

Ninth—That the Lord of the harvest will thrust forth laborers into his waiting, whitening fields.

The above call has been sent privately to a number of societies in the Church, and I am now asking Dr. Boswell to publish it in the ADVOCATE in order that the circle of prayer may be widened. We have been plucking by handfuls, but we feel that the time has now come for the bringing in of sheaves of golden grain from the fragrant fields. Very sincerely yours in his service.

GEO. D. PARKER.

SOUND DOCTRINE.

The Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to Titus (ii-1), says, "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:" and in his Second Epistle to Timothy he says (iv-2,3): "Preach the Word: be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine; for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." We can say on authority of the Bible that it takes sound doctrine to save a soul from sin and that soul must have the "sincere milk of the Word" in order to grow in grace and in the love of Christ Jesus, the Savior. The gospel of our Lord is a very simple thing; yes, so simple that a "wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." It is so simple that some stumble at its very simplicity. No wonder the Savior said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye cannot see the Kingdom of God." Sound doctrine is just taking God at his word and believing and teaching what he says in the Bible, without trying to explain away its force and power, like some of our up-to-date twentieth century progressive theological teachers are doing today. Some of them are actually teaching that all of the Word of God is not inspired, when the Apostle plainly says, "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine and instruction in righteousness." If we do not un-

[illegible] Word [illegible] the good [illegible] while [illegible] reason he did not believe [illegible] the whale [illegible] was [illegible] of time [illegible] and hides [illegible] but like its [illegible] and forever, [illegible] that Wesley in the power of the Lord [illegible] to an apostate world in his day. It is the same [illegible] Fletcher, Whitefield, Doddridge, Clarke, Coke and Asbury preached in their day. It was preaching the gospel, story in its simplicity and power that made C. H. Spurgeon the greatest and most successful preacher of his day. It was the presentation of the beautiful story of the cross in its purity and sweetness by which Moody accomplished so much good in the world as an evangelist. And to-day the preacher or the teacher who has faith in God and implicit confidence in his living Word is the man who is doing the most good in this world and will have many stars in his crown in that world which is to come.

E. B. PARTIN, M. D.

THE BIBLE AND THE CRITICS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I have been rejoiced to see the stand you are making in defense of the divine origin, integrity and inspiration of the Bible.

When I read learned articles on languages, peoples and writings of Biblical times, and learn that some man, utterly lacking the inventive faculty, and writing at a time when his language was incapable of giving expression to the imaginative, did actually invent such characters as Job and his friends, and imagined such wonderful displays of wisdom and divine glory, and actually produced from the hotchpotch groans and tears of a lot of exiled Jews in a foreign land, such a wonderful series of events, and such marvellous speeches as are contained in the book, and that this strange combination of wonderfully contradictory capacities died unknown, and is still an undiscovered genius, I begin to realize how much a mere human production exceeds in the miraculous anything yet claimed for divine inspiration by the orthodox. While straining at the gnats of etymology, orthography, syntax and prosody, the "ex cathedra" fellows let double-humped camels march unnoticed straight through their logic.

Anxious to catch a straw to keep from drowning, I turn to Ezekiel (who speaks of Noah and Job) only to realize that the name is Eze (easy), Ki-el (El (God), Ki (kill). It's "Easy to kill God." He was by the river Chebar (Khabut). "What for does he Butt-In?" Then we try James. "The patience of Job." See that name! Ja (Jah) mes (mess). "A Job lot of Jehovah mess!" And the matter is settled; and I throw up my hands, and, with the Psalmist, exclaim "Selah!" or in the parlance of the street gamin of the day, "give us a rest."

According to these learned languagearians Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple was composed for him more than 600 years after his death by some unknown smarty, who was wiser than the king himself.

[illegible] prove that he [illegible] derived from [illegible] for was he not [illegible] Where did fishes [illegible] from away.

[illegible] Methodist [illegible] glamorous to ask such a question. Now, Doctor, you and I know [illegible] crickets [illegible] the sick.

Stand by your guns, Doctor! Stand to your guns! If you cannot save the Methodist Discipline, nor the Articles of Religion, you may manage to keep us a few fragments of the Bible. If that enough to protect our aching hearts, at least enough to wrap up our bleeding toes. Small favors thankfully received and large ones in proportion, as my father used to say.

Your Brother, F. D. VAN VACKENBERGH.

BURNISHING THE PARSONAGE.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Will you please write an editorial on the subject of furnishing the parsonage? I think that a discussion of this subject through the ADVOCATE will do good. I would like to see something from some of our good women who love their pastor and his family, and take an interest in looking after their comforts. Such an article or editorial from you may catch the eye of some of our lady members, and so touch their hearts as to bring them to our rescue.

Our parsonage home has not been visited by a single person, man or woman, for one year and a half to make any enquiries in regard to our wants, and it is not because this scribe hasn't mentioned the subject to them, but I feel a delicacy to mention it any more. It may be possible that they think it the preacher's duty to replace anything that wears out, but with our small salary this is impossible.

They once had a Mite Society, but this seems to have gone by the board, and all their attention is paid to circles, clubs and temperance societies. The towels, sheets, pillow cases, tablecloths, spreads, quilts are getting ragged, and other things are needed. What shall we do!

AN ITINERANT.

A TIMELY REQUEST.

Doctor Boswell: Please say to the pastors of Mississippi Methodism that if they will take time to write me the names of boys of Methodist families attending the A. & M. College, I will be able to see them much sooner, and will be glad to do what I can to make them feel at home with the church here. The parents reading this notice may be able to reach me sooner than the pastors in many cases. I will be glad to hear from them. There are nearly eight hundred boys out there, and many of them must be members of the Methodist Church, or members of Methodist families. They ought to be with us in our Sunday-school and our church work. Respectfully.

J. W. DORMAN.

Starkville, Miss.

ARCADIA DISTRICT.

Dear Doctor: Some notes from the Arcadia District might not be without interest to the readers of the ADVOCATE. Just to mention each charge would be to write eighteen distinct eulogies of the various preachers thereon. Let me say, first as to things and preachers in general. Two of the preachers have been greatly hindered in their work this year. Dr. Carter, at Arcadia, by the sickness of his wife, who has been helpless for five months, and Brother Fordham, at Cotton Valley, by his own sickness, being laid up since the last week in July and so far not able to do his work. Let prayers be offered for these brethren in their affliction.

Every preacher has wrought effectually, and we go into the fourth quarter with every prospect of this being the big year in the Arcadia District. As to special work, mention must be made of those places and preachers who have built churches and paid debts, and made other material improvements. Woodward, at Bernice, has built a nice church at Dubach, and had 128 accessions to the Church.

Hively, on Vienna Circuit, has built a good church at Antioch, and had quite a number of additions. Fordham, at Cotton Valley, had on hand two church enterprises, but they will hardly be realized this year owing to the preacher's sickness.

Lay, on the Alberta Circuit, expects to have a church at Jamestown this year. Moore, at Minden, has successfully taken up the work where Warlick left it when sentenced to New Orleans, and by Conference, or before, the Minden congregation will be worshipping in the prettiest and most substantial house in north Louisiana. Moore's success at Minden is the delight of his people. Minden, under the leadership of Warlick and Moore, has come to be one of the chief churches in the Conference. She presents a happy prospect for a hustler.

Bowman, at Homer, has succeeded in inducing his people to build something worthy of themselves; so work is under way by which some time during next year they will have a place of worship which will not only be a credit to them, but will, if certain remarks accredited to a Bishop are true, "be a credit and an ornament to the whole Methodist Episcopal Church, South!"

The following preachers have reported meetings that have resulted in more than twenty-five accessions: Randle, Anders, Davis and Wafer. Howard, at Jonesboro, has done exceedingly well. Last year he built one of the nicest small town churches in this section; this year he has painted it, and it is an ornament to that growing town—and it is all paid for.

Williams, at Gibbsland, is improving the church at that place, and is going to sell the present parsonage and build anew on the lot adjoining the church. This will be a great improvement. He has a movement on foot that will give us a new church in Athens at no distant day. Williams is a man that is always in demand.

Notwithstanding the stretch of country that Jordan had to flow over this year, he has kept a season in the ground and the fruit is manifesting itself. He is a dry looking branch, but he is all right.

Under the leadership of Holloway, Winfield is rapidly coming to the front. His Sunday school and Leaugue and congregation and membership are constantly growing. Next year Winfield will bring up its salary for its preacher to $1000, and it is one of the most promising and important fields in which a man can be called to labor.

Sloane's three years at Farmerville have been fruitful. He has hopes of realizing his dream of a new church in that town, having built one nice church since being on the work at Marion.

Bennett, at Lisbon, has suffered again this year from his old affection of the throat. His people rightly think they have one of the best preachers in the district, meaning thereby one of the best in the Conference!

Wynn, at Ruston, is the only preacher in these parts who will go up to Conference knowing what will befall him there. I am fearful, that the "move-on ordinance" will be invoked against him. But if he goes, he will go with a good record. He will have greatly eased the way for his successor.

Mr. Editor, having such a band of brethren in your district relieves the eldership of many of its forbidding features. I don't mind being elder with this good band. It is easy to keep things moving when you have such a crowd of movers. They will bring up a big report from this district this year. God bless and prosper them all.

BRISCOE CARTER.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

We have great pleasure in announcing the successful launching of the new session of this honorable old institution of the Church. Wednesday morning, Sept. 19, at the invitation of President Henry G. Hawkins, friends and patrons met and joined the faculty and student-assembled in the ample chapel-hall. Its white and gold interior is fresh and attractive, the day was clear, and we soon realized participation in an occasion bright with happy auspices.

Upon the platform, at the hour of 11, with the president, were seated Rev. W. H. Lewis, the pastor; Dr. Holloman, from Crawford Street; Rev. W. A. Terry, from Washington Street; the writer, from the district at large; Dr. Redus, physician, and Mr. Taylor, former Superintendent of Education for Claiborne County.

The largest number of boarding pupils for years was there. From large reaches of country, far up the rich delta, and from Louisiana came the girls and young women, making in their assembling a bright and pleasing body.

The good hour passed in short, hearty addresses of gratification in the school's fine prospect, and congratulatory of President Hawkins in the success attending his steadfast, constant campaign of the summer. One of the speakers declared that for the first time he was able to appreciate the merit of the saying, "smiling as a basket of chips," in its applicability to the facial expansiveness of the president.

The more than forty boarding pupils present on the opening day make an unusual record for the college in recent years. That the capacity of the buildings will be reached and passed shortly is certain, as contracts are made with a number not yet arrived.

The faculty, somewhat altered from that of last session, is pronounced excellent. We were impressed with the manner in which Miss Bishop, the earnest, scholarly young Virginian, directress of music, went at her work of having the students rise promptly on signal to sing with fine effect the National Hymn. Her testimonials of competence and general poise from her home are rarely surpassed.

Miss Araminta Kennard is justly regarded among the noblest educators of this section of the state. Miss Simrall continues the work of last session. Miss Still is a dignified and pleasant young Alabamian, in charge of the department of Expression. Miss French, whose really artistic talents will be more largely recognized in future, fresh from vacational study at an Eastern school of reputation, remains on the list of teachers for last year. Miss Bessie Galloway, the principal of last session, remarkably balanced, a wholesome and valued element in the success of the last session, is here at her post. Mrs. Hawkins, who is keenly interested in all which could contribute to her husband's success, will use part of her time in care of the department of primary work. Mrs. McCaa continues in her service as housekeeper and matron, a true, motherly lady, fitted well to her work.

We are proud of Port Gibson College. Located in the luxuriantly beautiful town, second to none in its charm, the school has been a large feature here, and for nearly sixty years has kept open door to the young womanhood of the state and Church. That it should have long been recognized as necessary to the section to which it is accessible is easy to understand; and that it is growing in the grace of its necessity to our people is more fully evident and attested in the full attendance of the present session. In the success of the college all the pastors of Vicksburg District are specially concerned. All of them have announced and commended it to their people.

President Hawkins has been indefatigable in his goings and doings. To him we may look to keep the fine old college, with course of study well up and well inculcated, where it belongs, in the front rank of the good and great institutions of the Mississippi Conference.

CONFERENCE STATISTICS.

Many brethren, we dare say, have on hand a supply of statistical blanks, expecting to use them in making their reports to the Annual Conference. The old form will not do. There has been a change, and brethren must secure the new form. The Publishing Agents can supply the need. Write to Smith and Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Tex. Rev. G. W. Bachman, Colporter, Winona, Miss., can supply all who write to him.

MRS. T. B. HOLLOMAN,
President.

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, October 7-13, comes to us this year with a more distinct call for a definite action than ever before. Miss Bennett has voiced the appeal of the Board to the Woman's Home Mission Society—yes, to every member of it—to deny herself, at this time of something she desires and to give its cost to aid in procuring the much-needed ablution to our Ruth Hargrove Seminary, at Key West. Can you do this? Nay, will you do this for the Master? It will be for you a triumph of the Christ Spirit within, and he will have his reward in the uplifted lives of those for whom your gift is used. If during this Week of Prayer you devise liberal things and the collections amount to $12,000, we may all unite in singing "Praise God." In order to do this, we must both work and pray ourselves and move others to do the same. The officers of the Conferences and of the Auxiliaries must call the women into line and plan and arrange for the daily meetings and have every one in readiness to take part in them. Do not put this preparation off to within a few days of the time. If you do, your Auxiliary will fail to take its part in the general plan. Now is the time to begin your work and to ask God's blessing upon it.

[Note—The programme sent in came to hand too late for insertion, and was too long for our space.—Ed.]

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

By PROF. JAMES E. WALMSLEY.

The fifteenth session of Millsaps College was opened Wednesday, Sept. 26. In spite of inclement weather, a goodly number of friends of the College were in the chapel when President W. B. Murrah formally opened the session. After religious services conducted by Rev. W. B. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. T. W. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, Dr. Murrah called on Bishop Galloway and Major R. W. Millsaps to make short talks. Both of these faithful friends of the College were enthusiastically received by the large number of students present. Addresses of welcome to Jackson were also made by Hon. J. R. Preston, president of Belhaven College, and by Dr. W. H. LaPrade, pastor of the First Methodist Church. The usual announcements were made by members of the faculty, and work began on what will, undoubtedly, prove the most sucessful year in the history of the College.

Prof. A. V. Kern, of the Chair of English, has been granted a year's leave of absence to pursue post-graduate studies, looking toward the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the Johns Hopkins University. His place is taken this year by Dr. B. A. Wise, of Stevens City, Va. Dr. Wise is a full graduate of the Johns Hopkins University, and has had several years' experience in teaching. He has already impressed students and faculty as being a man of prof[illegible] strength of character as well as of ac[illegible] scholarship. The College feels itself fortunate in being able to secure his services, and in being able to offer special opportunities in English for the coming year.

The enrollment for the first two days is about forty percent above the average, and, as few students are coming in on every train, it is certain that the total enrollment for the year will be about a hundred in excess of last year's record. It would be hard to find a more promising student-body in appearance than the one now on the campus, and a most favorable impression has already been made on the people of the city.

On Wednesday, a committee consisting of President Murrah, Bishop Galloway, Major Millsaps, and Messrs. I. C. Enochs and J. K. Bingham met to decide on plans for the new Carnegie-Millsaps Library building. After carefully going over quite a number of plans submitted by architects from all over the country, they adopted the plans of Mr. Austin, a promising young architect of Jackson. The contract will be let in the next few days, and the building will be completed this session.

Mr. W. A. Aelland, the accomplished landscape gardener of the College, is congratulating himself that the equinoctial gale did no serious damage to the appearance of the campus. A few trees were broken, but, considering the many that make this one of the most beautiful campuses in the South, no injury is apparent.

A RECEPTION AT THE MERIDIAN DISTRICT PARSONAGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell,—It was my pleasure to be present at a reception at the new district parsonage, Sept. 11, given by the elect Methodist ladies of Meridian. There is "less of earth than heaven in them," and "angels are painted fair to look like them." The choicest daughters of the Meridian Methodist Churches gathered together to welcome Brother Sullivan and family in their new home and receive for entertainment and social advantage all in the city and district who would attend. Several hundred, including children, gathered together and filled up the spacious rooms, halls and galleries.

The following ladies constituted the reception committee: Mrs. Whitaker, Mrs. Stockton, Miss Julia Watts, Mrs. Slack, Mrs. Stegal, Mrs. McGee, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Calloway and Mrs. Cox.

Offerings were made at the door and more than $75 were received. If anybody is sorry he attended, it is because he is hopelessly insensible and would fail to recognize the beautiful or captivating, were he to see it. Music's golden tongue flattered to fame" for lame or the aged and the young. There were vocal and instrumental solos, duets and quartets by some of the best talent of Meridian.

The Methodist preachers present were called upon to sing a song, which they did with enthusiasm. What they lacked in music they made up in noise. The following preachers were present: Revs. F. M. Williams, W. F. Bagget, H. A. Gatlin, L. F. Alford, L. E. Abord, C. F. Emery, F. W. Crisler, J. E. Saucier, and John D. Ellis.

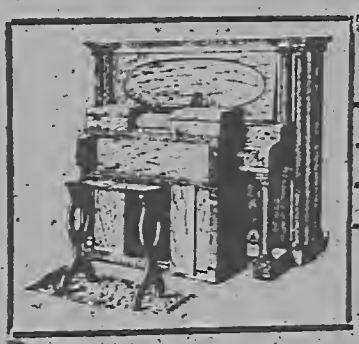
It is the opinion of many that the Meridian district parsonage is the best preacher's home in the conference. The building committee (S. B. Watts, A. H. Curtis, J. E. Watts, W. C. Casteel and D. W. Feibelberg) had it builded at a cost of nearly $3000 including wiring, plumbing, etc., not counting any of the furniture. The money for the building was raised by Rev. W. M. Sullivan, the Presiding Elder. There is still a debt, but he already has in unpaid subscriptions an amount to cover nearly all of the indebtedness. It is but just to say that a large part of the money was subscribed by the wide-awake Methodists of Meridian.

The home is two-story, with comfortable halls and alcoves, contains nine rooms, not counting store room, pantry, bath room, and closets. Eight tenneh columns grace the front gallery.

The dining room was elegantly furnished by the Epworth Leagues of the district, the Southside League doing nobly. The mantel piece in the dining room alone cost $50.

The hall and parlor were handsomely furnished by the ladies of Central Church. It is a real pleasure to sit down and look around.

The guest room was furnished by the ladies of East End. Every guest will have a delightful trouble in sleeping in that room. It is so beautifully furnished with mahogany and nice things, he will have to get used to pleasing environments before he can go to sleep. It is difficult to say how a circuit rider would feel were the Presiding Elder to let him try to sleep in that room. He should say his prayers first, for he might never wake up.



The kitchen is being furnished substantially by Fifth Avenue and Poplar Springs Churches. Every thing in and about the house is, or will be, new. The Presiding Elder may even add an additional article of valuable furniture.

It is beautiful to know that a mahogany chair was given by Sister P. A. Johnson, wife of Rev. P. A. Johnson, of sainted memory. She paid for the chair by making handkerchiefs and selling them. Let rich Methodists awake!

Permit me to add, Doctor, that Brother Sullivan is in general favor on the District. He is great in labors and does the work of an evangelist. He has averaged one sermon a day for the entire year. We hope the Bishop will return him to the District. But should he be moved, the man who takes his place will see the fruit of his zealous labors. Fraternally

STATEMENT OF METHODIST FAITH.

(SECOND PAPER.)

It is probable that a majority of those who in the recent General Conference voted for the appointment of the commission on the statement of Methodist faith, viewed the resolution, when first presented, with surprise and disfavor. Even those who entertained no suspicion of a concealed purpose to change the doctrines of the Church questioned the necessity for any such formation of the faith of Methodism. The debate that ensude, prolonged and exhaustive, convinced the Conference not only of the harmlessness of the proposition, but also of the desirability of the suggested legislation.

Granting that there is in the resolution, signed by Dr. Wilbur Fisk Tillett, Dr. Walter R. Lambuth and Dr. Charles Wesley Carter no lurking design of heretics to alter the historic faith of Methodism; granting also that no restrictive rule stands in the way of the statement contemplated, the question may be asked, What need is there for a new statement of the faith, held now, and from the first, by the people called Methodists, and what are the good results that it is supposed will follow the adoption of such a statement?

There is not to-day, nor has there ever been, in the sense in which the resolution uses that term, a statement of the faith of Methodism. Taken in its broader sense, there have been many statements from that found in Wesley's sermons to the latest treatise on systematic theology written from the standpoint of Wesleyan Arminianism; but, in the sense of a short, clear, comprehensive formulation, there has never been a statement of Methodist doctrine.

The serious-minded layman who asks to be shown what Methodists believe and teach would be referred to the "standards of doctrine," a term variously interpreted to include anything from, perhaps, the General Rules to the earlier issues of the discipline, with their doctrinal tracts, long since out of print. Perhaps the most natural reference in such a case would be to the Twenty-five Articles. Of these it may be said that they cannot be accepted as a statement of the distinctive teachings of Methodism; because, in the first place, they were in existence more than two hundred years before Methodism was born, and were modified by Mr. Wesley only by the elimination of certain objectionable doctrines; and, in the second place, they omit much of doctrinal truth that has become recognized as distinctively Methodistic.

It would be nothing to the point to say that no creedal statement is expected to embrace all that is taught by the communion that promulgated it. It must contain, at least, all that is salient, fundamental, distinctive. It is difficult to imagine a Methodist preacher confining himself, upon such an occasion, to the Twenty-five Articles, and not hastening to add: "But there are also other great doctrines that are not to be found here." If asked where they may be found, he must answer: "In certain of Mr. Wesley's sermons and in his notes on the New Testament," and perhaps he might continue: "And in the hymns of John and Charles Wesley, the minutes of the early English Conference, and in the doctrinal tracts, printed in certan old editions of the Book of Discipline."

Is our interested enquirer to be set to the study of these authorities? The only alternative would be a "restatement," made on the spot, by the Methodist preacher to whom he has gone for help.

Would it not be well, in view of this fact, to leave the General Rules and the Twenty-five Articles as they stand in the Book of Discipline and follow them with a brief, but comprehensive, statement of the doctrines peculiar to Methodists the world over—a statement formed by selected representatives from all the great Methodist bodies of the world?

If it be suggested that, admitting the absence of doctrinal statement, Methodism, without it, has grown more rapidly than any of the great Christian communions of the world, it may be replied that the statement proposed would in no wise have retarded this growth; but, on the contrary, have increased it. Is there no danger that, while congratulating ourselves upon the signal growth of Methodism we may neglect an agency that would insure a more rapid growth? Why should not Methodism have grown with doctrines once so Scriptual and so rational, and a polity so incomparable? And why should as strong a confession of her faith as the Presbyterians enjoy of their less Scriptual and less rational system retard that growth? Would it not rather tend to increase its power for good in this day when the thinking world is manifesting its discontent with those confessions, to which Methodism has always been most strongly antagonistic? Does not this day of the revision or rejection of ultra-Calvinistic confessions constitute a particularly favorable opportunity for the presentation to the world of a short, definite, statement of the doctrines taught by Methodists?

Again, has not the growing influence of Methodism been accompanied by a decreasing emphasis upon her distinctive doctrines in her pulpits? Is there not among us a lack of doctrinal preaching? Is it too much to say that our membership, while generally more intelligent than formerly, are less intelligent in their knowledge of the doctrinal peculiarities of their own Church?

Is it not true that many of our own people, and of others, have an idea that the difference between Methodism and the other evangelistic churches is chiefly one of church polity, while the broad lines that separate between Wesleyan Arminianism and the Calvinism of other communions are but insufficiently appreciated? In this day, when Prebyterians preach like Methodists, when Baptists are adopting many of the evangelistic methods that formerly were peculiar to Methodists, when Protestant Episcopalians are fond of say to Methodists people, "There are really very little difference between us," would it not be well to send forth such a formulation of the distinctive doctrines of Methodism as will show, to the Methodist and to the non-Methodist world alike, that there are differences in doctrinal teaching, and in what those differences consist?

What are some of the desirable results that it is thought will follow the promulgation of the new statement of Methodist faith?

First. It will cause Methodist preachers to sturdy the doctrines of their Church as, perhaps, they have never done before. Incidentally it may be asked: "Are our preachers as thoroughly grounded in the doctrines of the Church as our fathers were?

Second—It will tend to bring about a revival of doctrinal preaching by Methodist preachers, a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Third—It will be the means of a more adquate appreciation by Methodist people of the peculiar tenets of their Church.

cesOac -caH tezx-G weoh :aC esfid oesdhos

Fourth—It will "vertebrate" denominational loyalty among Methodist people, and check the tendency to so great an eagerness to assure the members of other chuches that we think they are just as good as we are, that they are tempted to believe that we agree with them in the opinion that they are better.

Fifth—It will present to the non-Methodist world of Christendom and to the unbeliever in the foreign mission field a comprehensive statement of what we earnestly believe to be the most unassailable body of Christian doctrine that the world has ever seen.

GRENADA COLLEGE OPENING.

A splendid company gathered at Grenada College on Wednesday morning, Sept. 19, to witness the exercises of the College opening. An appropriate invocation was offered by Rev. J. H. Mitchell, of Aberdeen, Miss. President Clifton delivered a brief address, and called for Miss Lawrence, a new faculty member from Boston, who delighted the company present with a fine piano performance. Sundry addresses were delivered by patrons, trustees and ministers. Rev. J. H. Mitchell, for some time a trustee, was impressive in his statements, and emphasized "loyalty" to church institutions as a condition of success among Christian colleges. He also advocated "endowment." Impromptu remarks on call of President Clifton were made by Mr. J. H. Frazer and M. C. Dubard of the trustees, and numerous citizens of Grenada expressed great regard and intgrest for the college. Rev. J. C. Park, of Greenwood, Miss., was exceedingly happy in statements, and somewhat humorous, but urged college education as a condition of church success. Several plead eloquently for the institution by affirming interest, and were classed, as Mr. Clifton said, among the "standpatters." W. M. Dubard, prominent in Grenada and country about, was sensible and positive, and delivered a most instructive address. Rev. Ben P. Jaco advertised his church service in "taking" form, and Mr. Jack Wilson was charmed with the fine company of pupils and captivating teachers, and assurred all of a cordial welcome at his Sunday school. Rev. R. O. Brown, of Batesville Station, was present as a patron of the college, and in the absence of preparation, must "depend upon the Lord;" "would do better next time," he thought. Altogether, the fine audience present was pleasantly attentive, and cheered immensely at times.

The college faculty is the largest thing in any school of learning. Buildings and furnishings pass for much; but the teachers are the dynamo, the mainspring and driving power of the institution. Given these and all else naturally follows. As in "faith only" is implied all other conditions of salvation, so also, if the teacher is found the college also at once is in existence. Enlisted pastors, wise trustees and "church loyalty" are important factors in solving the problem of success among Christian colleges.

What the minister says goes with the people if he be worthy and competent, but the teachers are the lifeblood of the institution, and the heartbeat of the whole procedure from first to finish. Loyalty to church institutions is always at a premium, as is also close work and fine deportment on the part of pupils. But thoughtful people will not support an incompetent and unequipped college. Loyalty to simply the church is good, but in instances loyalty to the child might pass for more.

The great need now of Grenada College is "a man on the road"—a chief minister of north Mississippi, competent and well paid, a college advocate and pupil-securer, a money-hunter also, until the $100,000 is secured.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF PENNIES.

A boy who had his pocket full of pennies and dimes dropped one into the missionary box. It was light as chaff, for he put it in without any thought.

Another boy put in a penny, and then looked up to hear his teacher praise him for it. His was a brass penny. He gave it in the hope of being praised.

A third boy gave a penny, saying "I suppose I must give something, all the rest do." His was an iron penny. His heart was cold and selfish.

A fourth boy dropped a tear as he let his penny fall from his fingers, and he sighed "Poor heathen, how I pity him!" His heart was kind and his penny was a silver penny.

But there was a scholar who gave because his heart was filled with the love of Jesus, saying, "For thy sake, O blessed Savior, I give this penny. Use it in some way to thy honor and glory." His was a golden penny, for it was a gift of love.—Exchange.

FLORENCE.

I hardly know when my acquaintance with Florence began, unless, perhaps, it was that day when she looked up at me with such reproachful, wondering indignation. I can remember her look yet, and when I think of it I also like to think of her as she came a few weeks later, dainty and contrite and pleading, with a bunch of broken daisies as a peace offering.

Every clear afternoon I was accustomed to have my chair wheeled into the big front bay-window, which was flooded with sunlight. Here I would sit for hours, gazing at the shrubbery and the birds which occasionally crossed my parallelogram of glass, and at the empty cottage opposite. Then one day I noticed the blinds of the cottage were thrown back and the windows opened, and that easy-chairs were scattered about the broad, cozy piazzas, and I knew I was to have neighbors. But it was not until the next day that I saw Florence.

It was a bad day with me, and I did not even remember I had neighbors until I saw a quaint little red figure swinging on the gate of the cottage opposite. And even then I only gazed listlessly and contrasted it in an idle way with a robin redbreast that was swaying on a branch of the sycamore in front of my window. They were very much alike, and apparently were very well pleased with themselves and the world around them.

After that I grew accustomed to look for the little red figure on the gate, and was glad to see that robin was making preparation for a home in the sycamore. I even assisted in a small way by scattering some fine straw out of the window and accompanying it with a handful of bread crumbs. And I was inordinately elated to find that both my gifts were cheerfully accepted. When the day was overcast, I did not go to my window, and at such times I wondered if my two neighbors were also oppressed by the weather. I liked to think of the three of us as being creatures of the sunshine.

On the very warm, bright days my window was occasionally opened to let in the air, and at such times I felt myself a degree nearer to my companions. Thus it was that one afternoon I heard a voice from the house opposite call, "Florence," and saw the little red figure slip down from the gate and hurry up the walk to the piazza. And that was my introduction to her name.

I do not think I am naturally envious, but one afternoon when I saw Florence drop from the gate, and go speeding down the street, to be caught up by strong arms and swung to the enviable height of a pair of broad, well-shaped shoulders, I confess that I had a sudden, sharp pang of regret, or discontent, or something. There is so much in the world that we do not understand. An hour or so later I saw them drive out behind a pair of fine grays, the Strong Man holding the lines, and the lady looking very happy and contented, and between them Florence, her face glowing with health and anticipation. I could hear their laughter even after they had passed the bend in the road, which is concealed by the foliage of wild apple-trees.

After that I noticed that the Strong Man appeared every afternoon with the arrival of the express from the city, and I concluded that he was in business, and went away on the morning train. And every afternoon I noticed Florence would swing on the gate until a shrill whistle sounded from the next corner, and then would go speeding down the street, to be caught up to the broad shoulders, or to swing herself along by the aid of the Strong Man's finger. And day by day our acquaintance progressed to the interchanging of constant observation on my part for an occasional curious glance on hers, as though she wondered how a man could stay in the house when there was so much sunshine outside.

One afternoon, as I was gazing dreamily across the lawn, I noticed a dark object steal cautiously from the hedge. Little by little it approached the sycamore, and at last I saw it was a cat, and that the objective point was the low branch which the too-confiding robin had selected as a home-site.

My window was down, and although there was every reason to believe the cat would reach the nest, I was powerless. But in the midst of my perturbation came an expostulatory, "Dit away, itty; dit away!" and a little red figure hurried across the street and into my yard. Florence had been watching the invader also.

But the cat was not to be so easily thwarted. As the little girl dodged in one direction he skulked in another, and when she threw stones he avoided them by springing lightly aside. At last she turned to my window:

"Turn! turn, wick, wick!" she said. "Help de robin!"

But I could only shake my head.

For a moment she gazed in wondering, indignant amazement, and then, without vouchsafing me another glance, renewed her attack upon the cat. And he, daunted perhaps by her sudden accession of energy, gave way little by little, and finally turned and skulked off into the hedge. Florence followed up her advantage with a few stones, which sent him skurrying toward the woods, and then recrossed the street and entered her own yard, too indignant to even stop for another swing upon the gate.

For the next two weeks she studiously avoided looking in my direction. Every afternoon she was on her gate, but during that time I do not think that she once glanced toward my window.

Then one day a carriage came to my door, and a strong man carried me out and placed me tenderly in the invalid's chair which it contained. And as we moved slowly out into the street, I saw Florence watching me from her gate, her eyes full of grieved, wondering inquiry.

It was many days before I returned, but when I did the world was a clear world to me, for the doctors had said something which had sent the blood coursing through my veins with the mighty impulse of renewed hope.

A few days later I was again at my window, and now my thoughts were anticipatory instead of retrospective. In the yard opposite I could see a little red figure apparently gathering something among the grass. Then I saw her cross the street and hurry eagerly up the path to my front door.

"Is the sick gentleman well?" I heard a clear, anxious little voice ask.

"He is better. Would you like to see him?"

"No, no! Please give him these flowers. I love him."

Then there was a brief pause, followed by a sudden burst of passionate sobbing. As I glanced from the window I saw her run past crying as though her heart would break. Before she reached the street my own eyes became so misty that they lost her.

The next afternoon I prepared as dainty an invitation as I could, and sent it over by the servant girl. It requested the company of Miss Florence to an informal tea at half-past four, and purported to be from Mr. and Mrs. Robin Redbreast and myself.—Frank H. Sweet, in Western Christian Advocate.

NEW TESTAMENT LOGIC.

By Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things," therefore, cease to pray. No, no; that is not the New Testament logic. Rather does it say unto us: Your heavenly Father knows all about you; therefore carry all your wants to him in prayer. Knock, because the door will be opened unto you. Ask, because you will receive. Seek, because you will surely find.

Thus the foreknowledge of God logically co-operates with the prayer of Faith.

Never give way to despondency—look up, and trust in God. "The very cloud that shades the life may be the means of irrigating it" and making it happy and fruitful.

Christian men and women "generally enjoy themselves best when helping others." Those who receive all and give nothing are apt to "think more highly of themselves than they ought to think."

* * *

The development of personal religion is the first business of a Christian, but the cultivation should not be confined to any one virtue. Otherwise, an ill-balanced character will be the outcome. To excel in one virtue may be natural, but no grace can be neglected except at the peril of the soul. St. Peter's exhortation is always in place.

Methodism still furnishes a large number of recruits to other churches. It would be fair to say that two-thirds of our preachers, in reporting revivals, especially from the country charges, inform us that other churches shared in the fruits of the work. Sometimes nearly half the converts go to swell the membership of some other denomination. Whether revivals in other churches ever help the Methodists, we are unable to say. We never see any mention made of such a thing in any of their denominational papers.

HAPPY HOMES.

That God designed the earth to be peopled with happy men and women we do not for a moment doubt. To accomplish this end he ordained the union of one man and one woman in holy matrimony. This is said in full view of the fact that married life is not always happy, and does not always result in happy homes. But the failure, be it often or seldom, is not to be attributed to the marriage state. Free love never made a home at all.

The essentials of a happy home are several. First of all the man and wife must love each other, and give to each other the fullest confidence. It is impossible to conceive of happy home-building where these two essentials are lacking. Love may exist without perfect confidence. In that case jealousy may be engendered, and the happiness of an otherwise well-matched pair be destroyed. There must also be a desire on the part of each other to be a helpmeet. The bread-winner, on his part, must be honest and industrious, and do the best he can for the comfort and care of his wife. The wife, on her part, must use to the best advantage what the husband provides, and be a home-keeper, as well as a housekeeper. Thriftiness on the part of one may go for naught, because of the extravagance or indifference of the other.

If children are added to the home they become at once the objects of care and solicitude of both parents, and call for proper training, as well as for necessary food and raiment. This brings to mind another essential—a complete home—viz. consecration to the service of God. Without this, whatever else husband and wife may be, they lack the one thing necessary to complete happiness, and fullest qualification for the successful rearing of children. Possessing the essentials named, any home cannot be otherwise than happy.

Many people entertain the idea that there can be no happy homes unless families live in fine, well-furnished houses, and are well-to-do in worldly goods. These things may contribute, but are not essential. Misery too often dwells concealed in palace walls. Much happiness is often found in the hovels of the poor. As unhappy people as we ever knew were rich. Some of the happiest homes we ever entered were barely above the line of poverty.

Now and then social economists express a desire to make happy homes universal. To do this they would abolish poverty, supposing that if there were no poor people there would be no unhappy families. The desire is commendable, but one's observation must be egregiously limited if he has seen only enough of the world to convince him that poverty is the source or cause of family misery. And he must have little knowledge of human nature if he supposes that to abolish poverty will put an end to family unhappiness. Certainly if nothing else is required to make people happy than to put them in good dwellings and supply their temporal needs, the road to happiness would be short. But, were it possible to put every poor family out of misery by giving it a deed in fee simple to a good home, well furnished, and otherwise set it up in the world, how long would the inmates, especially those who live in slums of the cities, hold the title? The saloon man, whose liquor keeps the slum-dwellers in poverty, can answer the question more readily than some social reformers.

Poverty can never be abolished. Jesus said, "the poor ye have always with you." We suppose they will always be found in the world. If social reformers would reduce poverty to the minimum they must abolish that which mainly produces poverty. But as long as liquor is made and used, so long will poverty exist to the fullest extent, and the generous-hearted public be compelled to care for its victims.

We wonder why social reformers—whose motives we do not question—in all their plans for relief of their fellows, overlook the only essential factor in the permanent elevation and betterment of society—the religion of our blessed Lord. Whether all poor families are ever to be put in good homes and raised above want, are small matters compared to giving them the gospel, and bringing them to a knowledge of salvation. Get them to leave off their sins and accept Christ, and whether they live in poverty or plenty, in fine houses or huts, they will be happy, and thank God for their deliverance.

RUDDERLESS AND GOALLESS.

Without a goal no mariner can make a certain destination. His voyage is aimless. Without a rudder, even with a goal in view, he is at the mercy of the wind and waves, utterly unable to direct his course. A man to-day would be foolhardy to undertake an ocean voyage on a ship without a rudder, and going, no one knows whither. But how much more foolish is the man who undertakes the voyage of life on an uncertain sea, without a definite goal in view, and without any trustworthy power to direct his course. To assume that there is no God, no hereafter, and no power outside of himself, puts the man beyond the pale of reasonable beings. He writes himself a fool, and there is an end of argument so far as he is concerned. But is the man any better off who believes in God and his revelation, but lives daily in negligence or defiance of his Word?

The Lord sets before every man a sure and certain goal—the crown of righteousness, reserved in heaven. The way to obtain it is clearly marked out, and no man need start for it as though going on a voyage without compass or rudder. He does not permit his faithful ones to be driven and tossed about on uncertain seas. They do sometimes encounter storms—the clouds get dark, and the waves roll high—but the compass and the rudder are never uncertain. The Word directs the proper course, and the blessed Spirit controls the vessel. The landing will be made in safety. No soul that ever embarked by faith, and trusted implicitly in the great Pilot, was ever lost. Under his skillful hand the ship never goes astray, for the steering-gear never breaks.

It is essential to keep the faith once delivered to the saints. This no man can do who loses confidence in the Word of God, or any part of it. To undertake the sifting process with a view to separate the false from the true is a dangerous process—for there is no false; or, if so, then all is false and unreliable. The process will lead to confusion, if not to ship-wreck of the faith. The process is working out its legitimate results. It is putting lecturers in our pulpits instead of preachers, and where it has not utterly undermined the faith in the supernatural it is creating a formal and unevangelical type of religion. We sometimes hear it said that a certain man was once a vital evangelical force, but now he is dead and formal. His preaching without power. Why? Every critic knows.

And these sifters of the Word, while ostensibly pointing their hearers to the goal, have them on a rudderless ship. They had as well blot out the hope of heaven.

PERSONALS.

Rev. H. R. Hill, Jr., son of Dr. H. R. Hill, once a pastor in New Orleans, has been transferred from the Kentucky Conference to the Mississippi Conference.

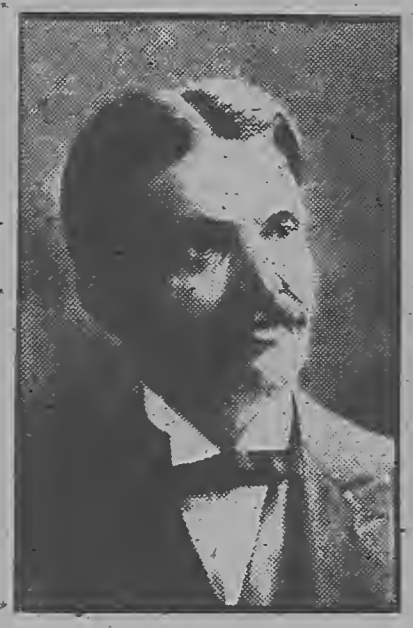
Rev. H. R. Gibson, Jr., who went down four years ago from the Louisiana to the St. Louis Conference, will return and take his place in the old ranks. The Louisiana preacher will give him a hearty greeting.

Rev. Thos. H. Lacey, presiding elder, held a fine meeting at Carrollton recently, and raised sixteen hundred dollars to build a church. The property, when completed, will be worth $3,500. This item of news comes to us from Brother J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, Miss.

Rev. J. E. Williams, pastor of our Church at Tylertown, Miss., has conducted some excellent meetings, resulting in quite a number of conversions and additions to the Church. He is succeeding well in his works. He is now working for a club of subscribers, and feels sure he will succeed.

Bishop Wand will spend Sunday next and the greater part of the following week in New Orleans. Sunday morning he will preach at Rayne Memorial, and in the evening he will be with the brethren of the First Church, Rev. J. Caroudelet. The Bishop will be here to look over the field in advance of the Annual Conference session, and the brethren are looking forward to his visit with much interest.

Rev. R. N. Meek informs us that Rev. J. M. Bradley, of Clarksdale, Miss., has been transferred to the St. Louis Conference, and stationed at Charlestown, Mo. Rev. R. T. Neblett takes his place at Clarksdale. Brother Bradley is one of our very best young men, active and useful and a fine preacher, with promise of a great future. We surrender him to Missouri reluctantly, but wish him abundant success.



We present on our front page this week a good likeness of Rev. J. D. Newsom, of the North Mississippi Conference. He has been in the itinerancy ever since 1848—a man tried and true. He is now superannuated, but in good health and able to do some preaching. He became a subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from the first issue, has written a great deal for it, and contributes occasionally, even now. May it be light with him in the evening time!

Mrs. Elizabeth Watkins, whose sickness was noted in this column last week, passed to her reward on the morning of September 20, in the eighty-ninth year of her age. She was a native of Liverpool, England, but had been a resident of the United States since her tenth year. In early life she married Rev. W. H. Watkins, one of the pioneers of Methodism in Mississippi, and shared with him for many years the fortunes of an itinerant's life. Dr. A. F. Watkins and other surviving children will have the sympathy of a host of friends in their bereavement.

Rev. L. W. Lewis, our pastor at Tupelo, Miss., furnishes us the following notice: "Sister J. T. Cunningham was buried here to-day, September 25. She died suddenly last Sunday morning. Nearly 47 years ago she married Rev. J. T. Cunningham, and was one of the best wives and mothers I have ever known. She leaves eight children. Two are preachers, Revs. J. E. and Hal P. Cunningham, and one a preacher's wife, Rev. Mrs. Hobson." We deeply sympathize with the bereaved ones, and trust they find comfort even in their sorrow. We have in hand a tribute from the pen of Rev. N. G. Augustus, which we will print next week.

REV. THEO. COPELAND.

Rev. Theo. Copeland has been transferred to the St. Louis Conference and stationed at St. Paul's Church, St. Louis. This will be surprising news to Brother Copeland's many friends. He has been pastor of Rayne Memorial Church in New Orleans less than one year. He came to the city from Columbus, Ga., under peculiar, not to say embarrassing, circumstances. He took hold of the work in a modest, but effective way, and won at the very beginning the respect of his congregation, and soon won their confidence. He has shown himself to be a gentleman and a Christian. He is a man of attractive personality, a good preacher, and growing all the time. He goes to one of the prominent churches of St. Louis, and we heartily recommend him to the brethren of his new charge, and hope he may be abundantly blessed. We regret to see him leave our city.

The following paper, adopted by the members and officers of Rayne Memorial Church, is expressive of the feeling of the congregation towards our beloved brother:

In view of the fact that our Pastor, Brother Theo Copeland, has been transferred to the St. Louis Conference, we deem it fitting to express our sincere appreciation of his many striking qualities.

He came to us and conditions sadly discouraging and such as to try the hearts of men. With kind consideration for others and the exercise of sanctified common sense, he has succeeded in harmoniously adjusting the differences that vexed the Church and in winning the confidence and love of its membership.

His prayerful and deeply pious ministry have done much to draw us all nearer to God and to sustain His Church. Personally, he has impressed us as a Christian gentleman, worthy of the esteem and admiration which we hereby take pleasure in expressing, and we wish in this manner to assure him of our sincere love and friendship.

We heartily commend him to the confidence of his new charge and assure him of the prayers and affectionate esteem of the officers and members of Rayne Memorial Church.

A YEAR OF GREAT RESULTS.

From the reports all over the Conference it seems that this has been a great year for the ingathering of souls. We notice with pleasure reports of great revivals with many of the brethren.

And we are truly grateful to be able to tell you that the Grenada District will come in for its share of the increase. We expect to report a thousand souls in the District. Our own work has been conducted by Divine Will. When we came on the work we asked God for fifty souls, but after canvassing the work, it dawned that we had asked a great thing, owing to the scarcity of people in the bounds of the work. But God has given us seventy-four, for which we are very grateful, and to him be all the glory. "For by the grace of God we are what we are."

We have had a revival in each Church, and some very great revivals. We began at Lamar, the second Sunday in July. Brother Fullilove, of New Albany, came over and preached ten days; as a result of the meeting we have a great reformation in Lamar. We only had two accessions to the Church. Then at Rice's Chapel I did my own preaching and had twenty-five conversions and twenty-four accessions.

From this place we went to Harris Chapel. Here Brother R. H. B. Gladney came to me on Tuesday. We had the greatest manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost that it has been my privilege to witness in a long time. People were converted at the Church and at home as well. The whole community seemed to be permeated with the spirit of the Master. It was a complete victory. We received fourteen into the Church, and some very substantial material. Next we went to Early Grove. Brother W. R. Williams assisted there to the delight and edification of the Church. We had a good meeting and five accessions. We closed out at Mt. Hope last week with a great victory. At this place there were seventeen added to the Church. I like to have forgotten to say that Brother Brown, of Byhalia came over and preached four days for us at Sylvestria to the great delight of us all. All of these brethren are strong preachers, men of God. We have had the best year of our life, God be praised.

W. R. GOUDELOCK.

MATHISTON MISSION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: This is my first attempt to let the readers of the Advocate hear how we are moving on the Mathiston Mission. I came here in January, 1905. The first three months of the year I was wholly unable to survey the field owing to bad weather and sickness. The first Sunday in April I began my first round. I found very little to encourage me, and I soon saw that the churches were in very bad condition and I went to praying, preaching and working that the church might be baptized with the Holy Spirit, that the members of the church might be witnesses unto Christ. O how I longed to see this power in the church, and to see her stirred and moving for God and the right. All my preaching was to the church during the year, and I closed the year without having a single revival. The Bishop and his cabinet thought it best to send me back the second year. Of course, I came willingly, and have tried to do the bidding of the Master, and God is giving us a great year in many respects.

My first meeting was at Cumberland, the third Sunday in July. We had a very good meeting, but not any conversions and no accessions to the church. The fourth Sunday in July we were ready to begin here at Mathiston, and Brother H. H. Estes, of Greenwood, Miss., was with us, and did the preaching until Thursday at noon.

Rev. G. W. Bachman came to us Thursday and preached until Sunday night. These brethren are both able men and did good work, but we had no conversions and no accessions to the church.

The first Sunday in August Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Starkville, met me at Double Springs, and there we had a great meeting. God was there in power, and under the preaching of Brother Bowlin the church was stirred as it has not been for years. We had the greatest revival there that had been in twenty years. Sixteen or eighteen conversions; eighteen joined the Methodist Church and several joined the Baptist Church.

The third Sunday in August we began at Providence. The church was wonderfully revived. Six conversions and six joined the Methodist Church. The fourth Sunday in August we began at Old Lagrange. Brother Marvin Johnson came to me Monday. We had a good service Monday morning, and Brother Johnson preached in the evening. We had another good service. God saved two souls. Brother Johnson did the preaching Tuesday, and was called away to conduct the burial service over two men that were killed in the northwest portion of Webster County. He came back Thursday and preached Thursday and Friday. God blessed us by pouring out his Spirit upon the church and by saving twelve souls. We had fourteen accessions to the church, twelve of which were on profession of faith. Brother Johnson is a good preacher and a revivalist as well.

The first Saturday and Sunday in September was my third Quarterly Conference occasion at Long Branch. Brother Lipscomb, our belover presiding elder, was on hand. We had the best conference of the year. Brother Lipscomb preached three good sermons—Saturday, Sunday and Sunday night. The sermon Sunday night was one of the most powerful that I have ever heard. This left us in good shape for a meeting. We continued until Friday night, and the old people of the community say there has never been such a meeting at Long Branch. I am sure I have never been in such a meeting in my life. Thursday night and Friday were services that will never be forgotten, because of the presence of God manifested in his people. God saved thirty souls during the meeting. Twenty-seven joined the Methodist Church. Many of the members of the church have declared they have more religion than they ever had, and have vowed to God and before the church and the world that they were going to live for God the remainder of their days.

I give God all the praise for what he has done for me and the people. May we magnify him as God the Father of all. I am yours fraternally.

ESCATAWPA, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed out a great meeting at Escatawpa. The attendance was large from the beginning to the close of the meeting. I was assisted by Brothers T. B. Cottrell, of Scranton, and W. B. Lewis, of Moss Point, Miss. Their preaching was forceful and pointed. I was fortunate in getting these men to assist me in my meeting. Some people seem to think that they must have an evangelist or their meetings will be a failure, but my experience has impressed me that the most permanent good (as a rule) has been accomplished by our pastors. They are called of God and he has taught them how to preach the Gospel of Christ with good results. I have no fight to make with those who want evangelists, but I prefer to have my brethren who are in the pastorate to assist me in my meetings. This is my fourth year on the Escatawpa charge and it is the best of the four, for which I feel thankful to the Great Head of the church.

R. H. BARR, P. C.

SLAUGHTER, LA.

Dear Brother: I closed a meeting at Slaughter yesterday, which lasted ten days. It was a good meeting. The church was greatly revived and two members were received into the church. Brother John G. Snellings, of Bunkie, assisted me. He is good help. We organized an Epworth League of 23 members. Fraternally.

HATTIESBURG MISS.

Dear Brother: I had the pleasure of being with Rev. G. W. Huff, in a protracted meeting, last week, held in Mt. Tabor Church, one of the churches on the Eastabuchie Charge, of which Brother Huff is pastor.

The meeting was spiritual and uplifting from the first service to the close. Sin was reproved, man's accountability to God was stressed, repentance, faith and regeneration was preached. The Holy Spirit convicted many of the people, some yielded and were blessed. Eleven persons united with our Church. At the close of the meeting there were people under conviction, and if Brother Huff could have consigned the meeting several days longer, doubtless others would have yielded themselves to Christ and the church.

Brother Huff fearlessly reproves sin, and yet with such solicitude for the salvation of the sinner that those who hear him are attracted. He is in favor with his people.

The community in which the Mt. Tabor Church is located, is a stronghold of immersionists, and yet not one of the candidates for church membership objected to baptism by affusion.

I believe we should stand firmly on the doctrines and teachings of our Church, and that we should broadcast with our literature these places where there is so much crop in reference to the polity and practice of the M. E. Church, South. Yours fraternally,
H. B. VANDEVENDER.

McCOOL, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have just finished up my protracted meetings for the charge, and the results are very gratifying. Fifty-eight have been received into the church to date, with six more to be received. I was assisted at McCool by Rev. W. L. Stone, an one of our young men. His sermons were of fine thought and of power. Our people say that his preaching was the best that McCool has received in a revival in a long time. He is a coming man of our Conference.

At Tabernacle we had the help of one of Mississippi's bright young men, Jesse W. McGee, who is also a fine preacher and revivalist. Then we had the help of Rev. J. J. Garner at Lily City Chapel, another good preacher and revivalist. I am thankful that we do not have to have our own ranks to find evangelists. Then we had the help of our own W. B. Hull, a faithful local preacher, and a man that is loved by everyone and a good preacher. The fruits of the rest of the preceding.

My charge is in a prosperous condition. Sunday Schools at each appointment; two prayer meetings and our Conference collections are nearly all provided for and will all be paid in full (D. V.).

The Advocate has been looked after, securing in all during the year thirty-seven new subscribers and several renewals. With the good things that have come our way we have had some sorrows. Death has entered into a number of homes and taken some members, but our people die well.

We will close our year's work at our Fourth Quarterly Conference with the dedication of one of our new churches. Success to the Advocate. Fraternally,
J. A. GOAD.

RURAL HILL CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have had some very fine revivals in the Rural Hill Charge.

Brother R. E. Duke, of Ackerman, was with me at Center Ridge and White Hall, and did fine work. Twenty-nine were added to the roll of these two churches.

Our meeting at Plattsburg was good. Rev. J. D. McWhorter did most of the preaching. At Macedonia the writer did all the preaching. Thirty-two joined the Church at that place. We report sixty-two additions to date.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. LESSON FOR OCT. 14, 1906.

THE TEN VIRVINS.

(Matt. xxv. 1-13.)

Golden Text: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

Jesus was leaving the temple in sadness, where he had a short time before entered in triumph. In sadness, because they, the chief of them, to whom he had come, would not receive him. As he and his followers went out, the disciples called his attention to the grandeur and beauty of the temple: but the gloom of impending ruin and desolation dimmed his eyes, and from this he began to tell them of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, and also of his second coming, and of the end of the world. His manner toward them was full of love. He was among his own indeed now, and he parted the veil of the future, so that they could learn that which we must learn from this lesson: watchfulness.

The awful import of his words was verified by his saying: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Then along the line of being prepared for whatever, in God's Providence, may come, he gave them another parable to which he likened the kingdom of heaven, the parable of The Ten Virgins.

In making the application of this parable, let us not be led away from the one object for which the Master used it. At this time, when the Shepherd was about to be taken away with all his protecting care, the sheep needed to be impressed with the urgent need of watchfulness. They would have many dangers to pass through and many struggles. Only a few more days would pass ere they would forsake him, and by fleeing away seek elsewhere for safety. Yea, all but Peter and John would leave him to his fate, and Peter would do that which he was warned beforehand that he would do. It was a sad and solemn time for the Lord, because he saw all this as if it had already occurred, hence his soul "was exceeding sorrowful, even unto death."

The awful destruction of the world, the final judgment and the second coming of the Lord with all his saints may occur at any time; so may death come to each and every individual at an hour that they think not, and when death comes to the individual, then the other events are all consummated as to his past. We are not to be watchful as against the time of these things to happen, but the watchfulness must be a continuous condition. "Be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Jesus did not use the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, and the unknown day and hour of his return, for the conversion of sinners. Neither is it compatible to the work of the ministry at any time to preach a gospel having for its background a darkened sun and falling stars. On that Sabbath day, in the synagogue at Nazareth, when Jesus was reading from the book of Isaiah, of his mission on earth, he closed the book without reading "the day of vengeance of our God," the words with which Isaiah finishes the passage, for "God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten son." So then our service to God is begun in love, and watchfulness is urged, lest we forget that in ourselves we are weak and unable to do the things we ought; and do the things we ought not. On a certain time one asked Jesus: "Lord are there few that be saved?" Jesus' answer did not indicate that there should be an equal number saved and lost; and the equal division of the wise and foolish virgins has no significance in that respect; but we are led into the reflection of existing conditions in our own day and time. The few earnest, consecrated, active Christians; and the many nominal Christians and worldly people.

The five virgins that met the bridegroom and went in with him to the feast were designated as being wise. This is the wisdom so often commended in Proverbs; the same that Jesus says is from above: "First pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good points, without partiality and without hypocrisy." James 3d, 17.

The five foolish virgins thought they were wise enough until the time of proof came. With a privilege of the full assurance of faith there need never be any doubt in the mind of the followers of Jesus. The best way is to always abound in the work of the Lord. Being busy in good work will keep Satan away; and when he does come and makes an assault, we have the shield of Faith and the Sword of the Spirit.

The last thought of the lesson is the second coming of the Lord. When from the Mount of Olives Jesus was ascending into heaven, and perhaps had disappeared behind the clouds, angels, messengers from heaven, came to comfort the flock that had seemingly lost its Shepherd, by telling them that as sure as they had just seen him go away, in like manner he would come again.

Search the New Testament and see how many times Jesus, himself, taught this, and how often St. Paul and the other writers tell us of it as a certainty. "Ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh," but we know that when he does come we must be found true and loyal to the great Captain of our salvation. "It is a glorious hope that he will come and put an everlasting end to sin and this continual battle against evil that engages the soldiers of Christ.

CARROLLTON AVENUE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

"The Call of the City, and How the Woman's Home Mission Society is Answering It," was the League topic for Sept. 30. The last Sunday in each month is observed as "missionary Sunday." An increased interest is being taken in the lesson of each succeeding Sunday. On last Sunday the attendance was an even fifty. The address and prayers and songs were inspiring. The problems confronting the Church were presented in short addresses by Misses Kuntz and Holmes and Mrs. Carter.

Mrs. Meekins, who has charge of the "Mary Werlein Mission" in the factory districts of New Orleans, in a very interesting and heartfelt talk, told how the workers at the mission were proceeding with the work. There is much to be done; the workers are few, but the workers are more than compensated in the joy and blessings they bring into the lives of the lowly, illiterate, suffering and unfortunate. Such a meeting is always a blessing to Epworth Leaguers.

The fourth vice-president, Mrs. Jacob Cohen, takes a lively interest in League work, and is succeeding well in interesting the Leaguers on missionary lines.

Brother W. W. Holmes, the pastor, is to be congratulated on the work of his League.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 9, the Epworth League Union will be held at Carrollton Avenue Church. The principal address will be given by Bishop Seth Ward.

GILBERT CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have just closed a very successful revival at Holly Grove Church, Gilbert Charge. The work was thorough and we believe it will stand. There were many conversions, fifteen accessions and a great spiritual uplift given to the church.

Brother W. J. Elliott, of Montgomery, La., did the preaching. He is a fervent Gospel preacher, strong, clear and solid. He presents the truth in a lucid, enthusiastic manner.

Men from other churches were blessed and made to rejoice.

One good Baptist brother said to me: "This is no protracted meeting; this is a spiritual feast."

We have been moving along nicely with our work this year. Have purchased some furniture for parsonage and done some work on it. Our finances are in good shape. We have received more than twenty into the church. Think that we will be able to make a gilt-edge report at Conference. Fraternally,

BROTHER MITCHELL IS CONVINCED.

To what a pass have we come in the North Mississippi Conference! The theological tangents of the younger set are of little moment, but when the pole star of orthodoxy begins to wobble we are lost. When the mud sill of conservatism gives way we climb a tree.

The constitution of our states and nation are the tests of the validity of our statutes. Likewise our Articles of Faith are the test of the orthodoxy of our teachings.

Brother Mitchell has been holding the light on high for many a year and Methodism has flourished and prospered under his ministry. He has met the errors of Calvinism on many a hard-fought field and put them to ignominious flight with the good weapon of Wesleyan Arminianism. But hold! He has read the Articles again in the Discipline, and he finds them to be unintelligible to the masses, unless expounded by a sage, and a black darkness to many of the laity for the purpose of doctrine. Surely, so grave a discovery should give us pause.

Having been convicted by reading the Articles themselves, and in the Discipline at that, and converted under the persuasive reasoning of the high priest of revision, he exhorts us all to sit at the feet of this oracle and become convinced that he will do Methodism no harm.

I have read Dr. Tillett's review article with great care, and he succeeds in establishing my belief that any revision or restatement of our Articles of Faith would be a work of supererogation. He shows conclusively that these Articles have driven Calvinism from revision to revision until it is about ready to embrace Arminianism. Surely there can be nothing resembling decrepitude in an arm which has dealt such destructive blows to error.

Brother Mitchell concludes by telling us that no one can object to a fair discussion. I agree that no one should object to a fair discussion. But Dr. Tillett indulges the most reprehensible form of unfairness in his review article. He deliberately seeks to place Bishop Hoss before the Church in the attitude of favoring the position he seeks to sustain, whereas he knows perfectly well that the Bishop is seriously opposed to any such thing. If this is not his design, then he attempts to convict Bishop Hoss of inconsistency without directly affirming it to be his purpose.

As Brother Mitchell so truly remarks concerning Mr. Bingham, Bishop Hoss can take care of himself, and of the rest of us, too, thank God, and I have no sort of doubt that he will be found doing so very shortly, and in a very thorough fashion.

The hope inspired by this belief revives me. Brother Mitchell convinced made me tremble for our faith, but thanks be unto God "while the lamp holds out to burn" etc.

J. D. BARBEE, Jr.

CARROLLTON (MISS.) CHARGE.

Christian Advocate: The Valley Hill Church was built during the pastorate of Rev. Eugene Johnson. From the beginning the church was a success. The prosperity and growth continued during the pastorate of Rev. W. E. M. Brogan. This has probably been the most prosperous year of the church up to this time. The recent meeting was a very successful one, and was the more notable because of the fact that most of the preaching was done by our pastor, Brother Moss. He has not only impressed us by his able pulpit ministrations, but has completely won us by his kind and affable disposition in our homes, where no minister has found a more cordial welcome. Like reports come from Smith's Chapel, Coila and Carrollton, the other churches served by Brother Moss.

The administration of Rev. Thos. H. Dorsey as presiding elder is satisfactory in all respects. We deem ourselves fortunate to have two such good men to be our faithful ministers this year.

A Bumper Wheat Crop.

To produce a "bumper" wheat crop, it is absolutely necessary that you supply to your land one or more of the three elements of plant food which your soil so badly needs; phosphoric acid, nitrogen (or ammonia) and potash. The liberal use of

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers,

(say 200 to 500 pounds to the acre), will meet this deficiency. You know the highest grades are always cheaper, as they produce greater yields. These fertilizers on account of the phosphoric acid they contain, promote the growth and development of the grain and hasten maturity; the nitrogen or ammonia of which they are a part, increases the growth of leaves and stalk and its potash gives strength to the stalk and assists in the development of the grain.

So use VIRGINIA-CAROLINA FERTILIZERS and greatly "Increase your yields per acre." Don't buy any substitute brand, which some dealer may tell you "Is just as good." If he cannot supply you, write us direct for the goods and tell us your dealer's name.

Little MAURICE, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Richard D. Lipscomb, was born Dec. 15, 1904; went to join the angels around the throne of God in heaven, where thousands of children are, on Aug. 6, 1906. It was, indeed, a sad trial for those left on earth to part with this little curly, fair-haired darling. In disposition there was never a sweeter child. Though very young, his affection for those he knew was always the same. Just before he passed out from this life he opened wide his bright, blue eyes, and put up his little parched lips to bid mama and papa a farewell kiss, smiled and went home to God. Sad parents, why do you grieve for this little one? He is safe now with Jesus, and if you have not already the abiding peace of God's love, get right down and ask God to help you. Then it will all be made clear and some sweet day you shall meet, bye-and-bye. Our heart-felt sympathies go out to you in this sad trial, and we pray God to help you so when your summons comes you will be prepared to meet this precious little one in the sweet beyond. A LOVED ONE.

Mrs. MARY ERWIN was an excellent Christian woman, well beloved by all who knew her. She was almost an invalid for years, and amid all her afflictions and sorrows she was never known to murmur or complain at the providence of God. We shall always remember her sincere candor, her true friendship, her faithfulness as a member of the church, and as long as she was able nothing gave her more pleasure than to attend church services. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South. Sister Erwin had been married twice, first to Mr. S. M. Stone. This union was blessed with four children, two of whom preceded her to the glory world, having died in infancy. She was married the second time to Mr. W. L. Erwin. He also preceded her to the world of spirits. She was a widow lady for many years and lived with her only daughter, Mrs. Mary Shelby, at Hermanville, Miss. She was born October, 1826, and died Aug. 6, 1906. Sister Erwin being a cripple, it was very difficult for her to even get about the house without help. Several weeks before her death she fell on the back porch, her head striking one of the columns. Notwithstanding all that skilled physicians and friends and loved ones could do, she never survived. She died the death of the righteous and has gone home to reap her reward, where there shall be no more pain, death and parting. They mourn, but not as those who have no hope. We shall meet her again. J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

MRS. LUCY FLEMING (nee Somerindyke), beloved wife of Brother Eugene F. Fleming, was born in the city of Baton Rouge, Oct. 26, 1854, and died in Brooktown Aug. 19, 1906. She was converted at the early age of eighteen years, and soon thereafter joined the First Methodist Church, of Baton Rouge, under the ministry of Dr. C. W. Carter, and lived a beautiful Christian life until her translation. In her young life in Baton Rouge she was a devoted and successful Sunday school worker, and her entire life was Christly in the service of humanity. She was a skillful and tender nurse, and when a neighbor fell sick she was first at the bedside and night and day fought fever and pain, and sanctified her service with prayer. I consider this the most beautiful Christian life I ever knew. She excelled in every Christian virtue, and was preeminently an angel of sunshine. She was always optimistical and cheerful and an hour spent in her company was refreshing and inspiring, and caused one to rejoice and thank God that he still had a few choice spirits here upon earth in whose lives were incarnated the sublimest principles of the teachings of Christ. When the end came she was not only ready, but anxious to go, and died as she had lived in the triumphs of a noble Christian faith. She leaves a devoted Christian husband, three sons and two daughters to mourn her loss. But they are all in the way that she led them in, and will meet her some day in heaven. We laid her to rest in Magnolia Cemetery in Baton Rouge, Brother R. W. Tucker preaching the funeral to a large concourse of surrounding friends and relatives.

J. W. LEE.

HENRY TYLER HESTER was born in north Georgia June 19, 1836, and died in Neshoba county, Miss., Aug. 25, 1906. Brother Hester joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when he was a small boy and lived faithful to his obligations till he answered to roll call in the church triumphant. Brother Hester was happily married to Miss Emeline Crowthers Sept. 11, 1865. She was a faithful companion and still survives to mourn her irreparable loss. There were five children born to Brother and Sister Hester. Three of them preceded their father to the glory land. Two sons, Luke and John, still live, and are proving themselves worthy successors of their noble father. Brother Hester was always kind in his home, and his house was always open to his preacher. He loved Sunday school work and was a regular attendant upon the Sunday school until feeble old age prevented him. He was a subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for thirty-eight successive years, and always enjoyed its weekly visits. In his death the country has lost a good citizen, and the church a true member; but our loss is his gain, for he expressed himself several times before his death as being willing and ready to go. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones. T. J. O'NEIL.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

The Kentucky Conference has just closed a remarkable session. Till quite recently its assembly was the signal of the battle array, and its adjournment was fraught with reminiscenses of intrigue and strategy, of the clamor and huzzar of the warring factions. But no Conference ever had more peaceful session, or more delightful fellowship, or less complaint of the appointments than the one just closed. The issue, so long obtrusive, was deliberately relegated and forgotten, in a wiser and more religious purpose of aggression, and the brethren dwell together in concord, rather than conflict. Only a verbal flash or two revealed the least friction in the year's administration, and no character was halted for even a moment. The collections for all purposes were in decided advance on the past, and more works reported in full than was ever known. The growth in membership indicated prevalence of a revival spirit, and the fussy appointment-makers were busy in the discussion and advancement of connectional interests. The new quadrennium, under the late General Conference action, starts off brightly, with not even a whisper about revision or restatement, content, I suppose, with the commission to whom the matter was referred.

Our mountain region is in closer touch with the blue grass, and what has recently served to evoke bitter criticism or a cheap compassion from far-away people, will soon be in competition for noble results, with our best circuits, as it was this year, for the entertainment of the next Conference.

The past year saw the complete destruction by fire of the main building of the Kentucky Wesleyan College, at Winchester, and through the devout or the mercantile zeal of the Commercial Club of that city, its more than complete rehabilitation, in more beautiful form, commodious appointments, and extensive cost. The college has opened with a larger matriculation on its first day than ever, and, if the traditional school custom obtains, assures an attendance nearly twice as great as it ever enjoyed. Better still, under the leadership of President H. K. Taylor, the outlook is hopeful for the unification of this and the Louisville Conference in our educational work. We are all very proud of President Taylor, who is a layman, and to the manor born. He has a reputation throughout the State as an educator, as a scholar, as a man of affairs, of energy and tact, as a brilliant and effective speaker, and withal, of such sweet, religious temperament as to win the confidence of parents and the love of pupils. So, here goes the gauntlet at the feet of other denominations in Kentucky and other schools in Southern Methodism—and here begins our ascent to our own place in the architecture of men.

Greatly to our surprise, there was but one in the class for admission into full connection—and to our joy that one was worthy. The address by Bishop Hendrix to him, and to the Conference, was worthy to have been heard by ten thousand. I have heard him repeatedly on such occasions, and on the platform, and in the pulpit, but he never measured up to this effort and did not seem to know his own altitude. He talked of "The Discovery of a Soul," as exhibited in the ministry of the Savior, in his sacrifice for sin, in the administration of Providence and then in the search of the pastor—in his realization of his success, and finally, its effect upon the pastor's personal character and happiness. [illegible] a thin veil which separates the seer and seat from the saint, and this effort of the Bishop, while not obstructing a florid vocabulary or reveling in literary memories or quotations, led us all into contemplation of the prophetic heights of the spiritual life and the eternal world. It was good to be there.

At all of our Conferences I have the [illegible] years we have been admitting too many—that is many who impoverish rather than enrich—who obstruct rather than advance us. I trust we are returning to wiser counsels. We need not fear a famine of the Divine Word if the firmness of the stewards who minister it, if we have the spiritual discernment to discover the spiritual gravity to attract them, as laity and ministry. All the worldliness in the church is not confined to its rich members, or the high-steepled church pastors. The movement of life is from above, and those intellectually or officially in eminent places, can lift their inferiors out of worldliness only by being there themselves. Covetousness, selfishness, both have many forms of expression, and they are as real and pernicious in æsthetic, evangelistic or rectoral garb, as in coarser and less admired ones. If worldliness has no discernment of spiritual things, it is quick to recognize its own, and it sees it whether it lifts or lowers its eyes. If there is upon those called to the ministry, as we all believe, restraining influence from a fascinating world, and a parsimonious church, there is also a repellant one from a class in the ministry quite often reminded of their virtues, but not often of their vices—just as prominent in the public eye.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us."

Just now we are, having in very many places in Kentucky a fierce conflict with the saloon power. By the action of our last Legislature, we have a "county-unity" law, through which, on a majority vote of a county, the saloons may be excluded from all the smaller towns and even the drug stores denied the liquor traffic. This means a conflict with the money—personal liberty—political influence, legal chicanery, which the saloon can command at any point from the entire State. The State has been thoroughly canvassed by temperance advocates, and public sentiment generally enlisted. The Republican Party has committed itself to the temperance cause and our Democratic Governor has conceded that the majority of his party are in its favor. It is no extravagance to say that the movement can control a large majority in the State, and the battle is on for local option.

We hale you from this parallel, and watch with interest all your efforts in this cause, and bid you godspeed.

THE BLACKSMITH EVANGELIST.

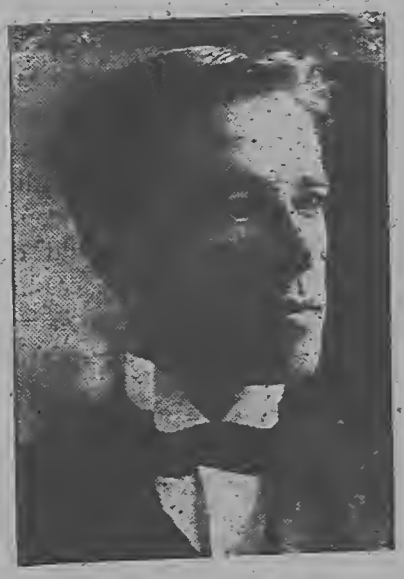
There was an old blacksmith converted down in the country where I come from—in Tennessee. He was a very ignorant man. A friend of mine met him on the street one day, and said to him: "Why don't you come up to the revival meeting?" He replied: "You 'tend to your business, and I'll 'tend to mine." "But," he said, "I am; I'm a preacher, and I want you to come up to the meetings." He said: "I'm a blacksmith; I'll 'tend to your preaching, and I'll 'tend to my blacksmithing." "Well," he said, "you come on up there; you can have a back seat, and sit there or go out whenever you please." Well he would not promise. But he came, and when the invitation was given he was the first man in the front [illegible]. And he did that thing as he did everything he went in it with his whole heart. Good old Tom Sexton, he always had his hair cut in such a funny way, he looked funny, he looked queer. And when they heard that Tom Sexton was converted everybody laughed. But he would go to church and tell the same thing—get up in prayer meetings anywhere.

First thing we knew he was beginning to hold cottage prayer meetings. A friend of mine, who was not a Christian told me that Tom came to his—and such a professor. I have to keep up with my blacksmithing. I have got nothing but an old gray horse down there, but I want to learn to read the good Book. I never cared to read before, but if you will teach me how to read the good Book, the old gray horse is yours." Well, my friend said: "Tom, if you really want to learn, I'll teach you; you can keep your old gray horse; but after I get through with my school in the afternoon I'll just pull the school bell, and you come along, and I'll teach you for nothing." He thanked him. My friend said he never dreamed that Tom would learn to read so soon as he did. At the end of a month he was beginning to read a few verses—wouldn't take any other reader but the Bible. And the next thing we knew he was beginning to hold little protracted meetings in school-houses in the winter time—he'd work all day and go along at night to hold his meetings. And people would come for miles to have some fun out of old Tom Sexton. He would tell the same thing night after night about how Jesus saved him—going right over the same thing, but they'd still keep coming; they'd pack the building, and these men who had come these miles to hear Tom would stay and take the same Jesus that he had. I have known prominent doctors and lawyers to give their hearts to God who went for the fun, but found out that Tom really had Jesus, and what a wonderful change He had wrought in ignorant old Tom. Then Tom began to get out to neighboring towns, and when I was down home just before coming here I saw over a great big hall in Knoxville, Tenn.—a city of over forty thousand to fifty thousand inhabitants—"The Rev. Thomas Sexton will begin a series of revival meetings here." That is the third or fourth time he has been in that city.

A man said he heard Tom get up one day down at Cartersville, Ga., where Sam Jones has his annual revival meetings, and he began to describe Paul and Silas in jail. He said he never heard anything like the way Tom pictured it. He had bad grammar, but he had good thoughts. He began to describe these two men in jail—he said:

"I can just imagine Paul and Silas there with their feet in the stocks and their backs all cutup and bleeding, and everything looked like it was against them, death seemed to be in front of them; and Paul says, 'Strike up a hymn, Silas.' But Silas says, 'You will have to excuse me, Brother Paul, my back's hurting so, and they've got the stocks round my feet so tight. The sing has all gone out of me, Paul.' And Paul says, 'Well, we've got to have a hymn, if I have to start it up myself.'" And Tom Sexton said: "I don't know what hymn Paul started up, but I believe if they knew this hymn, it would be like this:

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for everyone,
And there's a cross for me."



The man said he never saw an audience moved as that audience was.—C. H. Alexander, in The Advance.

Glances at the World.

Banker Stensland, who wrecked a big Chicago bank and fled the country, was overtaken in Tangier, Morocco, and brought back by an attorney and a newspaper reporter, who had tracked him all the way from Chicago. Fortunately, the Tangier authorities allowed the captors to embark with their prisoner and he was safely landed in New York in due time and brought without delay to Chicago. The banker made no defense whatever, pleading guilty to the charges, and in less than three hours after reaching Chicago his case was disposed of by the court, and within three hours after that he was landed in the prison at Joliet. That was quick work, owing, in part, to the fact that he did not fight the case. Cases of crime cannot always be disposed of as quickly, but in very many there is no reason for delay, and the oft-repeated delays, sometimes resulting in the miscarriage of justice, beget contempt for courts, and breed the lynching spirit, which abounds to the shame of our whole country.

A storm of almost unprecedented severity prevailed throughout this section and all along the Gulf coast on Wednesday and Thursday of last week. It was particularly severe at Mobile and Pensacola, destroying millions of dollars' worth of property, houses, ships, etc. It extended far inland, just how far, we cannot say. But immense damage was done to the cotton crop as far north as Memphis. The cotton, well nigh mature, but not all open, in many places was leveled to the ground. Rev. R. A. Meek, of Greenville, Miss., informs us that in Washington County alone it is estimated that the crop is damaged to the amount of one million of dollars. Old citizens living in the Florida parishes of Louisiana say there was never such a storm experienced in the country. There was a steady blow, with an occasional gust, at about twenty-five miles an hour, that uprooted, now and then, a tree, but did no further damage, save on Lake Pontchartrain, where the water was lashed into fury.

President Smith, of the Mormon Church, is in trouble with the courts. The trouble has grown out of his marriage to the fifth wife. The charge against him is violation of the compact between the Mormons and the United States government, entered into when Utah was admitted into the Union. A charge wns filed against President Smith on the 11th of September, but it seems to have been pigeon-holed by the county attorney, where it remained about ten days, when the attorney was cited to appear before the criminal division of the State District Court and show cause why he should not direct the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of President Smith. The citation was isued on petition of one Owen, who has been active in gathering evidence against Senator Smoot. Witnesses who will be called to testify to the facts alleged include four wives of President Smith, Apostle Smoot and other apostles, and the governor of the State. The outcome of this trial may have a bearing on the case of Mr. Smoot when it is presented to the Senate for final settlement.

A significant, if not important, ruling was recently made in a Pennsylvania court on the subject of Bible reading in the public schools. The matter is thus set forth in a press dispatch: "A public school Bible reading decision of the widest possible interest was handed down by President Judge Kunkel, of the Dauphin County Court to-day. He refused by mandamus to direct the admittance to school of pupils who purposely or conscientiously came late to avoid the Bible reading. It is the custom to read the Bible in the public schools of Williamstown borough, in Upper Dauphin, and some of the scholars objected to hearing it, and remained out of school until the Scripture reading was ended. The teacher complained, and the school directors gave orders that no scholars should be admitted to the school who remained out wilfully during the Bible reading period. The parents of these scholars asked the court for a writ of mandamus to compel the directors to admit such scholars to school, but Judge Kunkel to-day declined to award the writ. The court holds that it has no power to compel the school board to permit some scholars to attend school at a different time from that prescribed by the school board, and says: 'If the reading of the Bible in the schools is unlawful, it may be enjoined; if it be lawful and a proper exercise of the discretion vested in the school board in the conduct of schools, the petitioners have no ground of complaint. But the question is not necessarily involved here, and we do not pass upon it. The prayer of the petitioners is, therefore, overruled.'"

The race riot of a few days ago in Atlanta was distressing in its consequences. The reports in the daily papers were sensational enough to satisfy the most ardent news gatherer. They were no doubt greatly exaggerated. The simple truth was bad enough. The people were greatly inflamed—all of them, we suppose—but the young and hot-blooded "boys from sixteen to twenty years of age" got beyond control, and went in for blood, indiscriminately. They killed the innocent as well as the guilty. The Wesleyan Advocate says, "nobody knows how many," but there were twenty or more victims. For weeks past there occurred "a series of shocking assaults and attempted assaults on white women by negroes. For eight weeks, an average of one for each week had been reported." On Saturday, the 22d of September, four were reported for that day. When the details of these crimes were made known the fire broke out, and Saturday night was one of horror, and the mob was not silenced until the governor had thrown into the city six or seven hundred soldiers. The vile liquor dives of Atlanta are charged with being the breeding places of crime, even the crimes that brought out the mob. Forty bar rooms in a few blocks were visited one evening between 8 and 10 o'clock by two thousand four hundred and more negroes and white men, an average of little more than sixty to the saloon, in less than two hours. No wonder crime is being bred. And the deadly work goes on. The whole country is aroused. The intelligent and law-abiding people deplore the mob spirit and the lawless killing and call for the punishment of those who take part in lynchings, but the sentiment at the scene is: Our women must be protected. It will require all the wisdom our people possess to solve the problem now before them. What can be done? is the earnest inquiry of thousands of good people.

MARK XI, 24, CRITICALLY EXAMINED.

The article in the ADVOCATE of Sept. 20, signed "X," in which it is asked whether it is proper to read with the Authorized Version, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall receive them," or with the Revised Version, "All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them," etc., or with Mr. Wesley, "believe that ye shall receive them," etc., has just come to my attention.

In order to get the matter before us let me say first that the R. V. approaches more nearly than the others quoted to a literal translation of the Greek. The Greek has for the verb in question what is known as the Aorist tense, a tense which primarily expresses one act in past time in contradistinction to the perfect tense, which expresses completed action in present time. Unfortunately, the English language has no distinct form for the Aorist tense. When we say "I love," we do not know positively whether we mean to imply that the loving continued for some time in the past, or whether it was one definite, distinct act in the past that we have in mind. Whenever in English it is desired clearly to indicate continued action in past time we use what is known as the Progressive form: Thus we say, "I was loving." There is no doubt now that the act is a continued one in past time. The form "I loved," however, may express or imply this manner of continued action, whereas it may also, as I have said, and as everyone knows, simply present to our minds an act in the past contemplated as an indivisible and single act in past time. In Greek such a single act in the past is invariably expressed in what is known as the Aorist tense, and inasmuch as we have no corresponding tense in English, the Aorist tense is often rendered in English by our Perfect tense. Now it is, as above remarked, this Aorist tense which is used in the passage under discussion (Mark xi: 24.) and therefore, the R. V. translating as it does, "believe that ye have received them," approaches more nearly an accurate, literal rendition of the passage than the other translations cited. If, however, we insist upon literalness, the passage would be translated: "I say to you all things, as many as you pray and ask for, believe that you received (once, in the past) them and you shall have them." Now we see by this literal translation that the case becomes even more hopeless than the R. V. makes it. Something is wrong somewhere and I do not wonder at "X's" perplexity. The truth is, the interpretation of this passage must be sought syntaxically and must be translated not by an exact reproduction of tenses, but by expressions which, in English, convey the same turn of thought to the English mind as the given form conveyed to the Greek mind. And this, by the way, should always be the method adopted by expositors of Biblical doctrine. If this were fearlessly done a multitude of absurdities would be removed from the New Testament interpretation. It is as Buttman says in his "Grammar of New Testament Greek," pp. 195 and 196 of Thayer's translation, "whenever our mode of conception departs from the tense employed (in the original Greek), it is our business to transfer ourselves to the position of the writer and take pains in every case to apprehend the temporal relation (in English) which corresponds to the tense he used and, if possible, to reproduce it." Let us proceed, therefore, on this line.

In classic Greek of all periods, from Homer down to this Aorist tense of which I have spoken is used, especially in animated language, to give a more vivid statement of general truths by calling to mind a distinct case in the past to represent all possible cases and implying that what has happen will occur again under similar circumstances. In other words, this Aorist tense expresses necessity or universality of action, which admits of no exception. The technical term for this use of the tense is "Guomic Aorist." One example will suffice to illustrate the rule. Thucydides Book I, Chap. 70, p. 7, says when speaking of the indomitable spirit of the Athenians:

This, translated, is: "And if after all it turn out that they are disappointed in the realization of anything, forming new hopes in compensation for failure, they made good (once in the past) the deficiency." Here Thurcydides has in mind a definite instance in the past when the Athenians had made good under disappointment, and he, predicating his statement of future action upon past experience, declares thus emphatically that what has happened will always happen under similar circumstances. It is a necessary and a universal truth, permitting of no exceptions.

In English we use, as also the Greeks could use, to express this relation either the present or future tense. Since, therefore, the use of this Guomic Aorist conveyed to the mind of the Greek either a present or future action, obviously we should use a present or future tense, in translating the Greek Guomic Aorist, and which one of the two should be used in translating any given passage must be determined by the sense of that passage. In the sentence above quoted from Thucydides the present tense is the better. We would read, therefore, "forming new hopes in compensation for failure they always make good the deficiency." In the case, however, of the verse given us in Mark (xi, 24,) the future tense is better, as is shown by John xiv, 13; xv. 7; Math. xxi, 22 and by the sense of the verse itself, for all these passages bring out very positively the futurity of Christ's reference. When Mr. Wesley, therefore, translates the verse as "X" quotes, "believe that ye shall receive them," he was correctly representing the thought that Christ had in mind and the translators of the R. V. in putting it, "Believe that ye have received them," while coming close to the literal Greek, were far from reproducing the exact force of the Savior's words.

The A. V., in translating, "Believe that ye receive them," is merely using the present tense as a vivid future, just as we so often do in English. We nearly always say: To-morrow is Tuesday, and not to-morrow will be Tuesday. The A. V. is really, therefore, the same as Wesley's as quoted by "X."

It is interesting to note in passing that Christ by making use of this Aorist in this instance virtually called his disciples' attention to some experience of theirs in the past, when an answer had come to faithful prayer, and told them that since that had been their experience, a like experience would be theirs whenever they asked for anything with confidence and certain trust. In other words, he pledged himself in as forceful a way as the Greek language permitted as being necessarily and always compelled to see to it that, as in the past so in the future, a like cause should produce a like effect.

The passage under discussion is by no means the only case in the New Testament where this use of the Aorist occurs. In fact, the construction is relatively very common. I cite only a very few cases. John xv, 6, has the Aorist of the verbs "cast forth" and "wither." The A. V. uses the Present tense in translating the passages. Here again the Present is used as the vivid Future.

Rev. x, 7, has the verb "finished" in the Aorist. Here the A. V. translates as a Future.

1. Pet. 1, 24, has the verb "wither" and "fall" in the Aorist.

The A. V. here uses the Present, and so on. I might quote ad libitum, but I have adduced enough examples to show that the construction is common in the Greek of the New Testament period.

In conclusion, therefore, let me again say that when we translate with Mr. Wesley "Believe that we shall receive them" we present to our English mind the thought that Jesus had in his mind when he addressed the words to his disciples on that memorable Tuesday morning of Passion week.

SIMPLIFIED SPELING.

Dear Brother Boswel: President Rosevelt says he wants every body to spel rite. I hav bin riting for the dear old ADVOCATE ever since its first editor, Brother McTyeire, (afterwards Bishop) handed me a copy of the first issue. The rite wa to spel rite must be r-i-t-e else it is a new rite the persident imposes on people. All superflu-us leters must be left out, so it is hi time to begin to lern to be a good speler.

I hav bin trying to spel rite ever since a teen forty tu, when I was at school and turned down a large clas of girls and boys in and out of their teens on the word tyranny. I was eleven years old and I hav bin trying to spel ritely ever since, so it is rather hard to begin the nu wa of the "Simplifide Speling" bord. You see I am trying and I was just thinking what a grand "strid," (now Doctor, that is your wa to spel stride,) but how about the pronunciation? It seems to me that "strid" would rime with did, (pardon the digresion). With this "strid" the hier critics, by adopting the "Simplifide Speling" of all those hi sounding words from Webster's un a bridged, can be simplifide so that the comon peple can understand what they are driving at, and Moses can rest awhile. The divine or the human part of the Bible says that "no man nose where he was berred," but there is quite a large number of hier critics that dig him up every once in a while to try to prove that he was a biger humbug than our own Phineas T. Barnum, and then if those riters who are engaged in stating the status of the restatement of the 29 Articles of the Methodist doktrine would step down from their hi clastical habits and spel some of those Greek derivativ words in the nu wa one mite se into the pro and con of the mater and be prepared to understand the conclusion that the General Conference of 1910 is expected to announce to the peple called Methodists.

If the question of the hier critiks as to Holy Rit and the state of the restatement can be seteled by the simple wa to spel, let us all sa Amen.

ONE COMMON ENDOWMENT FUND.

Brother Meek has spoken wise words on a most important subject. I am in accord with what he says. Especially do I commend his suggestion to "agree upon some plan of division and ask our people to subscribe to one common endowment fund." Already we have a fine theory of correlation. What we need now is some practice.

Millsaps College has from the beginning kept to its own legitimate territory—Mississippi. Grenada College has canvassed North Mississippi only, and yet North Mississippi has always been poaching ground for schools of other Conferences, sometimes using methods not countenanced by commercial enterprises. Last spring the Winona District Conference passed resolutions condemning such violation of Conference rights and church comity.

As a means of making effective the wise suggestions of Brother Meek I favor the plan of our Conferences saying what schools shall be Conference schools, and in what proportion each shall share in a common endowment fund; and that all such schools shall be under the management of one board of trustees. That should be no difficult matter for North Mississippi since we have but two schools—Millsaps and Grenada.

LETTER FROM GILDEROY.

For four days and nights we have had one continued storm of wind and rain from the east and northeast. The water is from ankle to knee-deep under my house and all over my yard and under my church and over the church lot. All of the cotton of any size, and nearly all of it is large, is lying flat on the ground. This means rot and great loss. I do not now recall that I ever saw such an equinoctial gale in this State. The flowers in the yard are all falling down. This black mud is too soft to hold them up in such a wind as this. It seems that storms like this have occurred in nearly all parts of the world.

Rev. J. M. Bradley, one of our best young men, has been transferred to St. Louis Conference and Station I, in Charleston, Mo. He has done a fine work here and will do good work there. He is a choice young man and a fine preacher and pastor.

Rev. R. P. Neblett takes his place at Charlesdale till Conference. Brother Mounger takes in Tunica, and so the vacant places are all filled up—indeed the pegs were all ready before the vacancies occurred. There was no interim in pastorates. When one was out, another was in. The work goes on. Our system is as nearly perfect as any human arrangement could be—a man for every place, and a place for every man.

The presiding elder comes handy when changes like these occur. He shows wisdom and tact in arranging matters for the time being. He knows his men and the places, and by a move or two he can keep things moving. He is here for this purpose. This is part of his work. Yours,

GILDEROY.

THE LOUISIANA STATE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Upon the call of the Superintendent, Dr. S. A. Smith, the first convention of the above organization convened at Bunkie, Sept. 24 and 25. For various general and incidental reasons, the attendance was small, but the enthusiasm was high and the inspiration genuine.

The speakers, for the most part pastors who have crossed swords with the liquor hosts, were full of their subject, and without exception were optimistic and urged that the Lord's people in Louisiana "go over and possess the land."

With no negro vote to contend with, with the prosperity and decrease in crime so evident in our dry territory, including about one-half of the State, and with the saloons' crimes filling our daily papers, surely a united Christian host should charge this atrocious foe of everything that is pure and American. How the Lord's commissioned leaders could remain silent and inactive in the presence of such an enemy of all they are called to accomplish would be one of the last wonders.

There were represented the Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian and Congregational Churches, and perhaps others, and a beautiful spirit of harmony and brotherly love prevailed. This was a benediction within itself, worthy of a twentieth century religious gathering. Nothing seemed to be thought or mentioned but the curtailment and destruction of the liquor traffic.

The superintendent reported a balance of $75 in the treasury after meeting all the expenses of the League for the six months of its active life, and a total of more than $1000 being secured in good subscriptions in the meantime, the treasury being empty in the beginning.

Some new temperance legislation passed by the General Assembly this year makes it a crime to solicit or receive orders for the purchase of liquors in a prohibition territory, or allow a minor on a saloon's premises. In harmony with the latter, a barkeeper had been fined in one instance for allowing a negro boy to shine shoes in his saloon.

Dr. Smith seems to be keeping a close record of the politicians' attitude on the temperance question, and says that one man, at least, who is aspiring for the Governor's chair, will have some very damaging things told on him in due time.

By resolution the superintendent's work was warmly commended, and his request for an assistant was indorsed. A board of thirty trustees, distributed over the State, was elected, and a headquarters committee was located in New Orleans, with Rev. C. V. Edwards, chairman. Rev. W. W. Drake, who presided over the convention, was elected president, and Rev. Paul Leeds was chosen secretary.

There is a rift in Louisiana's cloud of drunkenness and crime, and the trumpet calling the Lord's legions to battle has sounded, and shouts of victory will be common until there is not a saloon to mark the place of conflict.

Chairman Press Committee.

OUR COMMON ENDOWMENT FUND.

Dear Dr. Boswell: No fairer and saner utterance has, in my opinion, been made concerning the schools of Methodism in Mississippi than has been given us by the Rev. R. A. Meek in the Advocate of Sept. 27. Deliberate projection and determined prosecution of plans is the only road to large and permanent success. Intermittent activity may achieve small ends and results that are temporary; but, if we expect to occupy the rich, broad and prolific fields of education, persistency in an effort to execute large and well-matured plans is requisite. I heartily favor the bringing together of those closely connected with our different educational institutions as suggested by the Rev. Mr. Meek's article. The privilege of sitting in such a council as he urges to be called would, I am sure, be an opportunity for gathering suggestions of great practical value to me in my work. Besides this personal and possibly somewhat selfish motive to derive educational ideas from such a meeting, I approve of the plan since I hope that such a council may allay whatever of friction already exists among our forces, and prevent any that may appear to threaten. Some of us may be so close to the institution with which we are associated that we cannot see around it, under it or over it, and, in fact, may almost think there is no other. In such a council we might be made—or better, permitted—to withdraw a little from our accustomed surroundings and thus enlarge our horizon. We should all of us be willing "to put aside all local differences and jealousies."

I agree, further, that such a procedure would diminish any "artifice and cunning" that might exist, and would lesson our effort "to try to achieve a selfish and sinister end under the guise of a pretended devotion to some noble cause." In the limited universe of human progress I believe the law holds as it does in mathematics, that the straight line marks out the shortest distance between two points. We must all agree that most of us mean well in what we are doing along educational lines, and what we need in the main is a clear and definite view as to what we should do, and most of us would do it. Any motion that is going nowhere in particular is lost motion. There are too few people in the world that are willing to move, for Methodism to permit—so far as she can prevent—her forces to waste themselves in ill-directed effort or to have them partially pitted against one another. Brother Meek's article appeals powerfully to me, and I sincerely hope that some action may be taken in response to it.

MEETING OF THE ORPHANS' HOME BOARD.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Home in Jackson, Miss., at 9 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, Oct. 17. All members are requested to be on hand, as matters of much importance will come before the meeting.

WHITHWORTH COLLEGE.

A good brother sends us the following interesting item: "Whitworth College had enrolled 230 students up to Oct. 5 and eight more were engaged to be in during that week. This is great news for the Church in Mississippi. Whitworth is worthy of all confidence and is coming into possession of her rights. Dr. Cooper and the Church are to be congratulated."

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Our church at Pelican, La., (Shreveport District) is to be dedicated Nov. 11, by Rev. H. G. Davis, presiding elder of Shreveport District. All former pastors, the Editor of the Advocate, and all friends are cordially invited to attend.

Geo. D. Purcell, P. C.

UNION EPWORTH LEAGUE.

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 9, the Union Epworth League was entertained by the Carrollton Ave. Church, this city, Rev. W. W. Holmes pastor. The church was beautifully decorated with potted palms and ferns. The young people turned out in great numbers, the building being taxed to its full seating capacity. Bishop Ward was present and made an inspiring address, which was well received. Already, there is evidence that the inspiration gathered from the Bishop's kindly advice will bear fruit.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, will be with us for a Sunday School Institute at Cleveland, Miss., beginning Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 2:30 p. m., and closing Nov. 2, at 12 noon. This is a great opportunity for our people and we hope all the Greenville District will be represented. Programme later.

R. P. Neblett.

ITEMS OF INTEREST—PERSONAL.

The friends of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb are rejoicing with him over the birth to him of a son and heir. May he be a worthy son of his father!

Rev. J. T. Watson has risen from a protracted and severe spell of typhoid fever, but is not able to take up his work on the Greenhead Charge, and has gone back to his old home in Attala County. He is a young man of splendid possibilities, and it is to be hoped that he may soon be able to return to the pastorate.

Rev. W. G. Harbin has been preaching in Revival services at Capitol Street Church, Jackson, for a week past. The stormy weather has greatly militated against the success of the meeting, but the interest has been excellent despite this untoward condition.

Rev. J. M. Bradley has moved to his new Charge, Charleston, Mo., and his successor, Rev. R. P. Neblett, has moved into the parsonage at Clarksdale, and has gone bravely to work. Under the enterprising management of the latter, a District Sunday School Institute has been planned for Cleveland, Miss., Oct. 31-Nov 1. Dr. and Mrs. Hamill will be present, and a fine meeting is promised.

Rev. J. C. Park recently devoted an entire Sabbath morning to the subject of Religious Literature, with especial reference to the Discipline and the Church papers, which he sought to place in every Methodist home. An attractive exhibit of our publications was conspicuously arranged before the congregation, and comment was made upon each. If Greenwood Methodists are not intelligent it will scarcely be his fault.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

CUBA.

Ninety-five per cent of the Cubans do not attend any church, says Bishop Warren A. Candler, but it is his opinion that those who do go to church are more nearly in sympathy with the Protestant than the Roman Catholics.

Protestantism, dating practically from the year 1899, is of so recent establishment that there are not enough places of worship on the island to meet the demands of the situation. Tens of thousands of copies of the Bible have been scattered among the people by the agents and colporters of the American Bible Society and the Protestant preachers.

SCHOOLS OF CUBA.

Candler College, in Havana, Colegio Ingles, in Camaguey, and the schools in Santa Clara and Santiago, Cuba, are all in a prosperous condition. Candler College had an average attendance of one hundred and fifty pupils. Here is an urgent need for another building. Miss Carson, who took charge of Eliza Bowman School, in Havana, Sept. 14, 1900, has had to move into more roomy quarters recently. The house she occupies at present is the one we wanted to secure when the school first opened in Havana. Miss Carson thinks the property could be obtained now very reasonably if the Board could only buy. Another prosperous school is The Irene Toland, conveniently situated in Matanzas.

SAMOAN ISLANDS.

The whole population of the Samoan Islands is now Christian. Family prayers are observed more generally in Samoa than in probably no community in America. The people are eager for the education of their children, support their churches, and send out their own missionaries to New Guinea and Micronesia.

IRELAND.

The only thriving and progressive portion of Ireland is the Protestant portion. The Protestants organize and manage the largest paying companies, farms, banks, factories, and the best shops and warehouses. The most successful doctors, lawyers, merchants, and architects are Protestants. The only scholarship in Ireland is Protestant scholarship. "Rome still fails, and the poor people, beggared by the priests and bishops, and unable to get a living, have been steadily emigrating to America. They are emigrating still at the rate of 800 a week.

A METHODIST SCHOOL.

In Rome there is a Methodist College that has cared for 118 students during the past year. Not only are these students, who have come from all parts of Italy and other foreign countries, members of the Methodist Church, but the names of Wesleyans, Waldensians, Baptists, Free Church boys, Christian Scientists, Hebrews and Roman Catholics are to be found on the roll.

TURKEY.

In a certain province of Turkey the people know the Protestants by certain signs or characteristics. If a young man doesn't lie or cheat in his business he is called a "Protestant." Another leaves off work on Sunday and he gets the same title. A mother tells her daughter not to shut her eyes during prayer or they will think she is a Protestant, and she (mother) would rather have a dagger plunged in her heart than to believe her daughter was really a Protestant.

A WOMAN'S SOCIETY.

Newark, N. J., has the honor of being the birthplace of the oldest woman's foreign missionary society in the United States. This is the society of the First Presbyterian Church, which has recently celebrated its seventieth anniversary, being one year older than the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, which this spring commemorates its sixty-ninth anniversary. This Board, next to the Church Missionary Society of England, is the largest Foreign Missionary Board in the World. Forty new missionaries are being sent out by the Presbyterian Church this year.

CONFERENCE TREASURER'S REPORT.

The contributions received for the quarter just closed are:

Dues	$124.15
Special pledge	188.05
Scholarships	55.00
Expense fund	49.25
Contingent fund	9.38
Total	$425.83

Our Conference Treasurer, Mrs. J. J. Holmes, says: "This is particularly bad for our pledge. By this time, the close of the second quarter, we should have paid $750, one-half of the amount. But we have paid only $378.15. I trust that our dear women will take note of this."

MRS. EDWARD ALVIS,
Supt. Press Dept., La. Conf.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETIES IN LOUISIANA.

Accept greetings. We had hoped ere this to have been in correspondence with the secretaries of our western division, but the multiplicity of duties devolving upon us since the board meeting in May, though in every sense pleasing, have proven arduous. Even these have afforded better opportunity for careful consideration of plans and work for our women. We were happy to be able to accept the invitation to be present upon the fifteenth annual opening of the Training School, in Kansas City, Mo., and to devote some time with the president and secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions to matters of mutual interest to the Board and School.

We found our fondest hopes and highest ideals of a Christian school and home for our young women more than met in the Scarritt Bible and Training School, in the splendidly organized and equipped departments of methods and work. Very tactfully do they prove their skill in the performance of Christian service, as a result of minds and hearts well stored with principles taught. After twelve days delightfully spent in the school, and Kansas City, the battle ground of its activities and the Institutional Church, a veritable citadel in itself, I do not hesitate to say that the Scarritt Bible and Training School is the place for training and testing our young women, regardless of section or denomination.

If I remember rightly, Louisiana has no representative in the school this year. Many of her splendid young women should be ready to enter with the sixteenth annual opening. Mothers in Louisiana Methodism, where are your daughters, how are we training them for their life work? What are you doing for the school itself? The maintenance of such a building entails heavy expense. Some rooms are yet unfurnished, some repairs are necessary, as are some refurnishings. Can you not, as a Conference Society or as individuals, help in these matters? We will have done as nobly to sustain our young women in the school as to support them in their fields of labor.

Some of our Conference societies are being amply repaid for their time and money spent on the education of their young women and are now able to support them in the foreign field. As a Conference Society what are your greatest needs, your highest ideals, your fondest hopes, your faithful endeavors? Already I am trying to share them with you. Will you let me know personally, and I shall rejoice that we are laborers together with God for the bringing in of the fulness of his kingdom. Sincerely,

MRS. W. F. BARNUM.
Vice President Western Division, W. F. M. S.

EXPLANATION.

In explanation of the offer of a scholarship in Scarritt Training School, made by the Woman's Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference, Mrs. A. C. Yeager sends the following:

The money offered for a course of training at Scarritt was raised by the Home Mission Societies of the North Mississippi Conference in response to an appeal of their president on behalf of a young girl who desired a course of training to be better fitted for work in the home field. Since arriving at Scarritt she has found that she can be self-sustaining, so has very generously relinquished all claim to the amount raised.

Now this offer is made to induce some other to accept of the use of the money, rather than let it lie idle in the treasury.

Any Methodist girl of North Mississippi of eighteen or over, or any unmarried woman or widow, under forty, will be eligible to this position.

REV. W. W. HURST.

Rev. Walter William Hurst was born near Camdon, South Carolina. Nov. 28, 1828; came to Mississippi with three of his brothers in 1842, and settled in Monticello, in Lawrence county, on Pearl River, where he lived a number of years. He was educated in Centenary College. In early lige he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The General Minutes, a copy of which is before me, says he was admitted on trial in November, 1861, at Canton, Miss. Our Mississippi Conference Journal, of recent date, says he was admitted in 1862, at Jackson, Miss. He was admitted into full connection in 1864, at Crystal Springs, and ordained by Bishop Paine.

At one time, during the early part of the Confederate war, he was elected captain of a cavalry company. He made a good soldier. He was a "peace officer" in Bolivar county at one time. During his term of office he was a terror to evildoers. On the 13th of May, 1863, he was married to Mary A. Carr, of Simpson county, Miss., a good woman of a good family. She died in January, 1891, leaving him with eight living children. In October, 1891, he was married to her who now weeps in lonely widowhood, Lucy Dana, who with six children, two sons and four daughters, are now lonely and sad. At 8 o'clock Sunday evening, August 26, 1906, he quietly fell asleep in Jesus, in his own home, five miles south of Vicksburg. His funeral service was conducted in Redbone Church, in Warren county, in the presence of a large and deeply solemn congregation, and his remains were deposited in the Old Redbone Cemetery, where they await the summons of the archangel's trumpet.

Brother Hurst was married five times. His first wife was a Miss Mann. His second wife was a daughter of Rev. Green M. Rogers, late of Mississippi Conference. His third wife was a sister of Rev. John B. Bowen, of Union Church. His fourth wife, as stated above, was Miss Carr. His last Miss Lucy Dana, a good, saintly woman.

Brother Hurst was in 1872 Presiding Elder on Seashore District. He made a good Presiding Elder. He did not like district work, but preferred a regular pastoral charge, a circuit. When in his prime, he was quite a revivalist. Scores and hundreds have been saved by his faithful, earnest preaching.

He was one of my warmest and bert friends. I loved him like a brother.

He was a sincere Christian, a firm believer in the vital doctrines of the Bible, a fast friend and an uncompromising Methodist. When necessary, he did not hesitate to preach doctrinal sermons. He yielded to no one in his attachment to the institutions of the church, or in the promptness with which he defended them. His emotions were naturally strong and impulsive, and displayed themselves especially in the vivacity and vehemence of conversation.

Brother Hurst sought to be useful rather than great, and those among whom he labored will ever remember the vigor and zeal with which he pursued this cherished aim to the end of his life. One of the most remarkable circumstances of his life was his diligence in searching the Scriptures. As preacher and pastor he did his work well. His labors were crowned with a signal success. He usually stayed four years on his work. He served the Church in South Warren first and last, eight years. No preacher has more friends in Warren county than Brother Hurst had. He was everybody's friend. In the early part of our ministerial life, he and I labored much together in revival metings. He was good help in the pulpit and in the altar. He was my principal ministerial help in the wonderful revival at Old Santee Camp Ground, in Covington county, held in September, 1866, during which ninety-one people were received into the Church.

He was never a "bore" on the Conference floor, yet he paid close attention to what was said and done; and when he deemed it necessary, he did not hesitate to speak. He was superannuated seven years ago at his own request, since which time he has stayed close at home. He was very devoted to his wife and children, and they to him. Much of my time I have spent in his home during the last twelve months. He is gone. We shall see him no more in this life, but we will, by the grace of God, meet him up yonder. Since his departure I have had a sense of loneliness that is indescribable. May God bless and take special care of his precious widow and children.

THOMAS LLOYD FOSTER.

The Rev. T. L. Foster was born near Columbus, Miss., Sept. 23, 1833. He died at the home of his daughter, twelve miles west of Starkville, Miss., July 3, 1906.

There is profit in looking at this life of seventy-two and one-half years from two views—the conditions that surrounded his early life, and the work of many years beginning at, or about, the time of his maturity.

Few lives have been so fortunately safeguarded in youth as was T. L. Foster's. His parents, Moses D. and Nancy Tunnell Foster, were as devoted as parents can be, and their religion was the purest type. His father was a local preacher of great usefulness, laboring many years to the edification of the Church in that capacity. His mother was one of the most devout and useful women that was ever known in the community where she spent most of her life. She was always ready to do her duty to home and the Church, praying for and admonishing her children, as well as others, to do their duty in all things. This is the same old, but dear, story of a devoted mother giving her life and love to those given her by the Lord. Absorbed by a passion for her Lord, her husband and her children, it is no wonder that there was a band of true and noble children sent out from her home, three of whom went out, under a call, to preach the living word to dying men. The production of that home should be a religious inspiration to all the parents of the land. To see one go out from such a place into the life of sin would be a great surprise and would partake of the mysterious at the same time. When God takes a deep hold on a strain of blood it is more than likely that generation after generation will honor him. The Puritan blood that was so small at first, but is now such a great stream flowing through the entire country, is a proof of this theory. In a smaller, but equally as true, a way this is an explanation of the goodness of T. L. Foster. From the fountain whence life came flowed a steady stream of goodness, blessing his life to the very end. It is not a surprise that he was good, but it would have been a great surprise if he had been a bad man. From this same circle came at least eight preachers. Through this channel God was raising up unto himself an host.

The second view that brings profit to us is seeing this life at work. It is not enough to be innocent, but true, noble life is energy correctly applied. So we take up a sketch of what Brother Foster did during fifty-one years of manhood.

He was licensed to preach at or about the age of twenty-one and joined the Memphis Conference in 1857. After laboring in that Conference for a number of years he was transferred to the Illinois Conference, where he gave ten years of his vigorous manhood to the Church, three of the ten being given to the work of Presiding Eldership, in which office he was most efficient. His health giving away in that rigid climate, he located and returned to Mississippi, the land of his earlier labors. He remained in the local ranks for a number of years, and was readmitted into the North Mississippi Conference in 1880. In 1882 he was pastor of Wesley and Springdale Circuit, Grenada District; 1883 of Coffeeville Circuit, Grenada District; 1884 and 1885 Old Town, Grenada District; 1886 and 1887 Banner Circuit, Grenada District; 1888 and 1889 Kosciusko Circuit, Corinth District; 1890 Corinth Circuit, Corinth District; 1891 and 1892 Starkville Circuit, Columbus District; 1893 and 1894 Stewart Circuit, Kosciusko District; 1895, 1896 and 1897 Marietta Circuit, Corinth District; 1898, 1899 and 1900, he was on the superannuated roll; 1901 and 1902 he served the Lagrange Charge; 1903 and 1905 and part of 1906 he was again on the honored roll of superannuates. A little reflection over this record will show how stern was the fight of this noble life. Faithful in hardships and valiant in defeat, he has gone up above, where honors are conferred where they belong.

T. L. Foster was a strong preacher. He had a clear perception of truth and a terse style for its expression. His preaching left no doubt of a satisfactory experience. He knew, both by a strong mind and a spiritual witness, that the great themes of the Gospel were true, and for this reason he gave bold utterance to his messages. In other settings his life would undoubtedly have meant more to the Church, to himself and to God.

Brother Foster was three times married. First to Miss Mary Campbell. This marriage was blessed with three children. Only one is still living. The second marriage was to Miss Sarah A. Neal. From this union seven children were born—R. W. Foster, of Woodland, Miss.; Mary Elizabeth Hunter, of Water Valley; Virginia Belle Clark, of Verona, and Cassie Hanna, of Self Creek, are living. The third marriage was to Mrs. R. R. Gary, of Illinois. Mrs. Lula Eustis, of Sessums, is the only child of this marriage. Sister Foster and seven children remain on this side of the river. One by one they will come down to the brink of the river to see there the footprints of him who has already crossed over. Let them abide in faith and prayer until the reunion comes. The writer, assisted by T. J. Hooper, pastor of Mathison Mission, laid to rest the body of this faithful servant, in the Double Springs cemetery, on July 4, 1906. Thus the world has seen the triumph of another true life. It is a sure evidence of the religion of the cross.

WHENCE CAME THE BIRDS?

An Indian story that has been handed down, and is still believed by many Indian tribes, is one about the transformation of leaves into birds. Long years ago, when the world was young, the Great Spirit went about the earth making it beautiful. Wherever his feet touched the ground lovely trees and flowers sprang up. All summer the trees wore their short green dresses. The leaves were very happy, and they sang their sweet songs to the breeze as it passed them. One day the wind told them the time would soon come when they would have to fall from the trees and die. This made the leaves feel very sad, but they tried to be bright and do the best they could so as not to make mother trees unhappy. But at last the time came, and they would let go of the twigs and branches and fluttered to the ground. They lay perfectly quiet, not able to move except as the wind would lift them.

The Great Spirit saw them and thought they were so lovely that he did not want to see them die, but live and be beautiful forever, so he gave to each bright leaf a pair of wings and power to fly. Then he called them his "birds." From the red and brown leaves of the oak came the robins, and yellow birds from the yellow willow leaves, and from bright maple leaves he made the red birds; the brown leaves became wrens, sparrows, and other brown birds. This is why the birds love the trees and always go to them to build their nests, and look for food and shade.—Selected.

THE SUNSHINE GIRL.

One day everything seemed to go wrong with Helen. To begin with, when she got up in the morning she put the left shoe on the right foot, then she tangled the shoe laces and broke one in her hurry.

She was late for breakfast, so her oatmeal was cold. And, just as she was ready to go to Nannie Gray's to play for an hour, it began to rain, and she had to take off her hat and jacket and stay at home.

"There never was such a day!" she cried. "Everything is wrong."

"I'll tell you how to make everything right," said her grandfather."

"How, grandfather?", asked Helen, who felt quite sure that he could do almost anything.

"Just be a sunshine girl."

"Oh, grandfather, how can I? It's raining."

"The rain needn't make any difference with you," he replied.

"Well—I'll try—to be a sunshine girl." Helen spoke doubtfully. "How do I begin?"

"First you learn the rule for sunshine. Get your slate and write it down."

Helen took her slate and pencil and he told her to write:

"When things go wrong, smile, and find a better way."

Helen was smiling already. That came easy enough, for no one was ever very gloomy where her grandfather was.

"I can't go to play with Nannie 'cause it's raining, but I can do something better now," cried Helen, when she had finished writing. "I can begin a birthday present for grandmother and you can take it home to her next week when you go."

"Of course I can; that's just the thing for you to do."

"And do you s'pose she'd like a motto painted with pretty letters on bristol board?" asked Helen.

"I s'pose she'd be delighted," replied her grandfather. "And, if you paint it, I'll have it framed."

And the motto that Helen chose was, "When things go wrong, smile, and find a better way."

After that, when things did not go right Helen would smile and look for a better way, and she almost always found it, too.

It was such a simple rule, not a bit hard to remember, and, because Helen thought about it and put it into practice, she earned the name that grandfather gave her, and in time her mother and father, and even big brother Harry, called her the Sunshine Girl.—Bessie R. Hoover, in Sunday-School Advocate.

"MAKING FRIENDS."

"In this way, please, Mrs. Lloyd. The boys are playing marbles in the sitting-room, so we shall have to sit in the library," said Mrs. Hadley to an elderly friend who had brought her work for a morning visit.

"The boys playing marbles in the sitting-room," repeated Mrs. Lloyd in surprise.

"Yes, why not?", smiled Mrs. Hadley. "The old Brussels carpet in the sitting room will be none the worse for a few chalk-rings. I have left that carpet on the floor purposely so that none of the family will feel that the room is too good to use. For state occasions we have the parlor."

"But doesn't the game of marbles seem rather noisy and disorderly for the house? I think you must be a very indulgent mother."

"I hope I am. I wish my boys to have every harmless pleasure in their home that I can give them, and I try not to interfere with their fun in any way, though, to tell the truth," Mrs. Hadley's eyes twinkled, "I did stop their game a few minutes ago because I wished them to teach it to me. You see, my early education was neglected in some respects—I never learned to play marbles. But Ted says I'll pick the game up quickly, for I made two pretty good shots this morning."

Mrs. Lloyd laid down her knitting and gazed at her hostess in astonishment.

"I suppose you do think I'm rather an undignified parent," said Mrs. Hadley, laughing, "but you see I want my boys to love me as a comrade as well as a mother. I think too many mothers forget to make friends with their children. It's such a comfort, too, to know where Ted and Archie are a rainy morning like this. When they and their friends are playing marbles in my sitting-room, I have no fear that they are hanging around billiard halls or are anywhere else where I shouldn't like them to be. I tell my three boys that they may do almost anything here if they will only stay home and be friends with me."

"Mamma," said a six-year-old boy, running into the room, "papa gave me some splendid fish-hooks this morning, and I don't want to lose 'em, so I put 'em in your handkerchief box. You'll take care of 'em for me, won't you?"

"Yes, Charley dear; they'll be perfectly safe." The two women exchanged smiles as the child left the room.

"The fish-hooks may be safe, but how about your handkerchiefs?" asked Mrs. Lloyd.

"Oh, they will be all right. I'll put them in the other end of the box. It's quite an honor, isn't it, for him to confide his newest treasures to my keeping?"

For a few moments there was a silence, only broken by occasional mirthful shouts from the sitting-room, and then Mrs. Lloyd said gently and slowly: "I wish that—that a mother I used to know many years ago had had the benefit of your wisdom, my dear. That mother didn't make friends with her only son, though she loved him—loved him with all her heart. Somehow he came to believe that she thought more of her house than she did of him, and he grew into the way of going from home for all his pleasures, and—and—" The old eyes filled with tears and the voice faltered.

"Oh, dear, Mrs. Lloyd, I never knew, or I shouldn't have spoken as I did. Forgive me."

"It is well that you spoke, for she—that is, I never realized before that it was more my fault than his; but now I know. Wherever I go I shall tell young mothers to be merry and happy with children—to become friends of them as you do, and keep them home."—Kilbourne Cowles.

THE HAPPIEST CHILDREN.

The happiest children are those who have happy mothers. The young life which grows up in the shadow of a discontented, repining and gloomy mother is like a plant unwatered by kindly dews. It is apt to be dwarfed and stunted. Even when things are crooked and temptations to be harsh come, let the mother, for her sons' and daughters' sake, try to be happy.—Selected.

A preacher was saying the other day: "I once had in my Sunday school a young urchin from a poor neighborhood. He did his best to bring recruits, and one afternoon I said to him, 'Billy, don't you think you could induce one or two other boys to come to Sunday school?' Billy answered, 'Well, sir; I could bring one, but all the other fellers in our alley can lick me.'"

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1906.

A few weeks since the Christian Intelligencer, in giving the numerical strength of the different Churches, placed the Baptists first of the Protestant denominations, and the Methodists second. In the enumeration the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was entirely overlooked. The two Methodisms united largely outnumber the Baptists.

The great principles of our holy religion as set forth in Methodist theology, whether in numbered Articles of Faith, or in recognized standards, are so well known and loved, that departure from them creates surprise and pain. Unity of sentiment on essentials; and agreement to disagree on non-essentials, together with oneness of experience have always been the glory of the Church. We devoutly pray that nothing may ever arise to disturb our peace.

* * *

That Methodists have always believed and preached "free grace" and thus magnified the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, is true, but that they count all who fail to agree with them as "unworthy of fellowship" is far from being correct. The brother who made the assertion, and classed Methodists with high-churchmen who assume to be the only representatives of the Church of Christ, has studied Methodism in its relations to other communions to little purpose. Mr. Wesley always said to other Christians, "If thy heart is right as my heart is with thy heart, give me thy hand." Methodists have never repudiated this brotherly sentiment.

For many years past the orthodox have been busy defending Moses against the attacks of those who accuse him of serious blunders. Their attention must now be turned to a learned layman—one high in army circles—who seems to have been employing his leisure in the study of theology—who comes before the public with the astonishing statement that St. Paul was in opposition to Christ, and spent the strength of his life in pulling down what Christ tried to build up. His entire argument is based on a misconception of our Lord's mission as expressed in the words: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

THE STRENGTH OF THE CHURCH.

Mistaken notions prevail as to the strength of the Church. Some suppose it consists in the number of members, and that the strength is greatly magnified, if to numbers is added wealth, accompanied, as wealth always is with large and costly houses of worship, and such accomplishments as education, scientific music, etc. This is the world's method of determining the strength and standing of a man or a people, but it will not answer as the standard of measurement for determining the strength of a church. All these things may be possessed in full by a church, and yet it may be not only weak, but a positive drawback to the interests of true religion.

We have known churches of many members and all the temporal advantages needed, that amounted to nothing as moral forces—not because they were lacking in orthodoxy, or because they neglected the sacraments, but simply because they were worldly in spirit and manner of life.

Of course it is understood that the things mentioned are not to be undervalued. They have their place and use, and when properly appreciated and used, are greatly to advantage of the gospel. The trouble is, when churches come into possession of these things and overvalue them, men are liable to depend on them, and depart from the simplicity of the gospel. We must look elsewhere than to these things to find the secret of the church's power.

The strength of the church is found in a consecrated and zealous ministry. We put the ministry first because our Lord put it first, both in the order of time and importance. He called and set apart men specially for the ministry, and put them forward as leaders and teachers; not only so, but invested them with a degree of authority not conferred upon the membership in general. How great that authority is may be seen by considering that unto the apostles was given the keys of the kingdom of heaven, with power to rule in the Church—which power, as far as we know, has never been taken from the ministry.

With such commanding position in the kingdom, and such authority, it is easy to see that the ministry may make or mar a whole church. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that the ministry be composed, not of men of the greatest ability, or learning, or shrewdness, as desirable as these qualities are, but of men of the greatest piety and zeal in prosecuting the work of our Lord. It is important that they personally know God, that they be apt to teach, and faithful in ministering to the people "over whom the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers."

Next, the strength of the church consists in a consecrated and zealous membership. It is impossible for the preacher to do everything needed to build up the cause of Christ. In a community where no church exists, and has never been known, everything depends upon the preacher, but where one is regularly organized, with duly appointed officers and all departments in working order, the preacher must have the help of his people.

In carrying on the work it is always best to have unanimity of sentiment and co-operation, but not essential. It is true that "one sinner destroys much good," and one or two contrary members may greatly hinder, but the Lord cannot fail to reward the faithful and zealous, because one or more fail to co-operate, and withhold all sympathy. But it sometimes happens that though there may be no dissensions in the church, there is utter indifference, which not only handicaps the preacher, but neutralizes all his efforts. On the other hand; one consecrated, active member may enliven a whole community, for the grace in one is like the leaven in the meal—the whole lump feels its influence.

It is sometimes the case that churches, weak in numbers and resources, become discouraged, and feel like giving up. We grant there is often ground for discouragement, but we have never seen a church, however weak, that did not have in its membership one or more faithful souls on whom the preacher could rely, and with whose assistance he could not fail of success. This, we venture to say, is true of all churches.

Why should any church become disheartened? All the assurances that good men and women need are given by the great Head of the Church. They have only to utilize the grace that is at hand. Let them do this, and they at once realize the strength necessary to accomplish great things for God. "One can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight." If so, who can estimate the possibilities of a faithful band of a score or more of determined Christians? To undertake the work of God in some localities on the part of a handful of Christians looks useless. From a human standpoint success seems impossible, but nothing is impossible with God, and he tells the Church to go forward, with the promise to furnish the needed strength for the work. A Christian backed by the power of God is equal to any work the Lord may command. The strength is not in human arms, but in Christians alive to God. We get the power at the throne of grace. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble. Therefore will we not fear though the earth be removed and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea."

David challenged the enemies of God: "Walk about Zion, and go round about her, tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following." So we challenge God's enemies to-day. A consecrated and zealous church will conquer the world to Christ.

PROTESTS AND SUGGESTIONS.

Brethren from several sections of our patronizing territory suggest to us that we have printed enough matter on the subject of the Statement of Methodist faith. We are tempted to agree with them, and will shortly call a halt. On the other hand, just as many brethrenbeg us to continue.

We have received a strong word from a brother whom we greatly respect, protesting against the article on the subject in our issue of the 20th of September, in which was made a direct attack on one of our Articles of Religion. It is needless to say that we did not endorse the attack, but it was such a sudden break from Methodist orthodoxy, we thought no harm would ensue. We hope none will.

It is well enough to say in this connection that one brother—one of our oldest and wisest—who thinks we have had enough on "Statement," suggests that we occupy the space with news from the churches. We do not have enough of such news. The trouble in this matter is, not that we do not give sufficient space, but that the brethren make their notes too long. We will be glad to have all the news the brethren will send. Let us have the notes by the score. The sooner the better.

BISHOP WARD IN THE CITY.

Bishop Ward is making another Episcopal visit to the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. He reached the city Friday evening last, and spent nearly a week visiting the churches. He preached two strong and edifying sermons on the Sabbath—in the morning to the Rayne Memorial, and in the evening to the First Church. It is the Bishop's purpose to get as clear a view of the situation in New Orleans as possible, with a view to the wisest and best adjustment of affairs. On Monday evening there was a meeting of representatives from all the Churches at Rayne Memorial, having for its object the organization of a City Church Extension Society. But there being already in existence a chartered "Methodist Alliance," the organization was deferred and a committee appointed to examine the charter of the Alliance and report at another meeting so that no conflict or trouble may ensue. The Bishop addressed the body, setting forth in a plain and practical way the prospects of the city and the duty of Methodists to the constantly-increasing population. His talk satisfied the hearers that he had a very clear conception of the situation and needs of New Orleans Methodism. The Bishop visited other Churches during the week, but it was not our pleasure to hear him save at Rayne Memorial. From New Orleans he will go to Yazoo City, Miss., thence to Hattiesburg. He will spend a Sunday at each place.

THE OPENING OF THE SCHOOLS.

All the schools, public and private, and Church schools of every denomination, have had the "best opening" in their history. The increase in the number of pupils in some of them has been beyond all precedent. This is significant. It shows that the people appreciate the advantages of education, and are determined to make use of their opportunities. It indicates also that they are in a good financial condition. In these things we should all rejoice.

But what a fearful responsibility is thrown upon those to whom has been committed the care of so many thousand pupils of immature minds, just at the point of life where they are susceptible of impressions, and of being shaped after the character of their teachers. These teachers, for the time being, take the place of father and mother, and their duty embraces far more than mere instruction in text books. The health of body and mind is to be looked after. Among Christians it goes without saying that the soul also must have attention.

Away from home, surrounded by fellow-pupils and brought under influences wholly new to them, such as are incident to school life, there is no telling the amount of damage that may be done by teachers who are careless in personal life or indifferent to the moral interests of their scholars. One such teacher may undo in a little while all the good work of godly parents. On the other hand a consecrated and vigilant teacher may so re-enforce pious home instruction and example as, at the close of the school term to return boys and girls to the family circle, not only educated in mind, but refined and strong in heart, ready to take places of honor and trust in society, and to meet intelligently and religiously the duties of life.

Having selected schools and entered sons and daughters, parents should insist on officers and teachers guarding well their moral interests. The State requires men and women of "good moral character" as teachers in our public schools. The Church should go a step further and require teachers to be men and women of sound religious experience and conduct. Then we would have no misgivings when we send our children off to college.

PERSONAL.

President C. C. Miller, of Centenary College, was visiting his many friends in the city the early part of the week. They are always glad to see him.

Rev. J. L. Sutton, chaplain of Louisiana State Penitentiary Farm, was in the city a day or two this week, and honored our office with a friendly visit.

Rev. Robert Selby, pastor of Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., was in the city last Monday and attended the laymen's meeting at Rayne Memorial in the evening.

Bishop Morrison spent Friday night in New Orleans en route to Texas, where he will be engaged for quite a while in holding conferences—the German Mission, the West Texas and the Texas.

Rev. E. C. McGilvray, now supplying Redd St. Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., was married at the residence of Mrs. Flynn, on Sept. 18, to Miss Laura Starr, of Illinois, Rev. Robt. Selby officiating. We congratulate our brother on his good fortune.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, writing from Vicksburg, says: "The wind and rain have damaged the crops to the amount of thousands of dollars in Warren County. The loss is 30 to 40 per cent. We got like news from several sections of our territory."

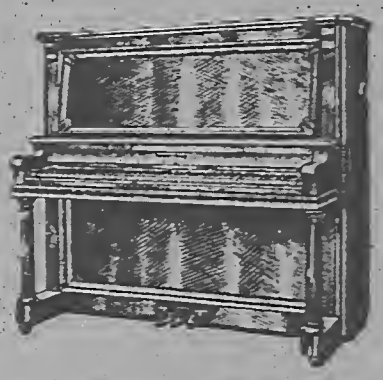
Rev. H. R. Singleton, just transferred from St. Louis to the Louisiana Conference, has been appointed by Bishop Ward to Rayne Memorial charge, made vacant by the transfer of Rev. Theo. Copeland. Brother Singleton is no stranger in the city. He will receive a hearty welcome.

Revs. J. M. Henry and F. N. Parker were in the city this week, having business, as we suppose, with the Centenary College Commission, which met in the ADVOCATE office on Tuesday morning last. The members of the Commission are Revs. W. E. Boggs, C. B. Carter, W. W. Drake and Messrs. H. N. Pharr and W. W. Carre, all of whom were present.

The Carrollton (Miss.) Conservative says: "Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, so well and so favorably known as the successful pastor of Carrollton Methodist Church for three years, is succeeding well at Okolona. Under his leadership the Okolona Church has begun the erection of a fine brick house of worship. Mr. Brogan is in the habit of succeeding."

Dr. John T. Sawyer pleased the people nightily at Opelousas during his recent visit to that place, the occasion being the Fourth Quarterly Conference for the Charge. His preaching was excellent and well received. Good work is being done by the pastor. He reported an addition of fifty-six members and one hundred and twenty conversions during the quarter.

We record nothing with more pleasure than the proposed return of Rev. I. D. Borders, of the North Mississippi Conference, to the pastorate. He realizes that the work of the Mississippi State Sunday School Association is a great one, of which he is General Secretary, but feels that duty calls him into the regular itinerant service. In that he proposes to spend the remainder of his days.



Our young friend, Tudor B. Carre, of the firm of W. W. Carre Company, this city, was married at Galatin, Tenn., on Sept. 26 to Miss Janie Harris. They started immediately to New York, where they took passage for Liverpool, landing there on Saturday, the 6th of October. They propose a tour of Europe, and a visit to Egypt and the Holy Land. They have the good wishes of their many friends.

Rev. W. D. Dominic, of Liberty Circuit, Miss. Conference, has been blessed with some gracious revivals. There have been forty or more conversions. He has also been pressing every claim of the Church and feels sure that his work will tell for good. He has not overlooked the ADVOCATE, and has good hope of sending us "a club of twenty or more."

A note from Rev. H. S. Johns, dated Ida, La., Oct. 5, says: "Our little six month's old baby, Robert Pharr, died here on the 4th inst. We buried him in the churchyard, behind the new church in Ida, to rest till the resurrection morning. Our people here were indeed kind to us in our misfortune. Pray for us." Brother Johns has our deepest sympathy in this hour of distress. The little one is safe!

Rev. W. W. Woollard gives us the following good report of his work at Wood Street, Water Valley: "My work here is in good condition and growing continually. This year I did not take a vacation. I think I shall never take another. I have received about 75 into the Church this year, mostly on profession of faith. We have the best and largest Sunday School I ever saw. Two of my young girls are in Scarritt Bible Training School. We will send up another good report this fall."

A personal note from Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Whitworth College, informs us that "the College has two hundred and thirty students, and no doubt will have two hundred and fifty the first term. The boarding department is full to overflow. The president and teachers have all they can possibly do. The College in all its history was never in better shape in every way. Dr. E. H. Munger preached the opening sermon, Sept. 30, to the delight of an immense audience."

Any lamp—no matter how good—is handicapped if it hasn't the proper chimney.

My business is manufacturing lamp-chimneys that fit perfectly—of clean, clear glass that won't break from heat.

My name—MACBETH—goes on every one.

My Index tells of lamps and their chimneys, fully and interestingly. Let me send it to you—it's free.

Address, MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

LOUISVILLE CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: By your consent, I will give the readers of the Advocate a few dots from the Louisville Charge, Durant District, North Mississippi Conference. I have married twelve couples and attended twenty funerals since Conference. Our Rock's Hill Church has been remodeled, and it is now a gem. The Loulsville Church has been overhauled inside and out, and looks like a new church. Our New Hope Church has been finished. We dedicated it the first Sunday in September. The parsonage has been painted outside and is being painted and papered inside. When the work is finished the preacher's home will be neat and comfortable.

Louisville is an old inland town, reputed for its noble citizenship. The new railroad known as the M., J. and K. C. passes here, and this is now a boom town, which has more than doubled its popnlation in two years, and is destined to be one of the leading towns of the State.

Our protracted meetings were glorious times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord — fifteen accessions on profession of faith. Nearly all the people in this territory belong to some church. Sometimes they would say: "Well, our meeting was a great success. We got all that dld not belong to the church before."

Our missionary assessments were paid ln the early part of the year. The other collectlons will be in by Conference.

I hope to see you at Cerinth in December. Greetings to all the brethren. Yours in the work,

J. H. SMITH.

VANCE CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have been thinking for some time that I would write to the Advocate.

Brother J. W. Rogers, our pastor, held our meeting at Vance the first week ln August. Brothers Honnoll, of Hillhouse, and Bearlntine dld all of the preaching. They both did some fine work, from which much good was accomplished, the people being revived. We had the old-time rellgion. It was the best meeting I ever attended in the Delta. Brother Rogers is doing good work here.

There were fathers and mothers and grandmothers converted at the altar, and who shouted and gave God the praise. There were seven added to the Church.

We thank God for such a meeting. Pray for us and our pastor. Your brother in Christ, S. C. GOAD.

COURTLAND CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I suppose that a report from the Courtland Circult will be of interest to some. I have had some real good meetings on the work during the summer, and the work is in very good condition. I was assisted by Brothers J. W. Ramsey, R. S. Lawson and H. T. Gaines. They all dld very fine work for me.

Brother Gaines, our presiding elder, is one of the best in the North Mississippi Conference. The people on the Courtland Circuit think he is the best. He has captured our people.

I am in hopes I can make a full report at Conference. Fraternally,

C. W. BALEY.

Forget All About Soap

AND remember Gold Dust. You do not need them both in your housework, any more than you need two noses.

Gold Dust is more than soap—better and more economical than any mere soap.

It is a good, honest, vegetable-oil soap in powdered form—scientifically combined with other purifying materials in exact proportions that insure the greatest cleansing power.

GOLD DUST

cleanses so easily—asks so little aid from you—that keeping your home dirtless and dainty and neat, in the good old New England way, becomes a pleasure instead of a task.

No soap, borax, soda, ammonia, naphtha, kerosene or other foreign ingredient needed with GOLD DUST.

For washing clothes and dishes, scrubbing floors, cleaning woodwork, oil cloth, silverware and tinware, polishing brasswork, cleaning bath room pipes, refrigerators, etc., softening hard water and making the finest soft soap.

THE VERRET CANAL & LAND CO., LTD.,

Has a capital stock of $100,000. The Company is composed exclusively of citizens of New Orleans, all of them property owners, taxpayers and voters.

We own 4000 acres of suburban property, lying on each side of Verret Canal, which runs from the river just east of the Algiers viaduct, due south to Bayou Barataria, six miles.

We have a good proposition, but employ no boomers and use no hot air. We have no capital stock for sale, yet you may become one of us. You can't get stock or bonds, but you can get a clear title to a tract of land of from 5 to 25 acres where we reserve alternate lots and guarantee drainage, so that our interests are identical with yours.

These tracts are in reach of the city's ferries, water works, gas and electric lights, and are exceptionally well adapted for market gardens, dairies and suburban homes. The demand for such properties will give a steady increase of values.

BON AMI, LA.

Brother Boswell: Only a few weeks now until the time appointed for the meeting of our Conference in Shreveport. Nineteen years since it convened there last. At that session I was received by transfer from the Little Rock Conference. How rapidly time passes! What have I done meantime? The Lord knows; I do not. I believe I have done what I could. All of that time I have been an invalid. My labors have not been productive of church and parsonage building, nor great financial reports, but there have been clear and satisfactory professions of faith everywhere that I have served. The minutes do not show this. I always succeed on that line.

This, with the exception of my Arkansas River charge, is the most difficult field that I have ever tried to work. An unsettled transient population, the people care less for each other and less for God, than in a town or a community where they own their homes. No church, no parsonage and preaching and Sunday school held in a company building, which is used at times for almost everything else. Yet the attendance at preaching, at Sunday school and at prayer meeting, all things considered, is very good.

Dr. H. G. Davis held his first service here on Saturday night, and he said publicly that he "would not have had a better attendance at Carondelet, New Orleans."

At prayer meetings there are several laymen who lead in turn with the pastor. At preaching much solemnity prevails, and frequently good altar exercises follow. As to ministerial support, his house is free of charge, his wood is free. The company pay $200 a year, and the people $300 a year—$500 in all—from which the presiding elder's pro rata is deducted. Not much of an appointment, you may say. No, not much; and yet I am sure that much good has been done at Bon Ami during the past four years.

The Lord bless you and all of the readers of the Advocate.

BLACK HAWK AND ACONA CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: On Wednesday evening, Aug. 22last past, a series of prayer meetings was begun initial of a protracted meeing at Black Hawk. From the following Sunday morning to the close of the meeting two services each day were conducted by Brother J. C. Park, P. C., of Greenwood Station. His preaching was plain, clear, direct, strong, spiritual and convincing. Our people were greatly pleased with the man and with his preaching. They came to hear him; he instructed and exhorted them. Many testimonies were borne to the good effects of these services on the hearts of Christians, and the further results were eleven additions to the church here, received on the following Sunday morning on profession of faith.

On Sept. 20 ultimo, a meeting of the same kind was begun at Acona. Two facts made the date of this meeting unpropitious; one was that many of the young people had just left home to enter the ensuing session of their respective schools; the other, that the busy season of cotton picking had just opened. Yet the congregations were good and the people greatly interested in the meeting. Brother R. A. Tucker, P. C., of Lexington Station, came to us on Monday, and conducted the service that evening and next morning. Tuesday evening the rain began and cut out the service. Next day was ugly, weather and few came. Brother Tucker held his last service on that Wednesday night. His preaching was well timed, clear, spiritual and effective. On Thursday the great storm was in full blast all day, and into the next day. Nothing could be done and the meeting was closed. In the face of all the difficulties, there were manifestations of good results, and the people felt sure that good weather would have secured to us a season of great grace and profit. The disaster which has fallen on the ungathered crops in the fields has thrown all financial calculations into confusion. The entire section swept by the recent storm, has suffered serious depletion from injury to the crops. Yet all will be well in the end to them that love God and to the country.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.

Matt. xxv. 14-30.

Golden Text—"A Faithful Man Shall Abound With Blessings."—Proverbs xxviii. 20.

These last days of the Master were full of instruction to those whom he had chosen to take up and carry on the great work of the kingdom. Only a day or two more and he would leave them. The parable of the talents was given them as a solemn and sacred injunction that they must be faithful. Beyond its words, it seems to us, lies the meaning that he was the man traveling in a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods. "Unto one he gave five talents, to another two and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey."

As the man in the parable assigned responsibility in accord with capability, we may be sure that the work of the early Church adjusted among the apostles as designed by our Lord.

In this parable, as in all of our Lord's teaching, there is an adaptation for all people of all times. In fact, when we heard God's word in search of "correction in righteousness," it seems it was written for one person in all the world, and that person is he who reads, so sharp in point is this sword of the Spirit. Then for our own moral profit, let us see what can be learned from the parable in the lesson. It is a question on responsibility pure and [illegible]. We are the work of God's hands, [illegible] purposes of his own, and he loves us because we are his creatures. He has placed everything in our power that tends to lift us up and make our lives acceptable to him. "All things work together for good to them that love God." The Father has drawn us to himself by his love, that is the first step; then, as helps to progress, we have the promise of pardon, the example of the life of Christ, the indwelling of the Holy Ghost as a monitor and comforter. These are the talents delivered unto us. Was there ever a more favorable proposition? A task is given with assurance of tremendous compensation; and while the work is being done, strength is provided for weakness, help for need, comfort for depression and full instruction for inexperience. The man in the parable went away to a far country and left his servants to work alone, but the man Christ Jesus says, "But if I depart, I will send him (the Holy Ghost) unto you," and "He will guide you into all truth."

The servant who received the five talents is the active consecrated member of the Church. He is ever ready when called on, either for his work or his money. When the preacher comes from Conference to take a new charge, the five talent man is the one he goes to for consultation. Yet he is always meek and lowly, for he has learned this from close study of the life of the Master. He does not seek a prominent place in the Church, he naturally falls into it. He is always at Sunday School and has a regular place at prayer meeting. He takes the Church paper and reads it with interest. Many are the acts of his charity not known to the world. His best type is found in the Church of the small town, where everybody knows each other and are too honest to conceal even their business transactions. He is also found in the church at the crossroads, and is known for his good works in a neighborhood of mills and mines. The two talent servant is not far behind the first; he also is rejoicing in the gift of grace and pardoned sins, and the spirit impels him through his sense of love and gratitude in the service to his Master. [illegible] may not be given [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A CHURCH DEDICATION.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Last Sunday was a red letter day at Antioch. After preaching in his own church at eleven o'clock, Brother Robt. H. Wynn came out from Ruston, a distance of ten miles, and dedicated our new church for us last Sunday at half-past three.

The large congregation assembled heard gladly the words that fell from his lips as he expounded St. John iv, 24, "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Those who know Brother Wynn know him to be both a good preacher and a good man. What a gracious privilege it was to hear him Sunday. I am very thankful that God has so blessed the labors of these people at Antioch as to make necessary that glad and joyous occasion.

Brother Porter was the only one of the former pastors who could be with us.

Mr. Editor, very likely you will be surprised to know how quick this house was built. It was only eleven days from the morning the carpenters commenced framing the material for the building until it was floored and shingled. Those heart-pine shingles were taken from the stump, split and drawn by hand. This much was done in eleven days because "the people had a mind to work."

There was a little delay in ceiling it because our order for the material was not filled promptly, but it was completed, save the altar, inside and out, and we commenced our protracted meeting Saturday evening before the third Sunday in August. Work was begun on the building Monday after the third Sunday in July.

We closed a six-days' meeting at Salem last Friday evening, which resulted in one accession, with others to follow. Brother J. M. Franklin was with us a few days, though too feeble to preach.

I received three members into full connection here at Simsboro last Sunday night.

We hope to send you a nice list of subscribers to the Advocate soon.

I forgot to say that our new church at Antioch is 30x40 feet in size. Thus far, it has cost a little over $600. There is not one dollar of indebtedness against it. We expect to pnt in the altar and paint it by Conference. To God be all the praise.

Yours very truly,

G. W. HIVELEY.

GRENADA CIRCUIT CHURCHES.

Dear Doctor Boswell: The churches of this charge have prospered to date of the present year. The special revival meetings were all well attended, "packed audiences" being present much of the time at the several places.

About fifty new members have been added to the Church, and good results otherwise have made the meetings a pronounced benediction to the congregation.

The church property is in fine condition, near $700 having been expended in painting, furnishing, etc., among the churches, and a new parsonage has been purchased in Grenada, conveniently located, at a cost of $1850.

The good work of my predecessors here and a worthy membership have made possible these further successes, which place this charge easily among the strong and well-fixed of the Conference.

We had three days of best assistance at Duck Hill from Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Winona Station, and three good sermons at Holcomb by Rev. Ben P. Jaco. Brother McKay, of Millsaps College, was at home at the Bethel church and helped admirably.

Also Rev. R. M. Evans and Rev. W. M. Young were exceedingly useful at Spring Hill and Sparta. Excellent service has been rendered by our membership in all the work of the year.

"Increase Your Yields" of Grain.

As 20 bnshels of wheat takes from the soil approximately 14 ponads of phosphoric acid, 35 pounds of nitrogen and 18 pounds of potash—the nccessity of using fertilizers is very plain. Green and stable manure can be sometimes profitably used on wheat, bnt then they are usually poorly balanced, and on some soils, those very rich in nitrogen, for cxample, would be positively injurious.

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers,

on the contrary, can be, and are, adapted in composition and quantity of ingredients to any soil or crop. Those most used, perhaps, contain 8 or 10 per cent. phosphoric acid, 2 or 3 per ccnt. nitrogen and 2 to 4 per ccnt. potash. Particularly on some clay soils, these furnish a well-balanced ration for the wheat. On some clay and most sandy lands, however, fully twice this percentage of potash should be used, while many soils need nitrogen. Bny only the high-grade VIRGINIA-CAROLINA FERTILIZERS, and you cannot make a mistake if your seed selection and cultivation are proper. They will "increase your yields per acre."

MARY S. DUNN was born in East Feliciana Parish, April the 11th, 1856, and was called to her eternal reward on September the 8th, 1906. Her parents were numbered among the most prominent people of the parish. Early in life she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was united in marriage Nov. 7, 1877, to G. J. Riley, the son of a distinguished Presbyterian minister of Blairstown, N. J. To this happy union God gave four sons and four daughters. Sister Riley was an ideal mother and wife. Her mission was pre-eminent in the home, where her beautiful, serene life made its beneficent and lasting imprint upon every member of the home circle. Those who knew her best say that she was a Christian than they have never known one more consecrated and patient. One living monument to the beauty and consistency of her Christian life in home is the noble type of accomplished, consecrated Christian young womanhood exemplified in all four of her daughters. The world was enriched by her life. Her loss will long be keenly felt. But may her mantle so fall upon each one of her loved ones and friends that they, emulating her Christianity, may be led to meet her in our Father's house of many mansions, where each shall have "a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." W. H. COLEMAN.

Mrs. SARAH E. BEARD, wife of E. J. Beard, was born in Roan County, Georgia, September the 8th, 1824, and died in Arizo, La., September 11, 1906, aged 82 years and 3 days. Sister Beard was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived a consistent Christian life until the day of her death. During the last three years of her life she was sorely afflicted and was unable to attend any of the services of the church, yet she bore her afflictions with much patience and Christian fortitude, believing with a true faith that "all things work together for good those that love God." I visited her often, and always found her ready to testify to the saving power of Jesus. She leaves four children—three sons, and one daughter—and many friends, who mourn her death. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors." J. O. BENNETT.

MARY A. SAUNDERS (nee Burk) was born in Pike County, Ga., June 26, 1847; was married to Benjamin F. Saunders about the close of the Civil War, and moved to Missouri, where they remained two years, after which they moved to Mississippi and settled down in Charleston community, where she lived a quiet, unassuming life until the day of her death, Aug. 26, 1906. Sister Saunders was converted early in life and united with the Methodist Church, in which relation she lived a consistent life. She was a good woman, an indulgent mother, a kind and consecrated neighbor, and a sunny and faithful Christian. She leaves three sons and two daughters to mourn their loss, which to her is an eternal gain.

Her earthly labors have closed and she has gone to receive her reward from God. The cause of her death was a broken leg, which the physicians had to amputate, but she bore all of her sufferings with the true Christian spirit which characterized her life. We laid her body away in Charleston Cemetery Aug. 27, 1906, surrounded by a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives, to await the resurrection. Her pastor,

J. H. BASS.

GREAT REVIVAL AT LAUREL.

Dear Doctor: We closed a great meeting with Brother J. W. Chambers at Laurel, Miss., on the 23d ult. He had built for the meeting a very large tabernacle, seating 2,000 people. Frequently the crowds overflowed the seating capacity. He planned wisely and well. Expecting large things from the Lord, he was not disappointed. The meeting ran about two weeks. Each service was a scene of great spiritual power. The last service on Sunday night, the 23d ult., was indeed a remarkable service. The tide ran high. The people never witnessed such displays of divine power in their lives before. The crowds were immense. The Lord seemed to be walking in the midst of his people, pouring out blessings. Two hundred souls were saved, many entering into perfect love. About eighty were added to the Church.

The interests of the Advocate were not overlooked. Many promised to become subscribers.

Brother Luther Robinson, of Somerset, Ky., is our leader of song. His singing is remarkable.

We go to Corpus Christi, Tex., on Oct. 7; then to Atlanta, Ga.

Doctor, as you know, I have been greatly afflicted this year, part of the time not expecting to live; but, praise the Lord, I am on the road to recovery. I am able to hold a few meetings; have held a few this summer and fall. The Lord has given me over 400 added to the Church so far this year. Pray for me.

Yours as ever, J. J. SMYLIE.

FROM SHUQUALAK.

Dear Brother: Please allow me a few words in your columns about our work here at Shuqualak. When I came to this work we had only one church in good repair. We now have five neat, comfortable churches. We finished our church at Shuqualak last year. It is worth about twenty-five hundred dollars. The salary was raised about one hundred dollars last year and all claims were paid in full for the first time in the history of the charge. We expect to raise everything in full this year. The salary was raised again this year $100, making two hundred dollars increase in salary in two years. There has been a net gain of about eighty members in the two years. In doing this work I have been assisted by Brothers W. L. Durin, J. E. Thomas, W. A. Clark, W. D. Babb, and V. C. Curtis. They all did good work. May God bless them all.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

The establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth was the uppermost thought in the mind and purpose of Jesus. It was for this he sent forth and equipped his disciples. He predicted hardships which they would encounter. Foundation laying is always difficult and outwardly most unsatisfactory; but it is at the same time the most important work connected with any building project, be it in brick and mortar or in spiritual things. Starting points determine the course of journeys.

In sending the disciples forth to establish the Kingdom of God on earth, one thing was emphasized which needs to-day to be pressed home. The keynote was spirituality. God is spirit, and the Kingdom of God is a spiritual kingdom. God rules in the hearts of men. "The Kingdom of God is within you." It "is not meat and drink," says Paul, "but righteousness and joy in the Holy Spirit." Spirituality, therefore, not temporality, soul rather than the body—that is what is considered the true nature of his kingdom. Internal rather than external. It is not a question of spirituality or temporality, but spirituality and temporality. But spirituality the main thing in temporality. A much needed lesson for to-day. Men are intoxicated to the point of madness for great temporal achievements, not as means to higher ends, but as ends in themselves. "Skyscrapers" in buildings, steel trusts, land trusts, corporations—these are at what the finger of pride is pointed. They are marvelous. They are great. They indicate wonderful untold possibilities. But in themselves what are they? One of the things that saddened the heart of Dr. Harper, the late president of Chicago University, during his last days of heroic suffering, was that some thought of him only as a great money getter to build up a great institution in the way of buildings and endowments, and did not appreciate that what he wanted to stand for was character building, equipment of spiritual forces. Size of material things goes for little when compared with the true grandeur of spiritualities. Bigness is not greatness or necessarily indicative of worth.

Naturalism is blinding men's eyes to faith and prayer. Our literature is intensely if not dangerously realistic. The real—no matter how full of horror and baseness—rather than noble and inspiring ideal is what is held up before our youth. It is a sad hour for anyone when he loses his high ideals that beckon him on to noble deed, and he contents himself with the temporal and the real. Ideals tempt the world on to its highest progress. Ideals are uplifting forces in human nature. Hamilton Mabie has a good word to say about this well worth quoting: "When realism vanishes from the home and parents cherish their children for their wages, and children care for their parents for the sake of protection, there is no longer a family: there is simply a collection of greedy, heartless human beings feeding upon each other. When the man cares for the woman because she makes him comfortable, and the woman lives with the man because he supplies her needs, marriage becomes degrading. When the citizen sees in his country only an organized opportunity to make and keep money, patriotism becomes the last refuge of a scoundrel; when the church is used for social or commercial advantage, hypocrisy puts on its vilest disguise: when a man counts his fellows for the profits he can make out of the acquaintance, the sweet relationship becomes mere bartering." Christ always dealt in ideals. He was not, however, a dreamy contemplatist. But he ever said: Look up, not down. Do not growl. Seek in the temple not for things that make it a den of thieves, but a place of prayer, a place where jaded spirits can be revived, where weary souls can find rest, where the despondent and the discouraged can brush away the scalding tear and say, "Lord, if I may I'll serve another day!"

This is what we need in the world so hardlingly real. It is a quickening of the pulse beat, not because of rush in business, but because of an inflow of love in the heart. A warming of the blood so as to start the circulation so that the world will feel a heart beat of love and spiritual power.

This is the kingdom Jesus taught us to pray for—a true spiritual, godly life, energizing and vitalizing the world's various departments and institutions so that they may accomplish God's purpose through redemption.—Rev. A. A. Pfanstiehl, in The Christian Intelligencer.

THE UNBROKEN CHAIN OF FAMILY WORSHIP.

To have a clear knowledge of any subject it is essential that we go back to primary principles. Hence in dealing with the thought of the family altar, we are led to inquire, When and where did it originate? It originated with the establishment of the family. This was the master stroke of God, for in it was centered the hope of the world for all time. Let us make man in our own image, after our own likeness. "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them and God blessed them."

God being the founder and governor of the family, has laid down rules for its regulation. These rules are just and right. All the blessings that come into family life flow from one fountain—the Father of Mercies.

The wise men of Persia, when they came to pay homage to the infant Jesus, opened their treasure boxes and laid rare gifts at his feet, gold, frankincense and myrrh. The Divine heart appeals to the family, it wishes to be known, loved, served and adored with an unswerving intensity. In the far off ages of sacred history, especially after the fall of man, we find Cain and Abel offering sacrifices, the one accepted and the other rejected.

Who does not love to linger amid the pages of grand old Noah's life! Somehow they glow with a holy enthusiasm. During the long, dreary days prior to the flood he was a preacher of righteousness. This being so, it is reasonable to conclude that he could not forget the family altar. In that degenerate age it was the golden chain that linked him to the certitudes of God. While he and his family remained shut up in the ark for nearly twelve months, the old patriarch must have had many moments of sweet heart communion with his God. As he stepped from the ark and reached the washed and renovated earth his first act was to establish the family altar. "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar." No wonder this act rose as sweet incense before God.

"And the Lord smelled a sweet savour; and the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake." The influence of that family altar will, like the alabaster box broken, live on forever.

Another link in the chain of family worship is found in the life of Abraham. Of this man of God it is said, He will command his children and his household after him. You don't imagine for a moment that this would have been said of him if he had turned down the family altar!

What does the dear old Bible have to say about Joshua? Let me give it to you in a nutshell. "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." This is straightforward and manly—no beating round the bush; no vain excuses as for a want of time. He was a military man of the first order. He undoubtedly had as much on his mind as most of the great men of our own day. Yet he allowed none of the cares of the world to separate him from communion with his God. He was quick-witted and conscientious enough to know that the moments he spent in communion with God yielded a rich dividend.

Another link in the chain is that of Job. He is one of the world's great beacon lights. When you look into the network of his life, when you consider his social position, his vast wealth, the joys and sorrows that were poured into his upturned censer, somehow you respect the man, because he was true to his religious convictions. He sent and sanctified his children, and rose up early in the morning and offered up burnt offerings according to the number of them all. It is a self-evident fact that had he simply sown to the flesh he would not have been called a perfect man—one that feared God and eschewed evil.

The next link in the chain has reference to one who commenced his career as a shepherd boy. He was a warrior, a statesman, a poet, a king. His was a busy life, yet amid all his multiplied cares, what does David say? "I will sing of mercy and judgment: unto thee, O Lord will I sing. I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within mine house with a perfect heart."

There are two other thoughts connected with the family altar. After David had brought the ark from the house of Obed Edom to the place prepared for it, we are told that that night he returned home and blessed his family.

In the sixty-first Psalm and second verse we see him flying to the precious Refuge of his soul. "From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee: when my heart is overwhelmed, lead me unto the Rock that is higher than I."

Let us turn for a moment to the New Testament.

We give you just one nuggent of gold. In Acts 10:1-2, we have in condensed form a brief outline of the life of Cornelius. There was a certain man in Cesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band. "A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people and prayed to God always."

Family worship then is based on God's relation to us. He is our Father. He has said, I have loved thee with an everlasting love. This love his children have never been able to fathom. If he is our Father, then it follows we are his children. And yet how meagre our love, what vain excuses we evolve for the neglect of family worship. Some people think it enough to pray once a week, Sabbath morning, while God is daily loading us with benefits.—J. B. Campbell, D. D. in The Christian Intelligencer.

Some men would be much more comfortable and contented with their lot in life if they would look around and see how many thousands are worse off than themselves, and lend a helping hand whenever possible.

Glances at the World.

A race riot was threatened a few days ago at Argenta, Ark., part of the city of Little Rock, and separated from the main body of the city by the Arkansas river. A negro had committed an outrage and the mob was stirred to fury and promptly lynched the criminal. They would also have done violence to other and innocent negroes but for the interferance of the authorities. They saw the situation and took hold of it with vigor. The negroes were greatly alarmed, many of them from Argenta taking refuge in the city. The mayor and police detailed officers to go among the negroes and assure them of protection. Guards were thrown around some of their homes, and one college building, where women and children had assembled, and all were quieted. Judge Lea promptly called the grand jury together and charged them to inquire into the lynching, telling them "that every member of the mob was a murderer, and should be hunted down." He said also that "the law, and not the mob, would control the court." Thus was narrowly averted a riot such as occurred at Atlanta to the shame of the whole South.

Many of the colored people throughout the country are banding themselves together in "Law and Order Leagues." Realizing the danger to their race on account of the repeated assaults on white women, which have occurred so frequently of late as to terrorize the women and arouse the vengeance of the men, they have formed their leagues none too soon. If they are sincere in the movement—and we dare say the majority of them are—and will take time and trouble to bring the guilty to justice, as well as to start a crusade against brutality will do much to allay fear and restore good will, which has always existed between the better classes of both races. But so long as outrages are perpetrated and no efforts made on their part to bring criminals to justice, just so long will the wrath of the white man abide and ravishers be put to death. Their fate is certain. The consequences of the continuance of assaults are horrible to contemplate. None of us can see to what extent vengeance will be carried. We need, at this moment, the advice and leadership of the truest and best men among us. Above all, we need help from above. For this we should devoutly pray.

The frequent miscarriage of justice is well adapted to breed both the mob spirit and the desire for personal revenge. A case in point: A couple of weeks ago a man was put on trial in one of our towns for assaulting a young girl. The jury was duly empanneled and charged as to the law and penalty in such cases. Every juryman knew before he was sworn what the penalty would be if the man was proven to be guilty. The evidence of guilt was clear and without doubt, and every juryman acknowledged it. But, for some reason—characterized by one of our leading dailies as "sentimental"—one juryman refused to assess the punishment which the law prescribes, and justice was defeated. That man had no business on the jury. If he had scruples of any kind, he should have frankly said so. Then he would have been excused, and justice would not have been defeated. When trials of guilty men thus terminate is it any wonder that an outraged public determine to take the law into their own hands? Is it any wonder that a heart-broken father, looking into the face of his worse heart-broken daughter, should without hesitancy shoot down the brute that outraged her, as did Farmer Scott last week when he chased and caught up with the black brute that had assaulted his beloved child? Is it at all strange?

France is now disturbed over two matters of vast importance—the separation of Church and State and the enforcement of the day of rest. On Church separation, the trouble at present grows mainly out of the attitude of the Pope of Rome, who has peremptorily ordered the Bishops not to obey the law. This order created division among them, some favoring submission and others opposed. The order goes into effect some time in the near future, and if there is complete obedience to the Pope great trouble will ensue. There is little doubt, in the case of conflict, which party will triumph. The people, by a large majority, are in favor of separation, and the law will be enforced. The rest-day law does not prescribe Sunday as the day. It is a matter of choice. If employers do not or cannot give Sunday, they will be compelled to give another day. It appears that Sunday is generally preferred by the laborers, and if universally adopted, it will deprive the people of some of their luxuries. For example, if the bakers choose Sunday, no work will be done on that day, and the people will be compelled to eat stale bread on Monday. The prospect of such a thing has thrown Paris into a fit, and a struggle is on over the matter. In some places journeyman bakers have gone on strike to enforce their demands. The prospect of stale bread on Monday is to the Paris palate anything but pleasing.

The following paragraph from Bryan's Commoner gives us some information in regard to the benefits of reduction in the passenger rates over railroads: "When the New Haven Railroad Company reduced its passenger rates to two cents a mile the officials estimated that there would be a loss of about $700,000 a year in gross receipts. Referring to this, the New York World says: 'The reduced rate, which affects nine-tenths of the system, has been in operation several months, and instead of the predicted reduction there is an increase in gross earnings. Lower fares have given the company enough new business to more than make good the lessened profit on each fare. When the Michigan Central charter was repealed and a two-cent rate was fixed by the legislature the company brought suit against the State of Michigan for $5,000,000. By the time the case got before the courts the receipts already showed a large increase in passenger earnings.' Instead of losing by the repeal of a charter which gave it the right to charge three cents a mile the Michigan Central had actually benefited. The recent reductions in fare on the Pennsylvania were made in a confident business belief that there would be more profit for the comuany, in carrying people for less money. Other companies are planning similar reductions. The next five years will witness unprecedented reductions in passenger fares. Railroad managers are coming to understand the simple scientific principle that there is more money in doing a large business with a small margin of profit on each transaction than in doing a small business with a large margin of profit on each transaction."

It has at last been definitely determined to dig the Panama canal by contract. This does not mean that the government will have no supervision over the work. It means only that contracts will be let to individuals who will be required to give bond. The government officers will see that the contracts are faithfully carried out. We shall soon see whether or not any progress will be made. It is time. As illustrative of what appears to slowness or inefficiency, there appearing in one of our daily papers a cartoon, "Uncle Sam," with his tall hat, spiketail coat and strapped down trousers, towering above President Roosevelt, and pointing his long, bony finger, said: "See here, young man, didn't I hear you say you were going to make the dirt fly?" "Yes." "Well, I haven't seen anything fly but the dust." About three years gone and nothing flying except the dust. But large bodies move slowly. We sometimes wonder if large canal salaries, out of all proportion to what men receive in other enterprises, except in life insurance offices, are not responsible for the slowness of the canal digging.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

FROM THE GENERAL OFFICE.

A District Board of Church Extension has been organized in the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, Rev. R. A. Meek, Presiding Elder.

The Montana Conference raised $173.70 on its assessment for Church Extension, which is an increase of 15 4-5 per cent, making a total of 115 4-5 per cent paid. Rev. D. B. Price, of Stevensville, Montana, treasurer of the Conference Board, writes: "You asked us to accept an assessment for 1906-07 of $154, and we voluntarily raised it to $200. Has any Conference done better than this? We would not boast, but if we can provoke the Church to greater work we shall be glad." The records of the office show that the Montana Conference, considering its size, has done more for Church Extension than any Conference in the connection. It was a real disappointment to the secretary not to be able to visit this brave band of brethren while in Annual Conference assembled.

The Kentucky Conference gave in cash and subscriptions $154.66 on the Oklahoma Special. The St. Louis Conference leads all with cash and subscriptions amounting to $610. The Louisville Conference is the latest to respond with $256 75. There is no riper field than that within the bounds of the Indian Mission Conference. Every dollar raised by the Church for Church Extension could be expended there to good advantage.

Rev. Ed. E. Joiner, formerly a member of the Louisville Conference, now pastor of our Church in Uruguayana, Brazil, writes under recent date as follows:

"My Dear Brother — Three years ago last May, while at home on furlough, I had the pleasure of making your acquaintance at the meeting of the Board of Missions in St. Louis, and now I come to ask your help in our work in Southern Brazil. I shall say a few words about our assets and needs in Uraguayana. We have a city of about 15,000 inhabitants, the terminal of two railroads, and the center of river navigation, situated on the banks of the Uruguy river, a stream as the Ohio at Louisville. At least half of the population are in sympathy with us, as opposed to the corrupt form of Catholicism they have known, and the other half respect us. We came here three years ago without knowing a soul, and without having a single member of our Church within two hundred miles of us. We now have, through God's grace, 76 communicants, and at least that number more who are preparing to unite with us. Our rented hall seats near two hundred, but our congregations at times cannot be accommodated. We have a full house almost every Sunday night and we shall within a short time have no room for our growing Sunday School. We are getting the best class of people here and have not a single member but what can read and write. We have lately bought a fine lot on one of the principal streets with 74 feet front by 215 in depth. We raised $300 here, and the Board of Missions gave us $1000. We are in great need of a Church at once. There is but one little Church in the city, a little Catholic chapel, the principal Catholic church having burned some time ago, and there is little prospect of its being rebuilt soon. Could you not find some one who would give five thousand ($5,000) dollars to put up our building? We can raise $2000 here, or can you not make some kind of a combination with our Board of Missions to loan them part of the money, making a gift of the other part? I am sure some one of the Lord's servants has the means we so much need to house our sheep in this wilderness. Bishop Hoss, who has lately been here, will tell you that the case is urgent, and that we are in sore need of shelter. Please find some one to give us the means we need at once so that we may build the coming summer (October to May)."

This appeal should find its way to the hearts and purses of our people. Who will be the first to respond? Send subscriptions and cash to the Board of Church Extension, 705 West Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

The Church Extension office is in mourning. Brother John Overbacker, who was elected a member of the Board by the General Conference of 1886, and who has been its faithful treasurer since Jan. 31, 1895, passed to his reward on the morning of Sept. 30. Only one other member of the Board, excepting a few of the Bishops, has served it so long and none have served it more faithfully. He rests from his labors.

It is well to be frank when occasion requires, but to take advantage of all occasions to parade the virtue will soon convince the public that the speaker, while not double-tongued, is lacking in the grace of civility. It is better to be a little reticent than to be uncivil.

A VISIT TO THE HOME OF JOHN WESLEY.

In the east-central district of London, not far from St. Giles' Church, where lies all that is mortal of him who wrote Paradise Lost; nearer still to the plot of burying round, where sleep hundreds of dissenters, there stand three monuments to the memory of John Wesley.

On a pleasant day in July, having crossed Bunhill Fields Cemetery and walked down City Road to Old Street, we found ourselves in front of a plain, unpretentious, but simple, dignified dwelling of two stories—the red brick house which the father of Methodism called home. To the summons of the loud brass knocker hastened an old gentleman of snowy hair, bent body and sweet manners. In contrast to the orthodox church of England, he bore the stamp of Methodist; no one could have mistaken him for a conformist. He led us up a straight flight of stairs, broken by one landing and a turn, guarded by a polished mahogany railing, to the chamber Wesley used as his study or sitting room. Its windows open directly above the street; it is square, spacious and contains many relics of the great man: the blue teapot he daily used, bearing its scriptural quotation; the library yet holding the books he touched with lingering fondness as he drew them from their shelves; the red plush arm chair, in which he sat when holding Conference; several photographs, and a number of manuscripts relating to Church government. These manuscripts all attest the scholarly character of Wesley. It is too often forgotten by at least the laity of Methodism that Wesley was a University man and brought off his M. A. degree from Lincoln College, Oxford, with credit to himself and the family who had sent him down from Epworth, Lincolnshire.

Passing from this room by a door leading to his bedroom, we came into an apartment much smaller. There is no bed at present, and I caught myself estimating the size of one that might economically be placed in the corner where he died. His desk, or "bureau," as the old gentleman named it, stands in its place; it is a combination of drawers, shelves and pigeon holes, bearing witness to the orderliness which characterized the man. A secret compartment was shown, into which money was placed by Wesley for the poor and taken out at regular intervals for distribution. Whether intended for the same purpose to-day, or whether it is used — after the story has been offered and accepted—for the purpose of collecting toll, we were unsure; in any case, we were invited to deposit, and in went our shilling. No need again to explain that was a Methodist custom. Beside the desk where many sermons were planned and written, on a small table rests a traveling desk, externally a cross in appearance between a work box and type-machine. The top rolls back, and there in compact array are the divisions for pens, paper, ink and other accessories of the traveling scribe. This desk is his own invention, and often was it used by the first itinerant preacher of our Church.

The very small closet back of his bedroom is marked by a slab suggesting: This little room is the place where Wesley retired for prayer. A queer sense of solemnity came over us, and I for one felt it was akin to desecration, there to stand exclaiming, "How interesting!" as a picture arose of Wesley alone with God in the quietude of that chamber.

Down and around the corner to the porter's lodge we hastened, and rang loudly. Nobody came and in despair we were about to leave, when a motherly woman appeared, whose peaceful face shone sympathetic as she explained she was at dinner and the hour was past for showing the chapel. But when she beheld that we turned away sorrowfully, she relaxed, broke her rules and disappeared for the key. Returning, she drew us in her wake to the chapel door. Very different from the stone cathedrals of England, centuries old, is this house. Built of wood, only the original walls remain; the rest of the structure has been restored. Some of the pews are those first used and the mahogany pulpit—one of the finest pieces of wood in England—ascended by a little winding stairs, is the one from which Wesley preached. Marble tablets let into the wall back of the pulpit commemorate the labors of himself and brother Charles; around the room are similar mementoes testifying to works of other early adherents to the faith. We passed out behind the elderly woman, who had explained rapidly, concisely as she passed from one to another object of interest, and turned at the door to take a last look. So natural in size and appearance is that chapel, one might easily be induced to believe he had been transported to an American city of two or three thousand inhabitants and had been led straight to the Methodist Church.

The monument is back of the chapel; a simple shaft marking the spot where sleeps in death he who slept in life not a stone's throw distant. We read the inscription relating that this monument was restored during the centenary of Methodism, and bearing witness to the virtues of him to whose life is only one of many memorials.

Back through the yard and the entrance gate we took our way across Bunhill fields, past Bunyan's tomb, and paused for a moment at the slab of Susannah Wesley, the long epitath recalling that she was the redoubtable mother of nineteen children, "of whom the most eminent were the Revs. John and Charles Wesley; the former of whom was under God, the founder of the Societies of the People called Methodists."

A LIVE CHURCH.

Dear Dr. Boswell: For the past two months and a half I have been supplying Brother T. B. Clifford's pulpit at Columbia, Miss., while he was away on his vacation. The time was pleasantly and we trust profitably, spent.

Our Church at Columbia, for a Church which is as live and vigorous as this one in a town no larger than Columbia, containing about 1500 inhabitants, deserves public mention, it seems to me. The services Sunday morning and night are always well attended, the crowds being smaller some Sundays than others as a result of unfavorable conditions of some kind, and at all times the attention and interest is encouraging, while in the regular congregation there are always several who are ready to lead in prayer. In addition to this help the choir is well attended, under the direction of a competent and spiritual leader and is composed mainly of trained singers, who consider it their religious duty to be present and take an active part.

The attendance upon the services of such a large number of young people and the active interest taken by many of the young men and ladies is very noticeable, and this leads us to note the auxiliaries of the church. These, too, are well organized and looked after. The Sunday School is the best I have ever seen for a church of that size, and this is due in a large measure to the untiring zeal of its Superintendent, W. E. Lampton. Brother Lampton has to assist him a fine corps of teachers who are themselves very much interested, and this, with an interesting teachers' meeting every Wednesday night, insures a good Sunday School. In this school, too, the application of the lessons to the scholars' own lives is stressed every Sunday both by teacher and superintendent. On Sunday afternoons the Junior and Senior Leagues meet regularly and follow out carefully-prepared programmes. The former is well attended, and is under Mrs. Clifford's direct supervision constantly; in this work, too, she has an able assistant from the Senior League. The Seniors haven't such a large attendance, but the membership is composed of an active, religious set of young people. Deserving special mention is a Mission Study Class, carried on by the League, now more than a year old. Could many of these be found? There are also several missionary societies among the ladies and young people; these, too, have their regular meetings and are accomplishing much.

Although it is a Church not only thoroughly organized but one which moves forward steadily with its various organizations, each does well its own part, making thus a successful whole. Nor does it impress you as being too mechanical, for its deep spirituality is very evident.

Brother Clifford certainly has a Church which shows something of the vitality of religion and which ought to be seen in all of our churches.

Brother Clifford is fortunate in having a wife who is herself a great force in Christian work.

CARROLL VARNER.

ST. MARK XI. 24.

Your correspondent, X., in a recent number of the ADVOCATE, suggested that some of your readers attempt to explain the above passage of Scripture. The right rendering of the passage is: "Therefore I say unto you, All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." There is no authority for the reading: "Believe that ye shall receive them," and hence Mr. Wesley's translation, based, as it was, on some unauthenticated copies of St. Mark, is incorrect.

Alford says of these copies: "The aorist not being understood, was altered to the present or future." The word translated here "that ye receive them," it is true, is in the aorist tense, and is usually rendered as in past time, but here it is the gnomic aorist, and is correctly rendered by the present. It expresses a general truth, something that is customary, that everybody knows, and that is undisputed. Numerous examples of such use of the aorist are formed in the Greek grammars. Commentators usually avoid this passage, perhaps from the idea that what appears on the surface cannot be true, for how can any one believe that he receives a thing until he does receive it?

But our Lord's injunction has this intent: All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that they are for you, included in God's promises, comprehended in the covenant of grace, and that it is your Father's good pleasure to give you these things. The best commentary on this saying is found in Romans viii. 26: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what to pray for as we ought: but the Spirit maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Here the acceptable petitions, which will be granted, are said to have been given to the suppliant by the Holy Spirit, and by him made so strong in the soul as to be unutterable groanings of desire. When you have reason to believe and do believe that your prayer came to your heart from the Spirit of God, you may be sure that an answer to your prayer will also come from God. This assurance may be so strong that it is as if the thing prayed for were already attained.

The incident of the healing of the ten lepers illustrates perfectly this matter. The Lord told them to go and show themselves unto the priest, and they believed that the cure had been wrought, though, to all appearance, it had not taken place yet. There was no sensible evidence of the cure, but they believed that it had taken place.

But the difficulty in Mark xi.-24, may be entirely removed by rendering thus: "Therefore I say unto you, All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye won or obtained them, and ye shall have them." The word translated "receive" may be just as correctly rendered "won" or "obtained." The one who is approached by the suppliant may give some indication that the request is granted, and so it may well be said that the burden of the petition has been already obtained. You receive as the heir to an estate receives. Not yet is he in actual possession, but the inheritance is secure.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

PROF. JAMES E. WALMSLEY.

New students are still coming in, and the old students have arranged their schedules of work, so that the campus is wearing a decidedly business look. The delightful change of weather is doing its part to cure the few cases of homesickness that yet remain.

All the students have been highly pleased at the selection of Mr. H. F. Edson as physical director. Mr. Edson is from Muscantine, Iowa, and is a graduate of Illinois Wesleyan College. He has been trained under Seargent, the famous athlete of Harvard, and had much experience in the athletic work of the Young Men's Christian Association. His work shows as that of a master in his line. The accommodations in the gymnasium are not sufficient for the large classes, and Mr. Edson is looking forward to a campaign for a new gymnasium building.

The gymnasium classes are not the only ones that are straitened for room. The increased attendance for this year is felt in all the classes. The professors of several departments have given notice that an increase in the seating capacity of their rooms is necessary. This particular kind of complaint is never an unwelcome one.

On last Friday night a special meeting was held by the Young Men's Christian Association in the interest of the Bible Study Classes. Addresses were made by Prof. Walmsley from the faculty, and Mr. R. M. Brown from the students, and over ninety men were enrolled for daily Bible study. About seventy-five new members were admitted into the Association. Indications point to the fact that this will be even a better year than last in the work of this noble band of young men.

Last year's records show that the young men of Millsaps College were among the leaders of the Southern colleges in Christian work. It was a great inspiration to the Association to have with them last week Mr. Weatherford, the accomplished college secretary of the Association.

An announcement was made recently that three prizes would be given this year for work done in the Millsaps Collegian, instead of one, as heretofore. With this additional incitement to good work Mr. W. A. Williams, the editor, hopes to have the best Collegian in the history of the College. One of these prizes is given by Dr. B. A. Wise, the new professor of English, one by the Collegian staff, and one by Mr. A. P. Hand, of Shubuta, a graduate of the class of 1905.

The faculty last week appointed Mr. A. L. Rogers, of New Albany, as editor-in-chief, and Mr. E. K. Carlton, of Sardis, as business manager of the Bobashela, the College annual.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

A joint conference of the W. H. M. S. and W. F. M. S. of Arcadia District, Louisiana Conference, was held at Gibsland, Oct. 3-5, presided over by Mrs. Dan Gillman, of Hodge, La., District Corresponding Secretary of the W. F. M. S. The meeting was harmonious throughout and deeply spiritual. We felt the strength born of union, and glancing down the vista of time with a prophetic eye, beheld the division line obliterated.

Brother Williams makes a characteristic Southern host. Rev. T. J. Upton's presence was a benediction, and his earnest prayers a blessing. Rev. D. C. Kelley preached the first night just the sermon that we would have ordered if we had been asked for the measurement, neither too high or too low, too long or too short, but just right.

The pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church was with us one afternoon, and Brother Carter, our presiding elder, was at the closing service, so if we needed the indorsement of the brethren we had what we needed for once. Rev. R. H. Wynn was with us to preach on the last night, but only a few of us believed strongly enough in "sprinkling" to venture out, and so we had prayer-meeting instead of a sermon.

Mrs. J. H. Revelle, district corresponding secretary of Shreveport District, and Mrs. C. B. Wagner, of Shreveport, were our "long distance" visitors. Haynesville was chosen for our next place of meeting. We feel sure that the auxiliaries which sent delegates will receive large dividends in new life, and advanced thought. We each felt that "t was good to be there."

WORK OF THE HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will your be so good as to permit me to express through the columns of your valued paper our appreciation of Brother John D. Ellis' notice of the reception at the district parsonage in Meridian.

Brother Ellis failed to mention the fact that the work done by the ladies of East End, West End, and Central Churches was accomplished through the Home Mission Societies of those churches.

What the Home Mission Society has done for our district parsonage here, it stands pledged to do for every parsonage and district parsonage in Southern Methodism. If our brethren could only realize that for the little amount of dues ($1.35) per member sent to help build parsonages in needy places, many times that amount is often used for our home work, we would have a Home Mission Society in every town and hamlet in our fair State.

Our brother signing himself "An Itinerant" in last week's ADVOCATE has no Home Mission Society in his town; if he had, he would not need to ask you to write an editorial in his behalf. Organize a Home Mission Society, Brother "Itinerant," and your home will be looked after with loving and careful attention.

The furnishing of our district parsonage was no small undertaking, but we rejoice that our workers were willing, and that our people have responded most generously. We hope Brother Sullivan will be returned to the district another year, and enjoy to the utmost the beautiful home which he has [illegible] building.

Brother Ellis says: "The presents to [illegible] may even a [illegible] furniture [illegible] were under the [illegible] that [illegible] would furnish the [illegible]."

MRS. C. A. R. McCOY,

ABERDEEN DISTRICT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: This has been a good year in the Aberdeen District. Quite a revival spirit has been manifested in most of the charges. Something over five hundred have been added to the church. A number of new churches have been built, and others are in course of erection, one being built at Okolona which, when finished, will cost more than four thousand dollars.

The wind and rain that we have had lasting about eleven days cast a gloom over the country, but now that the weather conditions are favorable, we feel that we will have full collections.

Brother R. V. Meek wrote a sensible article on "Correlation of our Schools." I join him in the wish to see the committees appointed from our two Mississippi Conferences to confer about this matter. We must, and will, and we shall proceed with all the intelligence possible, so that there be no waste.

THE GIDEONS.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THIS ORGANIZATION.

In Biscobel, Wisconsin, is a three-story building that for thirty years has housed the weary traveler. Standing through many changes, for better or for worse, it was at this time, September, 1898, the headquarters for commercial travelers in that city. On that special day the hotel was crowded, and there was not room for another, although room to spare in spacious and contained two beds. In the evening came a belated [illegible] sought a place for the night. The [illegible] of room to and said: [illegible] put a nice gentleman in that extra [illegible] willing." "Certainly," was the [illegible] and Sam Hill were [illegible] known. [illegible] to write, come up [illegible] finished his writing, [illegible] short conversation [illegible] his Bible and said: [illegible] a Christian, and always read and pray [illegible] and a Christian, and [illegible]," was the reply from Mr. Hill. [illegible] the remark was made: [illegible] it is that we have never known [illegible] as Christians before. Would it not [illegible] start a movement whereby we might know and recognize Christian travelers as [illegible] and not as strangers? for I believe [illegible] many.

With this they retired, and did not meet again until May, 1899, at Baker Dam. Mr. Hill then laid before Mr. Nicholson a plan for a Christian organization to be known as The Christian Commercial Travelers. "That's a grand idea," was Nick's comment. So that day [illegible] telephone people it was decided to send [illegible] and to call a meeting in Jamesville, Wisconsin, for July 1, to organize this movement. On that day, then, met together Messrs. [illegible] Hill and Knights, and constituted [illegible] a body—S. H. Hill, President; J. W. [illegible], Vice-president; Julin H. Nicholson, Secretary and Treasurer.

After conference and prayer, the name of Gideon was suggested, and the seventh chapter of Judges read; thus realizing the fitness the name Gideon was accepted and the Motto in verse 21: "And every man stood in his place round about the camp."

The objects of this Association are Christian fellowship and Recognition, regardless of denomination, and to scatter the seeds of Christ's kingdom as we travel, touching this man, in daily life for Jesus Christ.

From these consecrated knees has sprung a world-wide influence and power. To-day it covers thirty-five states and Canada, over one hundred camps, local and state. In January, 1900, there was an enrollment of over six thousand members, and the list is steadily growing larger.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

This week I had the privilege of entering my only boy as a freshman of this institution.

Mississippi Methodism has at Jackson a college which well merits the patronage and earnest support of our people. There are existent there several elements of college life which make impressions on even the casual visitor. Of some of these I will write briefly:

Dr. Murrah and his well-equipped corps of teachers present to the student superior advantages while acquiring an education. Every chair in the college is filled by a man who has had training in his special work. I had scarcely time to visit all the recitation rooms, but what I saw was enough to convince one of some experience in eduactional affairs of the thoroughness of the work being done. Profs. Ricketts and Huddleston, in the preparatory school, are pastmasters in the art of laying the foundations for higher learning, sound and solid. Huddleston, fellow-student in the days bevond the furrowed cheek and silver lock, made my heart glad and called back the vanished charm and spirit of days gone forever.

Prof. Sullivan, over in Science Hall, with an enthusiasm born of love for science, was talking of the wonderful doings of a molecule of oxygen when I entered his lecture room. I have heard some preachers not half so much in earnest as was Sullivan. The class before him was a study, for there one could see earnest endeavor and unflagging interest.

Dr. Murrah had before him the Senior class, I presume, and was telling of "introspection" and "consciousness" in a way that interested the auditor. I did not have an opportunity of visitng the other parts of this hive of industry, but saw from a passing glance that good work was being done.

The student body are responsive in a large measure to the earnest efforts made by the preceptors. Mutual reciprocity seems to be the main principle in the administration of the affairs and polity of the school. May great success and gracious results crown the efforts of these men, chosen of God and set apart by the Church for training our sons.

There is the charm of sincerity and simple, unadorned good fellowship that is irresistible. For all of which I am garteful.

STEPHEN J. DAVIES.

MRS. J. T. CUNNINGHAM.

The many friends and relatives of Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Cunningham will be deeply grieved to learn of the death of the latter at her home in Tupelo, Miss., on Sunday, Sept. 23. At the request of Brother Cunningham, as well as in response to my own feelings, I write these words of appreciation.

Mary Elizabeth Heard was born in Morgan county, Ga., June 2, 1838. She came of a family widely and favorably known in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

February 14, 1806, she was married to James T. Cunningham. She was the mother of eleven children, two of whom died in early infancy, and one in early manhood. Three daughters and five sons survive her. Two of her sons, Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of Texas, and Rev. J. E. Cunningham, of the North Mississippi Conference, are in the Methodist itinerancy.

In 1871, her husband poined the North Mississippi Conference, and during the succeeding thirty-five years she acted the trying part of a traveling preacher's wife. This part she had borne well. No church or parishioner ever had criticism for her.

Her patience, gentleness, courtesy and kindly interest in her fellowmen made her universally loved. Her fidelity to God and her church was an example to all.

Her cheerful temperament, social nature and genial kindness made her life a joy to those fortunate enough to know her. She appeared to the writer, self-forgetfulness was the guiding principle of her life. She literally lived for others.

While possessed of strong practical sense and sound judgment and always ready to form her own conclusions, yet when differences of opinion arose between herself and her husband, she was ever ready to render him due deference and to say to him, "you know but—." Through over forty-six years she was a true, loving, faithful wife. Her husband and children looked forward to the approaching fiftieth anniversary of her marriage and fondly hoped to see a joyful celebration of the day. What a sad and heartbreaking sorrow to the one left behind after this long and loving union!

Her life was unselfishly given to her home, her husband and children. She was a great success as a mother. The devotion of her children and their own creditable standing in the world bear witness to her efficiency in the sacred sphere of motherhood. Her children are devoted to her because she was devoted to them. They love her because she loved them. They are useful men and women, because of what she was.

She was constant and faithful in her religious life. In this respect, as in every other, she could be depended upon.

She made a home in the highest sense of that sacred word. Her husband and children loved that home, and all who found their way into that home found there a pure and holy atmosphere.

Her industry and kindness enabled her to always extend a cordial hospitality, which her friends genuinely enjoyed. People loved to be in her home.

In all the varied experience of her long domestic life she never complained.

Reared in care and affluence, the broken fortunes of war made no change in her cheerful and kindly nature, and the uneven fortunes of the itinerant preacher found her equal to every emergency. In her case truth is her highest eulogy, and the facts of her life the noblest lesson in the art of living. Her memory and influence can never cease, and all who ever knew her will call her blessed.

For her children her life is and will ever be an inspiration for good.

For the husband, so sadly bereaved, life can have but little comfort, except the assured hope of a reunion in the mansion above.

FURNISHING THE PARSONAGE.

The very first thing that every parsonage needs, and must have in order to be an "up-to-date" home, is a preacher that is heartily in sympathy with the Woman's Home Mission Society, as endorsed by the M. E. Church, South. Never allow yourself, my brother, to be deceived by any woman or man either, who tells you "something else is just as good." The "ladies' aid" was a good beginning, but, like the first sewing machine and printing press, served its day and generation. A dressmaker or printer in our day and time who insists on using a machine of the first patent would be considered a way "back number." A "Mite Society" might have been pretty good in past ages when our women were considering what might be accomplished. It is no longer might, but must with us; and our preachers must help, if they expect us to help them.

If the brother who in your last issue asks "What shall we do?" will organize a W. H. M. S. in his church he will soon have those worn articles he mentions replaced with new ones. Every woman thinks the branch of work she is engaged in is the most important. Why? Because she has studied that department most, or perhaps to the exclusion of all others. Plants always turn to the light. If the preacher holds the light they, the women, will turn to him. Try it, brother. You do not know whether your physician has prescribed correctly or not till you try his remedy. If you do not feel equal to the task of organizing, send for one of the "elect ladies." Men never see what is needed in the home. I might modify the statement by saying, rarely ever do. In my humble judgment what you need is a real live W. H. M. S., connectional and all. Don't be afraid of that dime that goes out of your sight. The Master who saw the "two mites" will take care of your dime, and return it "after many days."

A GIRL'S GRACEFUL WORDS.

"What graceful words that young lady uses!" I heard a gentleman say, speaking of a girl who had gone little to school, and had been allowed to read as she chose in a fine old library. She did use words of grace, for insensibly she had adopted as hers the words of some of the best authors, and without effort she even clothed her thoughts in fine raiment of well chosen speech. This is what I hope all girls who read these talks will do, whether they adopt every one of my suggestions or strike into lovely pathways of their own.

Now, what books shall a girl read that her conversation may be seasoned with real graceful words? Shakespeare, Walter Scott, Longfellow, Tennyson and Whittier may be read at little gatherings of girls, where several clever heads are grouped round a central book. Poetry should be read aloud, even if one reads in the solitude of her own room. It is a twin sister of melody, and must be heard for its music, its lilt and its soft flow and cadence. A girl should not say that she does not care for poetry. She would enjoy it if she came to it in the right way and by the right door of approach. The poets have their messages for us, and as the form of verse makes it needful for them to be concrete and to crystallize a good deal of thought into a little space, their messages are apt to stick to us. Memorize good poetry. When you have stored away in your brain stanzas and sonnets and odes that embody striking or tender or beautiful thoughts, you need envy no man or woman gems or gold or stock in bank; you possess a richer treasure for a rainy day. A girl's favorite books will always tell her tastes and her degree of refinement.—Exchange.

CAT CLIMBS A CHURCH STEEPLE.

One beautiful summer evening the avenues were thronged with people on their way to Church. At a corner several persons were standing, gazing apparently into the air. Others soon joined them, until so large a crowd was gathered that the way was blocked. Soon the windows along the streets were thronged, and a number of persons were seen on the tops of the houses in the neighborhood.

And what do you think they saw? Clinging for dear life to a jutting ornament, near the top of the tall church steeple that pointed straight up into the soft evening air, was a black cat. "How did it get there?" was the first question every one asked, and "How will it get down?" was the next.

The poor thing was looking down, and at frequent intervals it uttered a pitiful cry, as if calling to the crowd below to help. Once it slipped and fell a short distance down the sloping side of the steeple, and an exclamation of pity came from the crowd, now intensely interested in its fate. Luckily the cat's paw caught on another projection, and for the moment it was safe.

Some looker-on suggested that it be shot in order to save it from the more dreadful death that seemed to await it; but no one was willing to fire the shot. Ere long a little window some distance above where the cat was clinging was seen to open. Two boys had determined to save it; they had mounted the stairs to where the bell hung, and then by a ladder reached the window. The boys were seen to be lowering a basket down the side of the steeple.

Pussy watched it intently as it slowly came nearer. When it was within reach, she carefully put out one paw and took hold of the side of the basket, then as carefully repeated the action with the other paw; then with a violent effort flung herself over the other side into the bottom of the basket. She was safely drawn to the window, amid loud cheers from the spectators below.—St. Nicholas.

HOW AILSIE SAVED THE BIBLE.

It was in the year 1555, when Queen Mary sat upon the English throne with her Spanish husband at her side, and filled the land with trouble because of her terrible persecution of the Protestants.

In the west of England was a little village called Harrant. At one end of the hamlet, standing apart from the few dwellings scattered along either side of its single street, was the blacksmith's shop, with its small house just back of it, and a tiny garden in the rear.

The smith's wife was dead, but his bonny, blue-eyed little daughter kept his house. When lonely, she pushed aside a small panel in the end of the shop, and crept in and stayed with him, unless the sound of voices or hoofbeats on the road drove her away, for she was a shy child.

One day when she had stolen in, her father was standing behind the door.

He had a spike in his big hand, with which he touched the side of the great black beam in the corner. Suddenly a block of wood fell forward, disclosing a small opening. Into this he thrust a dark-leather-bound book, and quickly, but carefully, fitted the chip into its place, so that no sign of the hidden space remained.

Seeing his daughter, he started and said sternly, "Ailsie, my child! How dare you spy upon your father?"

"Oh, father, I am not spying!" and the blue eyes filled with tears.

"Of course you were not. I was wrong to say so, child!" said the smith remorsefully. "But you saw what I did?"

"You put the holy book into the beam, father. It is a fine hiding place; for surely neither priest nor soldier can find it there."

"I would you knew not its place of concealment, for the knowledge may get you into danger. You must never betray it. When Parson Stowe went away to foreign lands, he gave me the Sacred Word, and he told me to keep it as my life. For, by the Queen's orders, all the Bibles have been gathered up and burned, and we are forbidden to read from its holy pages. This is the only one between here and the sea; and it is more precious than the crown-jewels. You are fifteen, Ailsie, and old enough to understand, so I have told you all."

"You need not fear, father," said Ailsie, firmly; "I will not tell." But the rosy cheeks grew pale as she remembered all that her promise might mean.

Now, there was a certain priest that came sometimes to Harrant to preach to the villagers. But being all Protestants, they could neither listen to him nor pay his tithes. He was very angry at their behavior, and spied about till he became sure that there was a Bible among them; and he knew that it was in the blacksmith's possession, because he was the only man in the village who could read.

After trying in vain to see the Holy Book, he went to the nearest town and lodged information against the village with the officers there; and one day when the smith chanced to be away from home an officer and six men marched into Harrant.

They called upon the cottagers to surrender their Bible; but one and all declared they had none. Then the soldiers searched every dwelling, and threatened to burn them, every one, unless the book was found.

But this did not suit the priest after all. He would get fewer tithes than ever if the village was destroyed. So he told the soldiers to let the rest of the villagers alone, for the Bible was in the blacksmith's possession. It was getting late, and the soldiers were in a great hurry to be gone. So they resolved to burn the two little buildings, and thus destroy the book quickly and surely.

It was growing dark when Ailsie saw a bright light against the sky, and sprang to her feet. Her father's house was on fire. The sight made the child a heroine. Forgetting all about her danger, she only remembered she must save the Bible at all cost.

Swift as an arrow she flew homeward.

The soldiers were intent upon piling straw round the burning building, and did not see the little figure that darted in between the house and the shop, whose thatched roofs were well ablaze. Breathless and determined, she pushed aside the panel and stumbled through the blinding smoke.

No one had noticed her in the darkness, and she crept safely into the little garden and sank down, choked and suffering, among the vines.

But she felt that the Bible was in danger even now. She slipped off her woolen petticoat and wrapped it around the volume; then, digging with her little burned hands in the soft soil, she buried it under an immense cabbage. Then she crawled along upon her hands and knees to the spring at the foot of the garden, where her father found her an hour later half unconscious with pain and fright. He never ceased while he lived to praise his little daughter for her brave deed of that day.

The Bible always remained in the family, and years and years after, Ailsie's great-granddaughter carried it with her when she followed her Puritan husband across the seas to the lonely coast of New England.—The Witness.

The call for the suppression of the "low dives" run by negroes and bad white men, is getting general. The call is based on the supposition that they are the breeding places for all manner of crime. May be so, but gilded saloons contribute their share to the work of the dives. No doubt many of the frequenters of the dives got their start in the upper class saloons. If so, it will only partially cure the evil to kill the dives. Begin at the top, and never stop until the whole of the vile traffic in drink is wiped off the face of the earth.

The fall fights opened with the opening of the schools—and they are "all the rage" just now. Of course, we allude to the foot-ball matches. The opening season was not at all favorable, raining as it was every day. The players did not mind it. They rolled and tumbled about in the mud in some places. It was understood at the close of the last season that the game would be "reformed," and as a matter of fact rules were adopted, which, it was said, would do away with the objectionable features, but the press agents, who give out all the news, tell us that "it is the same old foot-ball." It is hard to reform some things.

* * *

The editor of the Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati), who seemed at first to favor the proposition for a new statement of faith, has come out squarely against it. He not only declares that it is unnecessary, but so far as his Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, is concerned, it is impossible, the first restrictive rule positively forbidding it. If Dr. Gilbert voices the sentiment of his Church the project is dead, for the resolution of our General Conference contemplates pushing the matter to a conclusion only after a sufficient number of Methodist bodies have joined in the projection "to give it an ecumenical character." It would certainly have no "ecumenical character" if our brethren of the North are barred by a constitutional limitation.

UNEMPLOYED PREACHERS.

Unemployed preachers count way up into the thousands in the United States. In one State of average size in which one of our sister denominations is strong in numbers and resources there are nine hundred and nine unemployed preachers. This state of things exists among Christians who are supposed to have a settled pastorate. This is an impossible thing in the Methodist itinerancy, for among us every preacher is employed, and every church has a preacher. We seriously doubt whether in our local ministry, numbering nearly five thousand preachers, nine hundred and nine are without employment, such as is contemplated in our Discipline. If there is one who is idle it may be safely asserted that either he or his pastor is to blame. The economy of our Church is such as to provide work for every man who holds a preacher's license.

If, in our connection, we have a church without a pastor it is because the preacher has died or has been removed to another charge. In that case the vacancy is of short duration, for the Bishop who has supervision quickly and easily supplies the lack. Now and then, by reason of death or removals, a church is abandoned entirely, or temporarily left off the plan of the circuit. In that case, though, the church building may remain; there is no pastoral charge for there are no members. In a ministry of more than forty-five years we have never known as many as half a dozen such Churches. In old and worn-out sections of the country we dare say there are not a few.

But why, in a denomination richer in numbers and worldly goods, should there be in one State nearly one thousand idle preachers? We shall not undertake to answer the question, criticize the government of the Church or denomination in which such a thing is possible. The bare mention of the number of idle preachers of "one faith and order," which may be multiplied several times, is sufficient to make our own preachers and people satisfied with our efficient system, notwithstanding the few inconveniences incident to our itinerancy. Our itinerants are never without a charge, making our Church the only Protestant communion with a settled pastorate.

DON'T TRY TO WRITE POETRY.

About the hardest task one ever undertook was to try to write poetry. We know, for we have tried. We advise all our young readers not to undertake it. Older people do not need any advice. Too many of them have come to grief as did a fair young aspirant some years ago. Having, after much effort, succeeded in getting off a few stanzas, "Farewell" being the subject of inspiration, she posted it to her favorite editor, and eagerly watched for its appearance in cold type. In due time it appeared, not her poetry, but a paragraph which read something like this: "We have received a few verses from a fair correspondent, bearing the significant title, 'Farewell.' It is well the writer lade the verses farewell, when she sent them to this office, for she will never see them again." If the editor was a competent judge, we suspect he saw in the verses only rhyming stanzas instead of poetry. The mass of so-called poetry is of that character, and tells so many writers why their verses never find way into print.

Do not try to write poetry. We do not mean to say: Do not write poetry. If your have in you that which makes a poet, when what the poets call the "afflatus" comes upon you, write poetry by all means. But do not sit down and try. Water is never pumped out of a dry hole. If the water is there the pumping is easy. The trouble is to get would-be poets to see the difference between words and ideas, or between genuine poetry and jingling verses. Long ago this writer ceased trying to write poetry. His last effort, made many years ago, resulted in these words:

If I couldn't write better poetry
Than some of whom I wot,
I wouldn't try.
And as I can't, I don't.

A WORD TO FAITHFUL STEWARDS.

Please, brethren, suffer a word of exhortation. Very soon the Church, in our patronizing territory, will enter upon a new Conference year. You will be called together to fix the salary of your respective pastorss. The matter should be taken under advisement at once, and each of you go to the meeting resolved to devise liberal things. "The liberal soul deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand."

As a rule we have always found our stewards generous hearted, and willing to do their best for the man that serves them. They fix salaries at living figures. Sometimes they are really liberal, considering the fact that the great majority of charges are supplied with comfortable parsonages. But a time has come to make an advance in preachers' pay. This advance is demanded by the great increase in the cost of living. It requires no array of figures to prove this to the preachers. They know from experience. The increase in the cost of living during the past few years has been great—in some things as high as thirty per cent. All classes of men realize the burden, none more so than preachers. No class of men, professional or others, can do their best work when stinted in the matter of living. Preachers do not crave luxury. They simply want comfort. No good man could wish his preacher less.

Our people have been abundantly blessed, and are abundantly able to give their preachers a handsome living. The Church expects the stewards to look after the matter, and to be faithful in executing their well devised plans. Bishop McTyeire said, "an unfaithful steward can starve a preacher in the midst of plenty and a willing people." A faithful one can do wonders.

DEATH OF SAM P. JONES.

Rev. Sam. P. Jones, the great evangelist, died of sudden heart failure in a Pullman sleeper as he was going to his home at Cartersville, Ga., from Oklahoma City, where he had been conducting a most successful revival. He passed away early in the morning of October 15, near Perry, Ark. This news will be a great shock to thousands of people who held him in high esteem as a Christian and fearless preacher of righteousness. For nearly thirty years he has been widely known as an evanglist of the boldest and most aggressive type, and his converts throughout the country are legion. Thousands will mourn his departure. To-day, Oct. 10, he would have been fifty-nine years of age. He was on his way home to a family re-union in celebration of the anniversary. Instead of feasting, there will be mourning in the household. His wife and two daughters were with him when the end came. Faithful and loving friends were chosen to conduct the funeral: Rev. George R. Stewart, Rev. James A. Bowen and Rev. Walter Holcomb. With him the conflict is ended.

PERSONALS.

Rev. J. E. Wray, of First Church, this city, is on the sick list, but not seriously ill. So we have been informed.

Mr. John A. Bollman, a "bass singer" of popularity, will have headquarters in New Orleans for a short time, and hopes to be of "service to the Christian workers of the city."

Rev. H. R. Singleton has arrived and entered upon his work at Rayne Memorial Church. He is located at 1502 Webster street, where his friends are requested to address him.

Rev. J. H. Holder, of Main Street, Water Valley, is getting ready, as hundreds of others are, for Conference. He feels sure that, "notwithstanding the many drawbacks, Main Street will come out with flying colors."

Rev. R. R. Jones, well-known in Louisiana, has been called to mourn the death of his excellent wife, who was great help to him in his work. His own health has been greatly impaired. He will leave shortly for the West in hope of restoration.

Rev. B. F. Jones, presiding elder of the Natchez District, says that "the storm of September 27 did an immense amount of damage to the crops, the effect of which the Church will feel, unless the price of cotton advances sufficient to cover the loss.

Rev. E. R. Hill, D. D., has been transferred from the Tennessee to the Louisiana Conference. Dr. Hill spent four years in New Orleans as pastor of one of the churches, and is remembered by many of the older members as one of the best and most successful pastors that ever labored among them.

Dr. Beverly Carradine, of St. Louis, well-known in New Orleans, will be present at the holiness convention, which will assemble in St. Charles M. E. Church, this city, Oct. 18. The meeting will continue ten days. The preaching will be done by Dr. Carradine and Dr. Fowler, of Boston.

Dr. C. W. Carter will dedicate the new church at Bernice, La., the first Sunday in November. Rev. W. E. Woodward, the pastor, cordially invites "all former pastors to be with him in the service, and also as many as can come from Weldon, Hico and ——— to help in singing." He expects a happy time.

President W. L. Thames, of South Mississippi College, has again been compelled to postpone opening day, owing to damage to one of the buildings by the great storm of September 27. The opening is now fixed for November 6. It will certainly take place that day unless a providential hindrance intervenes.

The good people of Springfield, La., have been blessed during the past week with a gracious revival under the ministry of Rev. F. N. Sweeney. Many souls were converted, and a large number—thirty-six—were added to the Church. Brother Sweeney was assisted by Rev. J. L. Morrell, of Georgia.

Rev. R. O. Weir has been engaged during the past week with Rev. A. F. Townsley in revival work at Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge. Great interest has been manifested, and the meeting grows in power and extent. Brother Weir is doing some faithful work. Dr. Parker preached once to the great interest and profit of the congregation.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson is one of our most active and useful preachers—always planning for good, and executing his plans. He brings things to pass. His present charge, Plaquemine, is in fine condition, so we judge from what he told us when in our office last week. He is closing his second year there, and is ready to go back, or, to go to some other place.

Rev. W. W. Holmes reports an interesting Rally Day service at Carrollton Ave. Church on Sunday morning last. Part of the services consisted in the examination of a large number of children in the infant class, and the promotion to a higher grade. The examination was before the whole congregation. Each child examined received a certificate. The exercises were greatly enjoyed.

For years past a friend of ours in Arkansas, Rev. F. S. H. Johnston, of Conway, has been kind enough to send us a box of apples. The annual supply reached us last week. Apples grow to perfection in northwest Arkansas, and the perfection of the apple family is the "Arkansas Shannon." Those who have never eaten one do not know what a good apple is. There is nothing like it. Brother Johnston has our hearty thanks.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell communicates under date of October 10 the sad news of the death of Sister Jones, wife of Rev. K. A. Jones, of the North Mississippi Conference. She passed away on the morning of the 10th. Brother Mitchell says: "She had been ill for some months, but the end was hardly expected so soon. She faithfully did her part as the wife of an itinerant preacher for forty-nine years. Brother Jones will have the sympathy and prayers of his many brethren in his sore bereavement.

Rev. S. A. Brown sends the following cheering notes from Byhalia, Miss.: "We worshipped in our new church here yesterday, Sunday, Oct. 7. We have a house that is a credit to the town, and means much for Methodism. When thoroughly furnished it will have cost about $7500. It is built of red brick, metal roof, steel ceiling, has lecture room and pastor's study. We will put in a furnace and electric lights soon. Bishop Hendrix will preach for us Friday, Nov. 23." We trust our Byhalia friends in their great joy will not forget the "old man" who used to do the best for them in the old church.

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas Brother R. W. Tucker, presiding elder, and Brother P. H. Fontaine, pastor, have faithfully and well discharged their duties in the positions they occupy now; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Quarterly Conference of the Wilson Circuit, That, appreciating the excellent worth of these brethren, and feeling that we express the sentiments of the whole circuit, we earnestly request Bishop Ward that he return to us Brother Tucker as presiding elder, and Brother Fontaine, as pastor, for the coming Conference year.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication. Fraternally.

V. E. MILLER,
Secretary.

IN HONOR OF GOV. SHANDS.

Resolved by the members of the Quarterly Conference of Oxford Station, That we have received with deep regret the resignation from this body of Gov. G. D. Shands, who has so long and so efficiently served our people as Chairman of the Board of Stewards, and as our representative in District, Annual and General Conferences.

Nothing we can state will add to the reputation of Gov. Shands, who is numbered among the most distinguished laymen of the Conference, the State and the Church. By his generosity, his unfailing activity, his wise counsel and leadership he has made us debtor to an extent we can never repay. We cannot wish for him in his new field of labor larger success, more numerous friends, or greater respect than he has in our own town and church.

Unanimously approved, Oct. 3, 1906.

THE COURSES AND HELPS FOR MISSION STUDY FOR 1906-07.

"The Christian Conquest of India," by Bishop James M. Thoburn, is the foreign course offered for 1906-07. The author, recognized as a missionary leader in the Occident, has put into this book the richness of forty-six years' experience in India. It is a most inspiring and illuminating volume. The book contains two hundred and forty-eight pages of text, twenty-six appendix pages, seventeen full-page half-tone illustrations, two colored maps and charts, questions for class study, references for investigation and complete index.

OPTIONAL FOREIGN MISSION COURSES.

"The Price of Africa," a biographical study of four of the most noted missionaries to Africa, by Mr. S. Earl Taylor.

"Princely Men in the Heavenly Kingdom," a biographical study of five leading missionaries to China, by Harlan P. Beach.

"Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom," a study of Japan, by Rev. John H. De Forest, D. D.

"Daybreak in the Dark Continent," a study of Africa, by Wilson S. Naylor.

"Allens or Americans?" is the latest Forward Mission Study Text Book that has come from the press, and is really the first text book published that discusses a problem at our doors—the obligation of American Christianity to the incoming millions.

Dr. Grose has succeeded in grouping fresh facts, statistics, and the new features of the "new immigration" in a masterly manner. The book commands interest from the first page and increases chapter by chapter, culminating in a strong appeal for immediate evangelistic effort.

The volume contains three hundred and one pages of text, nineteen appendix pages, sixteen full-page half-tones, thirteen sketch maps and charts, questions for study and references for investigations, and complete index.

The above courses have been especially prepared for young people, and are believed to be the most desirable for their use. They are all sold at 50 cents in cloth and 35 cents in paper.

Carefully selected Reference Libraries are obtainable on India, Africa, Japan and Home Missions. These are made up of the best reference books available. These libraries are sold in uniform cloth binding for $5.00 each, carriage extra, which is half the publishers' price.

"The Mission Study Class Manual," revised edition, just out, tells how to organize and conduct a class. Price 10 cents. "Suggestions for the Class Session" are prepared with all courses. Price 10 cents. The last two, together with the Handbook of the Department of Missionary Work (price 5 cents) will be sent free to leaders of classes upon report of class organization. Other helps, such as maps, charts, etc., are available.

All correspondence concerning mission study, orders for libraries and requests for all helps, should be directed to the Young People's Department of the Board of Missions, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. CASEYVILLE (MISS.) CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: A few lines from Caseyville Charge may not be out of place. I have had four protracted meetings on my charge this summer. The following brethren assisted me: Revs. M. B. Sharbrough, D. E. Kelly, Geo. H. Thompson and M. J. Miller. Their preaching was strong, logical, convincing and effective. We had a number of conversions and twenty-five accessions. My people will not soon forget these faithful men of God.

My people have undertaken to raise $100 extra of my salary to buy me a horse. They have succeeded in raising $84.25 of that amount, and the end is not yet. We are expecting to make a report of everything in full at the Annual Conference. My people are still hopeful, notwithstanding the recent storm. We are leaning on the promise of God: "Trust in the Lord, and do good, and thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."

Rev. J. B. Bowan is quite sick and very feeble. He is in the local ranks now. Brother B. Godbold is also feeble at present. They are pushing their four score.

I solicit the prayers of the Advocate readers. Your brother in love.

P. H. HOWSE.

BUCKATUNNA, MISS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: Perhaps a report from Buckatunna Charge will be of interest, especially to the preachers who have served the churches that compose the work.

When we came to this place, the people seemed very proud of the parsonage which they had bought and furnished while Brother Huff was on the work, but they all said that they were ashamed to carry us around to the church. I was glad to find that this was so, because it gave me hope of seeing a new church soon. My hopes were not in vain.

On the first Sunday in July I preached to a congregation of about two hundred in a beautiful little church, 35x50. It is finished and painted inside and out, with incline floor and circular pews. I preached on consecration, and we had a glorious service. That night we held children's service; the church was beautifully decorated, the lights were bright, and the children dressed in white—all together it was a scene beautiful to behold.

Brother Sullivan, our Presiding Elder, assisted me in two meetings, at State Line and Buckatunna. Much good was done at both places. Brother Sullivan is a strong preacher, and wins for Christ wherever he goes. There were five conversions, and three joined the church at Buckatunna.

Brother F. M. Williams, who wears the honor of being called the old-young preacher, of Waynesboro, assisted me at Fedora. His very presence among us was a blessing; his preaching was strong and forcible, and was enjoyed by all who heard him. As a result of this meeting, nine were converted, or reclaimed, and eight united with the church.

Mount Pleasant was the next place. I had all the preaching to do. God blessed us very much; three souls were saved and four joined the church.

Our next meeting was at Big Rock. Brother O. S. Lewis, of Braxton, Miss., did the preaching. The meeting was a grand and glorious success. God was with us in every service. Thirteen souls were saved, and two united with the church.

Our meeting at Winchester was a success. I was expecting Brother L. F. Alford to assist me, but owing to sickness in his family he could not come; therefore, I had the preaching to do. There were fifteen souls saved, but no accessions to the church.

Let us all join Brother Downer in praying that at our next Conference we may have the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, not only that our souls may be made happy, but that we may be better prepared for work and service in the Master's cause.

God bless you Doctor, and all who are connected with the Advocate, together with all of its readers.

Your brother, B. W. LEWIS.

A GREAT MEETING AT MONTROSE, MISS.

Our meeting here began on the third Sunday in September and continued twelve days. It had continued three days before Brother Geo. H. Galloway, of Gulfport, whom we had secured to assist us, came. But those three days were characterized by much prayer on the part of the Church; and so, when Brother Galloway came everything was ready for a great revival. And from the time he came till he left he did all the preaching. In every service he held there was someone converted, and many times during a service there were ten and fifteen converted, and at times the Holy Ghost was on the people with such power till the unsaved came to the altar seeking God after the benediction had been pronounced; and in this way they found Christ to the salvation of their souls. There were over seventy-five conversions, and the Christian people were greatly revived. There were many boys and girls who have come from different parts of the country to attend the Montrose High School, converted during the meeting. This great revival has started forces to work in our Conference Training School here that will last through this entire session. Brother Galloway was present nearly every morning at the chapel exercises of the school, and made earnest appeals to the student body, and these appeals were responded to readily by the students.

This great revival and this work wrought here in this student body are the results of Brother Galloway's earnest presentation of the Word of God, and his tactful way of conducting a revival. He preached with great power, and he did not play on the emotional nature of the people, but appealed to their highest motives and to their reasoning powers. And every truly penitent soul that came to the altar seeking God, after having heard his instructions that the soul that seeks Christ by faith and believes the record which he has given of himself, must be saved. Our brother's tactful way of conducting a revival is the most successful way I have ever seen.

Yours faithfully, R. P. FIKES, P. C.
